In American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 14 FLRA 6, 8-9 (1984) (Union Proposal 2), enforced sub nom. FLRA v. Office of Personnel Management, 778 F.2d 844 (D.C. Cir. 1985), the Authority held that a proposal which would require management to provide "adequate security to all employees" was not inconsistent with management's right under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute to determine the internal security practices of the agency. In that case, the Authority found that the proposal concerned the health and safety of its employees rather than the internal security of the agency. Additionally, the Authority found that, even if the proposal in Office of Personnel Management did concern "internal security," the proposal would vest discretion in the agency to determine what level of security was "adequate" and, therefore, still would not be inconsistent with the agency's right to determine its internal security practices.

Similarly, Union Proposal 8 would require the Agency to take "necessary" steps to protect employees and property within the prescribed areas. Like the proposal in Office of Personnel Management, the Union's proposal leaves to the Agency's sole discretion decisions as to what level of security satisfies the contractual standard "necessary." Consequently, the Authority finds that Union Proposal 8 does not violate the Agency's right under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute to determine its internal security practices and is within the duty to bargain.

VIII. Union Proposals 9 and 10

Proposal 9

Any addition of Indian materials into class instruction in position descriptions should be made on an individual basis, recognizing that such emphasis may be more appropriate in some areas than in others.

Proposal 10

Any use of the addition of Indian materials in position descriptions in the performance appraisal process shall be in accordance with the Master Labor-Management Agreement.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that these proposals interfere with the educational policy of the college. It also asserts that the proposals exceed the scope of bargaining. Finally, it states that the Master Agreement prohibits negotiations at the local level on position descriptions.

The Union argues that these proposals will draw attention to the performance appraisal process. Also, it suggests that the degree of incorporation of Indian-related materials should be determined on a case-by-case basis.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The clear language of the proposals considered together with the submissions of the parties demonstrates that the Union's proposals constitute an attempt to negotiate concerning the substance of the Agency's decision to require the use of Indian-related materials in its courses.[3] The determination of what duties and responsibilities are assigned to a particular position falls within management's right to assign work under section 7106(a) of the Statute. See National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, above, 3 FLRA at 775. Whether and to what extent Indian-related materials should be incorporated into the subject matter of each course and, consequently, into the corresponding position description constitutes the assignment of particular duties and responsibilities over which the Agency has discretion.

[3] See Attachment 5 to Union's Petition for Review at 2. See also Agency's Statement of Position at 15-16.

To the extent that the Union's proposals deal with the content of position descriptions, the Authority has consistently held that a position description does not constitute an assignment of duties but merely reflects the duties which have been assigned to a position or an employee. However, a position description must also accurately reflect the duties and responsibilities assigned to the position. See, e.g., National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1497 and Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado, 9 FLRA 151, 152 (1982)(Union Proposal 1) and cases cited therein.

Since Union Proposals 9 and 10 would effectively require the Agency to negotiate concerning the assignment of duties in violation of management's right under section 7106(a) of the Statute to assign work, the Union's proposals are outside the duty to bargain.

IX. Union Proposal 11

> Any changes in the tours of duties of unit employees shall be made through the use of volunteers. If there are not enough volunteers to fill the needed changes, then assignment shall be made based on reverse seniority with temporaries being assigned before permanent furloughs.

A. Position of the Parties

The Agency maintains that this proposal would interfere with its rights under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work and to determine the numbers, types, and grades of employees assigned to a tour of duty. The Agency asserts that the proposal affects the utilization of dormitory counselors.

The Union maintains that Article 26 of the Master Agreement renders these matters negotiable:

> Section 1 Hours. The basic workweek shall consist of forty (40) hours spread over five consecutive eight (8) hour days. The workweek will be the period for which an employee is paid a straight-time pay rate. Management recognizes the right of the Local to impact bargain changes in the hours of work, shifts, or tours of duty.

The Union cites National Treasury Employees Union v. Department of Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 6 FLRA 508 (1981) to support its point.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3669, AFL-CIO and Veterans Administration Medical Center, Minneapolis, Minnesota, 2 FLRA 640 (1980), the Authority found that a proposal which would have guaranteed nurses every other weekend off would have interfered with the agency's ability to schedule nurses on the basis of their professional skills and specializations as needed "to ensure quality medical care and treatment of patients" and, consequently, would have forced the agency "to hire additional nurses with the necessary qualifications in order to [both] accomplish its mission and comply with such an agreement." Id. at 644. Accordingly, the Authority held that, while the language of the proposal did not explicitly relate to the numbers, types, and grades of employees, the proposal nevertheless was directly and integrally related to, so as to be determinative of, the numbers, types or grades of employees assigned to a work project or tour of duty. It was, therefore, negotiable at the election of the agency under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute.

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 11 would require it to hire additional dormitory counselors. The Agency asserts that it currently has five counselors, each assigned to one particular dormitory so that the counselor can develop a rapport with the students in that dormitory. It further contends that the ability to develop a rapport with the students is essential to the provision of effective counseling. Although the regular tour of duty for these counselors is 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., the Agency determined that the students would be better served by having counseling available for extended hours, and instituted an evening and weekend tour of duty to be staffed by each of the five counselors on a rotating basis. The rotation system would require each counselor to be available for students not assigned to that counselor's respective dormitory only every fifth evening or weekend, but would allow the counselors to spend the majority of their time with the students in their respective dormitories.

The Union does not dispute the Agency's claim that Union Proposal 11 would require the Agency to place the full-time counselor with the least seniority on the evening tour of duty without consideration of the particular qualifications required for that shift, and would leave the students in that counselor's dormitory without a regular full-time counselor. The Agency contends that it would be required to hire additional counselors in order to provide effective counseling for the students of that dormitory and place a qualified counselor on the evening tour of duty. Consequently, the Agency contends that the proposal is integrally related to the numbers of employees assigned to a tour of duty so as to be determinative of the numbers of employees assigned to that tour. The Authority agrees. In light of the above, and for the reasons set forth in Veterans Administration Medical Center, Minneapolis, the Authority concludes that Union Proposal 11 is integrally related to, and consequently determinative of, the numbers, types or grades of employees assigned to a tour of duty and, accordingly, negotiable at the election of the Agency under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. Since the Agency has elected not to bargain, the Authority finds that Union Proposal 11 is outside the duty to bargain.

In view of the Authority's conclusion that this proposal is outside the duty to bargain under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, we find it unnecessary to address the Agency's additional contention that the proposal also interferes with its right to assign work.

X. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review as to Union Proposals 1-5 and 9-11 is dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposals 6-8.[4]

Mr. Harold D. Kessler
Managing Director for Case
  Processing
Federal Labor Relations Authority
Room 236
500 C Street, S.W.
Washington, D.C. 20424

Dear Mr. Kessler:

Thank you for your letter of December 6, in which you requested an interpretation of standards issued by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) as they relate to Federal agency safety and health programs.

Your first question asks whether employee participation in medical examinations or surveillance, required under OSHA regulations is, on the part of the employees, mandatory or voluntary.

As a matter of policy, and under the present OSHA regulations, it has been OSHA's position that such participation by employees is voluntary. However, participation in medical examinations and surveillance may be a qualifying factor for employment or continued employment. OSHA also encourages such participation in the interest of enhancing workplace health and safety.

Your second question relates to whether the agency required to make such medical examinations or surveillance must be given access to the findings and results.

To the extent that the information gathered affects the provisions for workplace health and safety and compliance with OSHA standards, then it is necessary for those agency personnel who are responsible for making decisions related to these matters to have access to findings and results.

It is our understanding that the Office of Personnel Management has drafted proposed instructions to all agencies related to access to medical examinations and surveillance. You may be interested in contacting them for information on these instructions.

I hope this satisfactorily addresses your concerns of the OSHA program as it relates to Federal employees. If we may be of further assistance, please have a member of your staff contact Mr. John E. Plummer, Director of OSHA's Office of Federal Agency Programs, at 523-9329.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM E. BROCK

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal regarding the filling of vacancies with employees facing displacement from their position in a RIF is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with a Government-wide rule or regulation. The Authority found that while the proposal provides for the observance of "bumping" rights, no allowance is made for observance of "retreating" rights. Thus, the proposal would require the agency to consider taking an action that ignores the requirements of OPM's RIF regulations, 5 CFR Part 351. Contrary to the agency's argument, the proposal would not interfere with its right to determine the number of employees assigned to an organizational unit. Thus, the proposal would apply only after the agency has decided to fill vacancies with employees facing displacement from their position in a RIF. Further, the Authority concluded that the proposal could not be found outside the duty to bargain simply because of its potential effect on nonunit employees. Thus, the proposal does not rise to the level of directly determining conditions of employment of nonunit employees; rather, its application to the filling of bargaining unit positions at most would potentially have an indirect effect on nonunit employees by limiting their access to vacant unit positions by requiring that preferential consideration be given to a unit employee. Finally, because the proposal is nonnegotiable based on its inconsistency with a Government-wide rule or regulation, § 7106(b)(3) does not apply, and, therefore, the union's argument that the proposal is an appropriate arrangement under that section was rejected by the Authority. (proposal 1)

A proposal concerning the use of furloughs as an alternative to separation in a RIF is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with 5 CFR Part 351, a Government-wide rule or regulation. The effect of the proposal would be to require an exception to the prohibition under 5 CFR 351.604(b) that an agency may not separate an employee while an employee with lower retention standing in the same competitive level is on furlough. Finally, because the proposal is nonnegotiable based on its inconsistency with a Government-wide rule or regulation, § 7106(b)(3) does not apply, and, therefore, the union's argument that the proposal is an appropriate arrangement under that section was rejected by the Authority. (proposal 2)

The Authority denied the agency's request that the union's appeal be dismissed as procedurally defective. First, the agency argued that before filing its petition, the union neither requested nor received from the agency a written statement that its proposals were nonnegotiable. The record shows that the union enclosed with its petition a written statement from the agency's negotiations spokesperson that the proposals were "illegal and therefore nonnegotiable." In view of this written statement of nonnegotiability, the Authority found that the union's petition was properly filed as it has held that unions have the option to appeal an unrequested allegation of nonnegotiability. Finally, the agency argued that the union did not support its petition with adequate explanation of the meaning and intent of the proposals. The Authority rejected the agency's argument finding that: (1) the union did file a statement as to the meaning of its proposals; (2) the agency was not prevented from developing a position on the negotiability of the proposals; and (3) the Authority was able to reach a decision based on the record in the case.

DIGEST NOTES

On a stipulation of facts by the parties, the Authority concluded that the agency failed to comply with § 7121 in violation of of § 7116(a)(1) and (8) when it informed a bargaining unit employee that she had the option of appealing a letter of reprimand through either the agency grievance procedure or the negotiated grievance procedure.

The Authority noted the plain language of § 7121(a)(1) provides that "the . . . [negotiated] . . . procedures shall be the exclusive procedures for resolving grievances which fall within its coverage." Further, the Authority has held that proposals which would have provided optional appeal rights beyond the § 7121 (d) and (e) exceptions to the exclusivity of the negotiated grievance procedure are inconsistent with § 7121(a)(1).

The Authority granted that: (1) the agency rightly pointed out that its bargaining unit employees, as non-appropriated fund employees, are not under the statutory appeal procedures noted in § 7121(d) and (e); and (2) § 7121(e)(1) provides that "[s]imilar matters which arise under other personnel systems applicable to employees covered by this chapter may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures, if any, applicable to those matters, or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both . . . ." Nevertheless, the Authority found the matter giving rise to the grievance in this case to be a reprimand, which is not a "similar matter" to those matters specifically covered under § 7121 (d) and (e).

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would not only give employees the right to raise before an arbitrator the issue of whether management applied performance standards fairly and reasonably and in a manner otherwise consistent with the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 4302, but also by its clear language would require an arbitrator to determine whether performance standards themselves are fair and reasonable by reviewing the criteria used by management in such standards to evaluate job performance. Thus, the proposal violates management's rights to assign work and direct employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B), because the proposal's clear language is not limited to subjecting the application of performance standards to grievance and arbitral review, but would also provide a basis for arbitral review of the content of performance standards and would permit arbitrators to substitute their judgments as to the proper content of performance standards for that of the agency.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is negotiable that would require the agency to note a change in assigned work in a letter to be included in the employee's Official Personnel Folder (OPF). The Authority found that such a letter would constitute, in effect, an addendum in order to more accurately describe the duties actually assigned. Because the validity of the classification of an employee's position and, derivatively, the employee's rate of pay are dependent on the accuracy of the employee's position description, proposals concerning the accuracy of such position descriptions have long been held to be within the duty to bargain.

The agency did not establish that inclusion in an employee's OPF of an addendum to the employee's position description is inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. FPM Supplement 293-31, promulgated to implement the laws and executive orders relevant to the content of an OPF, indicates that agencies have discretion to determine what records of a temporary nature may be filed in an OPF. In fact, subchapter S5-6(2) of the Supplement expressly notes that a position description is an example of a temporary record. Similarly, the agency did not establish that the proposal is inconsistent with any portion of the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, or with the implementing regulations in 5 CFR Part 293. In fact, 5 CFR § 293.311 expressly provides that a position description is among the information maintained by an agency in an OPF that may be disclosed to the public pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. Finally, while the agency also relied on 5 CFR Part 294, this part concerns the procedures for obtaining information under the FOIA and not what information will be maintained.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would provide an option for non-appropriated fund (NAF) employees to contest performance based separations for cause through either the Agency's internal regulatory appeals procedure or through the negotiated grievance procedure that covers such matters. The proposal is inconsistent with § 7121(a)(1), which states that with § 7121(d) and (e) as exceptions, the negotiated procedure is the exclusive procedure for resolving grievances that fall within its coverage. The Authority found that § 7121(d) was not a relevant exception. As to § 7121(e), it was found the agency's internal administrative appeals system is not an "appellate procedure" within the meaning of § 7121(e)(1) as there was nothing in the record to indicate that it was established by or pursuant to law. (proposal 1)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would limit agency selections for performance improving training assignments to qualified volunteers. The proposal is not a negotiable "procedure" under § 7106(b)(2) because as an express limitation on the agency's discretion to pick a particular employee to whom specified training will be assigned -- such as to a non-volunteer -- the proposal violates the agency's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). Also, the proposal is not a negotiable "appropriate arrangement" under § 7106(b)(2). The proposal would benefit a qualified volunteer for a performance improving training assignment by ameliorating the adverse effect of not being selected because the training was assigned to a non-volunteer instead. However, the proposal violates the agency's right to assign work under § 7106 (a)(2)(B) because the proposed amelioration would totally preclude the agency from assigning performance improving training to a non-volunteer notwithstanding any determination on the part of the agency that such non-volunteer would benefit from the training. FPM Letter 351-20 at 19

A proposal defining competitive area for RIF is outside the duty to bargain. The proposal is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation: OPM's regulations regarding RIFs at 5 CFR 351.402(b), 51 Fed. Reg. 318 at 321 (1986). The regulation requires competitive areas to be defined solely in terms of an agency's organizational unit(s) and geographical location, and to include all employees within the area so defined. The proposal does not meet this standard because it would in part define a competitive area in terms of positions in particular bargaining units. However, the agency's argument that the proposal conflicts with an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists was summarily rejected by the Authority for the reasons set forth in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of Health and Human Services, Region IV, 11 FLRA 254 (1983) (Union Proposal 1). (proposal 1)

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

A proposal is negotiable that would expand employee displacement rights beyond those required by OPM regulations. The proposal would allow employees to displace others in the same subgroup in different competitive levels. Although the agency's regulations do not allow the type of reassignment proposed, the Authority found that the agency failed to meet its burden of demonstrating a compelling need for its regulation. Thus, there was no demonstration that the regulation is essential, as opposed to helpful or desirable, to the accomplishment of the agency's mission and functions. Further, there was no allegation that the proposal would directly determine conditions of employment for employees outside of the bargaining unit, and for that reason was nonnegotiable. The Authority noted that the responsibility for creating a record on which it could resolve negotiability issues rested with the parties and that where applicability of a proposal to nonunit employees was not raised by the parties, the Authority would not consider it. (proposal 2)

A proposal that would allow assignments across competitive areas for RIF is nonnegotiable as it is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation: OPM's regulations regarding RIFs at 5 CFR 351.402 and 351.701(a). Thus, employees in a competitive area are permitted to compete only with each other, not with employees in another competitive area. In view of the Authority's conclusion and because the agency's compelling need argument was based in part on OPM regulations that subsequently have been revised, it was unnecessary to address the argument. DIGEST NOTES

On a stipulation of facts by the parties, the Authority concluded that the agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) by insisting on bargaining to impasse concerning a proposal which was outside the union's duty to bargain. The agency's proposal conflicted with the union's rights under § 7118 because, in requiring that the filing of charges would be delayed pending time spent on informal settlement efforts, the union would be prevented from filing as soon as an event had occurred or had been discovered. The Authority noted that in certain situations, without fault by either party, delaying the filing of a charge could mean that the charge would be filed more than six months after the occurrence, with the consequence that the General Counsel would not be able to act on the charge. Thus, the procedures proposed by the agency are permissive subjects of bargaining for the union because the procedures would require the union to waive certain of its statutory rights.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator denied the grievance finding that management had proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the removal of the grievant -- a teacher in the DOD Overseas Dependents Schools System, and who apparently is not a preference eligible -- was for just cause.

The Authority determined that it was without jurisdiction to review the union's exceptions. The Authority has jurisdiction under § 7122(a) to review exceptions to arbitrator's awards, excluding awards relating to a matter described in § 7121(f). The Authority concluded that the arbitrator's award in this case relates to a matter described in § 7121(f): (1) the subject of the award, a removal, is a matter similar to those covered under 5 U.S.C. § 7512; and (2) because the sources of the "employment and safety practices" applicable to overseas teachers are the Defense Department Overseas Teachers Pay and Personnel Practices Act (the Act), Pub. DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It concerns the negotiability of two Union proposals which concern treatment of union representatives in a reduction-in-force.

II. Procedural Issues

The Agency has requested that the Union's petition be dismissed because of what it contends are "fatal procedural defects." In support of its motion it makes two arguments:

(1) Prior to filing the petition, the Union neither requested nor received from the Agency a written statement that its proposals were nonnegotiable.

(2) The Union did not support its petition with an adequate explanation of the meaning and intent of the proposals.

The Union disputes these contentions. As to the first, it received a written statement from the Agency negotiations spokesperson that its proposals were "illegal and therefore nonnegotiable." A copy of this statement accompanied the Union's petition. In view of this written statement of nonnegotiability, the Authority finds that the Union's petition is properly filed. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Local 121 and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Washington, D.C., 10 FLRA 198 (1982). As to the Agency's second contention, the Union notes that it did file a statement as to the meaning of its proposals as required by the Authority's Rules. We find that the Agency was not prevented from developing a position on the negotiability of the proposals. Moreover, we are able to reach a decision based on the record in this case. The Agency's request that the petition be dismissed based on procedural matters is denied.

III. Union Proposal 1

> Existing Vacancies - If such a position exists and a union representative is qualified, the Employer will consider the union representative in advance of other qualified employees for this vacant position. If there is no union representative affected by the RIF, the affected employee will be considered for that vacant position.

A. Positions of the Parties

As explained by the Union, the proposal applies once the Agency has decided to reassign employees facing separation in a reduction-in-force (RIF) to vacant positions. Once this decision has been made by the Agency, the proposal requires that first consideration for the reassignment go to any qualified union representatives who are affected by the RIF. The Union states, however, that the proposal does not require that preferential consideration be given to a union representative over another qualified employee who is in a tenure group or subgroup which is superior to that of the union representatives.[1] It is also not intended to apply to positions outside the bargaining unit. The Union argues that this proposal amounts to an appropriate arrangement for employees who are adversely affected by the exercise of the Agency's right to conduct a RIF.

[1] Employees are placed in "tenure groups" according to the nature of their appointment; i.e., career, career-conditional, indefinite, etc. "Subgroup" placement is based on veterans status. 5 CFR 351.501.

The Agency argues that the proposal violates a Government-wide rule or regulation--the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) regulations governing RIFs. In support of this, it contends that the proposal would require it to place union representatives in vacant positions despite the fact that under those regulations another employee might have a right to the position. It also asserts that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it would affect the rights of nonunit employees. Finally, the Agency alleges that the proposal would require it to fill vacancies and consequently interferes with its management right to determine the number of employees assigned to an organizational unit.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Conflict with Government-wide Rules or Regulations

OPM has issued new regulations concerning RIFs at 5 CFR Part 351, effective February 3, 1986. 51 Fed. Reg. 318-326 (1986). The Authority has found that the OPM regulations concerning RIFs are Government-wide rules or regulations within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, 18 FLRA No. 18 (1985). Although that case applied to previous OPM regulations, the revised RIF regulations similarly apply generally to civilian employees of the Federal government and are likewise Government-wide rules or regulations.

Under these regulations an agency may in its discretion choose to fill a vacancy with an employee facing separation, furlough or reassignment in a RIF. When it elects to do so it must follow the provisions of the RIF regulations. 5 CFR 351.201(b). See also Klegman v. Department of Health and Human Services, 16 M.S.P.R. 454 (1983). This includes recognizing whatever claim employees may have to the particular position as a consequence of their "bumping" or "retreating" rights.[2] Baker v. Department of Commerce,

[2] "Bumping" is the right of one employee to displace another employee in a position on the basis of subgroup superiority. "Retreating" is the right to displace another employee in a position which is one from which or through which the employee was promoted and which is occupied by an employee with lower "retention standing." 5 CFR 351.701. "Retention standing" is an employee's ranking relative to other employees based on group, subgroup, length of service and performance ratings. 5 CFR Part 351, Subpart E.

Economic Development Administration, 19 M.S.P.R. 432 (1984). Based on the Union's explanation, Proposal 1 is intended to provide for observance of "bumping" rights. However, no allowance is made for observance of "retreating" rights which may give employees other than the union representatives claim to the position involved. Thus, the proposal requires the Agency to consider taking an action which ignores some of the requirements of 5 CFR Part 351. Because of this circumstance, the Authority finds that Union Proposal 1 conflicts with a Government-wide rule or regulation, and is not within the obligation to bargain.

2. Interference with Management Right

Based on the language of the proposal and the Union's explanation, the Authority interprets the proposal as applying only after the Agency has decided to fill vacancies with employees facing displacement from their position in a RIF. Given this, the Agency's argument that the proposal would require it to fill vacancies is not supported. Therefore its conclusion, based on this argument, that the proposal interferes with its right to determine the number of employees assigned to an organizational unit must be rejected.

3. Effect on Nonunit Employees

Based on the Union's explanation, which is compatible with the proposal itself, the Authority interprets the proposal as applying only to vacant positions within the bargaining unit. The proposal as it applies to the filling of bargaining unit positions, if otherwise negotiable, would potentially have an effect on nonunit employees. However, that effect would only be an indirect one, potentially limiting nonunit employees' access to vacant unit positions by requiring that preferential consideration be given to a unit employee. The proposal does not rise to the level of directly determining conditions of employment of nonunit employees. See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, 22 FLRA No. 49 (1986) in which the Authority discussed the circumstances under which the effect of a proposal on nonunit employees would remove a proposal from the duty to bargain. Consequently, the Authority does not find that this proposal would be nonnegotiable simply because of its potential effect on nonunit employees. Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard, 14 FLRA 38, 39 (1984).

4. Appropriate Arrangement

Because the proposal is nonnegotiable based on its inconsistency with a Government-wide rule or regulation, section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute does not apply. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1546 and Department of the Army, Sharpe Army Depot, Lathrop, California, 19 FLRA 1016, 1019 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO v. FLRA, No. 85-1689 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 21, 1985). Therefore, the Union's argument that Union Proposal 1 is negotiable because it is an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) is rejected.

IV. Union Proposal 2

> Retention/Reassignment - When there is a shortage of funds for a Division or Branch and a union representative occupies a position within the Division or Branch, the Bureau will consider a furlough of that representative for the shortest possible period exceeding 30 days.

A. Positions of the Parties

As explained by the Union, this proposal would require that the Agency consider furloughing a union representative as an alternative to separating him/her in a RIF. The Agency contends that this proposal conflicts with the OPM RIF regulations. The Union counters that under those OPM regulations agencies have the discretion to make exceptions to the normal order of release of employees in RIFs and that this proposal involves an action which fits within that discretion. Like Union Proposal 1, the Union characterizes this proposal as an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of its statutory authority.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

Under OPM regulations, employees are grouped in competitive levels by the similarity of their positions and grades. Positions placed in the same competitive level are supposed to be interchangeable. The OPM regulations basically require that employees be "released" from their competitive levels in inverse order of their retention standing. 5 CFR 351.601. Once released an employee is separated, furloughed or reassigned. The regulations specifically provide that an agency may not separate an employee while an employee with lower retention standing in the same competitive level is on furlough. 5 CFR 351.604(b). The effect of the Union's proposal would be to require an exception to this prohibition. That is, under the proposal an agency could be required to consider separating an employee while a union representative with lower retention standing in the same competitive level is on furlough. Contrary to the Union's argument, the Authority finds that OPM regulations do not permit an exception to this particular provision. The exceptions allowed by OPM regulations to which the Union refers in its arguments go to other provisions of the RIF regulations.3/ There is no mention in the regulations of any exceptions which an agency could make to the prohibition set forth in 5 CFR 351.604(b). The Authority concludes therefore that Union Proposal 2 is inconsistent with 5 CFR 351.604(b). As found earlier, 5 CFR Part 351 is a Government-wide regulation. Because Union Proposal 2 conflicts with a Government-wide rule or regulation, it is not within the duty to bargain.4/

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before, the Authority, in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by the parties, who have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. Briefs for the Authority's consideration were filed by the Respondent and by the General Counsel.

The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by informing a bargaining unit employee that she had the option of appealing a letter of reprimand through either the agency grievance procedure or the negotiated grievance procedure. Such conduct is alleged to constitute a failure and refusal to comply with section 7121(a)(1) of the Statute.

II. Facts

On March 7, 1984, the Respondent's agent, Altus Air Force Base Exchange Manager Javier Villalobos, issued a written reprimand to Mary Bailey, a bargaining unit employee, for misuse of sick leave. The letter stated specifically that Bailey had the "right to file within 21 calendar days following receipt of the written reprimand, a grievance through the undersigned . . . pursuant to the provisions of . . . [Army and Air Force Exchange Service Regulations] . . . or the negotiated procedure contained in the current labor agreement, but not both." After consulting with the Union president, Bailey pursued her appeal of the reprimand through the negotiated procedure.

III. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel takes the position that the Respondent, by offering the bargaining unit employee a choice of appeal routes, violated the exclusivity of the parties' negotiated grievance procedure as provided under section 7121(a)(1) of the Statute.[1/] The General Counsel contends further that the only exceptions to this provision are those appeal procedures set out specifically under section 7121(d) and (e) of the Statute, and that the written reprimand issued to Bailey is clearly not subject to an appeal procedure under either exception. In this latter regard, the General Counsel cites to the Authority's decision in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2955 and National Guard Bureau, Office of the Adjutant General, Des Moines, Iowa, 5 FLRA 617, 620 (1981), in which the Authority concluded with respect to a proposal that would grant bargaining unit employees the option to choose either the negotiated grievance procedure or a statutory procedure concerning "any matter" covered by the grievance procedure:

> (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, any collective bargaining agreement shall provide procedures for the settlement of grievances, including questions of arbitrability. Except as provided in subsections (d) and (e) of this section, the procedures shall be the exclusive procedures for resolving grievances which fall within its coverage.

> This is clearly inconsistent with section 7121(a)(1) of the Statute which permits such option only in very limited circumstances: that is, where the grievance falls within the coverage of either section 7121(d) or (e) of the Statute. In all other situations, notwithstanding the possible existence of an otherwise applicable statutory procedure, the negotiated procedure must be the exclusive procedure for resolving grievances which fall within its coverage. (Emphasis in original).

Thus, the General Counsel argues that the Respondent has granted a bargaining unit employee an option which is inconsistent with the Statute.

On the other hand, the Respondent takes the position that its bargaining unit employees have a right under the collective bargaining agreement and by operation of law to use either the negotiated procedure or the agency procedure. The Respondent argues that the parties' agreement provides no prohibition against an employee's pursuit of a grievance through the appeals channels provided under Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) Regulations. The Respondent further argues that the nonappropriated fund employees in the bargaining unit should be treated differently inasmuch as they have no statutory appeal procedures like those provided to most Federal employees as referenced in section 7121(d) and (e) of the Statute,[2] and that the adverse action appeal rights granted to the nonappropriated fund employees under AAFES Regulations should be equated to adverse action appeal rights under section 7121(d) and (e). Therefore, the Respondent argues that its bargaining unit employees should have the same right as appropriated fund employees to choose the negotiated grievance procedure or an agency appeal procedure. Finally, the Respondent contends that inasmuch as the bargaining unit employee chose the negotiated procedure, at worst it has committed a technical violation of the Statute that was de minimis in nature.

[2] Section 7121(d) and (e) provide in pertinent part:

. . . . . .

> (d) An aggrieved employee affected by a prohibited personnel practice under section 2302(b)(1) of this title which also falls under the coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure may raise the matter under a statutory procedure or the negotiated procedure, but not both. . . .

IV. Analysis

The plain language of section 7121(a)(1) of the Statute provides that "the . . . [negotiated] . . . procedures shall be the exclusive procedures for resolving grievances which fall within its coverage." (Emphasis added). The only exceptions to this provision involve those matters which are covered by a negotiated grievance procedure but also may be resolved pursuant to the statutory appeal procedures

> (e)(1) Matters covered under sections 4303 and 7512 of this title which also fall within the coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures of section 7701 of this title or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both. Similar matters which arise under other personnel systems applicable to employees covered by this chapter may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures, if any, applicable to those matters, or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both. . . .

referred to in section 7121(d) and (e) of the Statute. The appeal procedure which the Respondent offered as an option to the bargaining unit employee in this case clearly does not fall within either of these two exceptions. Respondent correctly points out that its bargaining unit employees are not covered by the statutory appeal procedures noted in section 7121 (d) and (e) of the Statute which do not apply to nonappropriated fund employees. While section 7121(e)(1) of the Statute provides that "[s]imilar matters which arise under other personnel systems applicable to employees covered by this chapter may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures, if any, applicable to those matters, or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both . . . ," the matter giving rise to the grievance in this case is a reprimand, which is not a similar matter to those matters specifically covered under section 7121(d) and (e) of the Statute.

As previously noted by the General Counsel, the Authority, in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2955 and National Guard Bureau, Office of the Adjutant General, Des Moines, Iowa, 5 FLRA 617 (1981), concluded, with respect to a proposal which would have provided optional appeal rights beyond the section 7121(d) and (e) exceptions to the exclusivity of the negotiated grievance procedure, that such a proposal is inconsistent with the Statute.[3/] Similarly here, the Authority concludes that for the Respondent to offer a bargaining unit employee such an option is inconsistent with the plain language of section 7121(a)(1) of the Statute and therefore constitutes a failure to comply with section 7121(a)(1) in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8).

[3/] See also American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2904 and Marine Corps Finance Center, Kansas City, Missouri, 7 FLRA 188 (1981) and National Treasury Employees Union and U.S. Customs Service, Washington, D.C., 8 FLRA 3 (1982), wherein similar proposals were also held to be inconsistent with the Statute.

While we agree with the Respondent that the bargaining unit employee involved in this case chose the negotiated grievance procedure, and therefore neither she nor her exclusive representative was deprived of protected rights under the Statute in this instance, the fact remains that the Respondent failed to comply with a specific statutory requirement by offering the employee a choice of procedures. Moreover, there is no basis in the stipulated record before us to support a conclusion that the Respondent will refrain from offering this option to unit employees in the future. Accordingly, the Authority rejects the Respondent's argument that its conduct constituted no more than a technical violation and orders that the Respondent's violative conduct be remedied as set forth below.

V. Conclusion

The Authority has considered all of the facts and circumstances of this case, including the positions of the parties, and concludes that the Respondent failed to comply with section 7121 of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute when it informed a bargaining unit employee that she had the option of appealing a letter of reprimand through either the agency grievance procedure or the negotiated grievance procedure.

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the following provision of an agreement disapproved by the Agency head under section 7114(c) of the Statute.

> Article IX, Section 5
> An employee who believes that he/she has been adversely affected by application of a performance standard may raise the issue of whether the performance standard, as applied to the employee, is fair and reasonable in any grievance proceeding or arbitration on the matter. In interpreting whether a performance standard is fair and reasonable, an arbitrator shall bear in mind that 5 USC 4302 states that the Employer must establish performance standards which will, to the maximum extent feasible, permit the accurate evaluation of Job Performance on the basis of objective criteria related to the job in question.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that, to the extent that it requires the performance standards themselves to be fair and reasonable, as well as to be fairly and reasonably applied, the disputed provision violates management's rights to assign work and direct employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. The Union did not file a Reply Brief in this case, but explains, in its petition for review, that the intent of the provision is to give employees the right to raise before an arbitrator the issue of whether the employer applied performance standards fairly and reasonably and in a manner otherwise consistent with the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 4302.

III. Analysis and Conclusion

Contrary to the Union's explanation, the clear language of the disputed provision is not limited to subjecting the application of performance standards to grievance and arbitral review. It also, by the language contained in the second sentence as to "whether a performance standard is fair and reasonable," would require an arbitrator to determine whether performance standards themselves are fair and reasonable by reviewing the criteria used by management in such standards to evaluate job performance. As such it would provide the basis for arbitral review of the content of performance standards and would permit arbitrators to substitute their judgments as to the proper content of performance standards for that of the Agency. Thus, the disputed provision in this case is to the same effect as a disputed portion of a proposal found to be outside the duty to bargain in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 16 FLRA 948 (1984) (Proposal 3). In that decision the Authority held that the disputed portion of a proposal which provided that "performance standards . . . must be fair and equitable" violated management's rights to assign work and direct employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. Based on Office of Personnel Management and the cases cited therein, this provision, to the extent that it requires an arbitrator to determine whether performance standards themselves are fair and reasonable, is also outside the duty to bargain. See also American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, 17 FLRA 790 (1985) (Proposal 3).

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the following Union proposal.1/

> Employees will receive a letter stating that they performed work in specially referred correspondence from the OPM Director, Compensation Director and Retirement Program Director's Offices on a priority basis for the OPF's.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that there has not been a substantial change in working conditions which would require bargaining on impact and implementation. The Agency also alleges, in essence, that sole and exclusive control over the content of an Official Personnel Folder (OPF) is vested in the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) and individual Federal agencies by law, namely 5 U.S.C. § 1302, Executive

1/ The Union withdrew a second proposal.

Order 12107, and the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a. Thus, since this proposal requires bargaining on the content of an OPF, it is inconsistent with these authorities and the implementing Government-wide regulations set out in Title 5 of the Code of Federal Regulations and the Federal Personnel Manual and does not constitute a condition of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute. The regulations cited by the Agency are 5 CFR Parts 293 and 294 and FPM Supplement 293-31.

The Union contends that it is entitled to bargain over matters affecting working conditions whether or not the Agency has acted to change those working conditions. It also argues that none of the Government-wide laws or regulations cited by the Agency prohibit placing records related to work assignments in an employee's OPF or prevent bargaining regarding the exercise of agency discretion in maintaining the OPF's of its employees.

III. Analysis

A. Duty to Bargain

When a Union files a negotiability appeal under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Statute, section 7117(c) entitles it to a decision on the negotiability issues in the appeal. To the extent that there are factual issues in dispute between the parties concerning the duty to bargain in the specific circumstances of a case, such issues should be raised in other appropriate proceedings. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 (1984). Hence, the Agency's contention that under the circumstances it has no duty to bargain on the disputed proposal is not relevant in this negotiability dispute.

B. Law and Government-wide Regulations

Employees in the priority correspondence unit previously responded to correspondence from Members of Congress and the President, among others. Due to a change in assigned work, these employees now also respond to correspondence referred to them from the offices of the OPM Director, Associate Director for Compensation, and the Assistant Director for Retirement Programs. This proposal would require the Agency to note this change in assigned work in a letter to be included in the employee's OPF. Such a letter, in our opinion, would constitute in effect an addendum to the employee's position description in order to more accurately describe the duties actually assigned to these employees.

It is well established that the duty of an agency under the Statute is to negotiate with an exclusive representative of an appropriate unit of its employees concerning conditions of employment affecting them to the extent of its discretion. That is, unless such matters are inconsistent with Federal law, including the Statute, or Government-wide rule or regulation or agency regulation for which a compelling need exists, they are within the duty to bargain. See, for example, National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769, 771 (1980), aff'd sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

Because the validity of the classification of an employee's position and, derivatively, the employee's rate of pay are dependent on the accuracy of the employee's position description, proposals concerning the accuracy of such position descriptions have long been held to be within the duty to bargain. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1999 and Army-Air Force Exchange Service, Dix-McGuire Exchange, Fort Dix, New Jersey, 2 FLRA 153, 160 (1979), aff'd as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 455 U.S. 945 (1982). Thus, unless this proposal is inconsistent with Federal law or Government-wide regulation, as claimed by OPM, it would be within the duty to bargain.

OPM has not established that inclusion of an addendum in an employee's OPF is inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. Specifically, although OPM claims that it has sole and exclusive authority under law and executive order to determine the content of an OPF, FPM Supplement 293-31, promulgated to implement such laws and executive orders, indicates that agencies have discretion to determine what records of a temporary nature may be filed in an OPF. That is, the Supplement establishes in subchapter S5-5(7) that permanent records, designated by OPM in subchapter S5-6(1), are to be filed on the right side of the OPF and records of a temporary nature are to be filed on the left side. Position descriptions are not designated as permanent records in subchapter S5-6(1). Rather, subchapter S5-6(2) indicates that "[b]ecause [temporary] records vary widely from agency to agency, no list of them is included" and expressly notes that a position description is an example of a temporary record.

Similarly, OPM has not established that this proposal is inconsistent with any portion of the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, or with the implementing regulations set out in 5 CFR Part 293. Certainly, an accurate description of the duties assigned to an employee meets the requirement stated in 5 U.S.C. § 552a(e)(1) and restated in 5 CFR § 293.103(a) that records maintained on an employee be relevant and necessary to accomplish a Federal personnel management purpose. In fact, 5 CFR § 293.311 expressly provides that a position description is among the information maintained by an agency in an OPF which may be disclosed to the public pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. Finally, while OPM also relies on 5 CFR Part 294, this part concerns the procedures for obtaining information under the FOIA and not what information will be maintained.

IV. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that the proposal concerns a condition of employment and is not inconsistent with Federal law or Government-wide regulation. Therefore, the proposal is within the duty to bargain under section 7117 of the Statute.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning the Union proposal.2/

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (The Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the underlined portions of two provisions of a negotiated agreement which were disapproved by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute.[1]

II. Union Provision 1

> Section 17.07. The employee may contest the merits or procedures used in effecting a non-disciplinary adverse action of separation for cause by using the appeal procedures specified in AR-230-2 or by using the grievance procedures contained in Article 18, but not both. An employee shall be deemed to > have exercised this option for one of the procedures described above at such time as he timely files under either procedure whichever comes first.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency asserts that Union Provision 1 is nonnegotiable because it is inconsistent with section 7121(a)(1) of the Statute. The Union argues that the provision is consistent with section 7121(e)(1) of the Statute.

B. Analysis

The two sections of the Statute relied upon by the parties, namely, section 7121(a)(1) and section 7121(e)(1), provide in relevant part, as follows:

> (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, any collective bargaining agreement shall provide procedures for the settlement of grievances, including questions of arbitrability. Except as provided in subsections (d) and (e) of this section, the procedures shall be the exclusive procedures for resolving grievances which fall within its coverage.
> (e)(1) Matters covered under sections 4303 and 7512 of this title which also fall within the coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures of section 7701 of this title or under the negotiated procedure, but not both. Similar matters which arise under other personnel systems applicable to employees covered by this chapter may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures, if any, applicable to those matters, or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both. . . .

Section 7121(a) establishes that, except for those limited matters set out in section 7121(d) and (e), the negotiated grievance procedure shall be the exclusive procedure for resolving all matters which fall within its coverage.2/ The limited exceptions to the exclusivity requirement, which are set out in section 7121(e)(1), permit employees covered by title 5 the option of challenging certain actions, including performance based non-disciplinary separations, through their negotiated grievance procedure or to the Merit Systems Protections Board (MSPB) through the appellate procedures of 5 U.S.C. § 7701. Section 7121(e)(1) also permits employees not covered by title 5 to challenge similar actions through their negotiated grievance procedure or through the applicable "appellate procedures" which may exist under their non-title 5 personnel system.

The record in this case indicates that the employees referred to in the provision are non-appropriated fund (NAF) employees. These NAF employees are not covered by 5 U.S.C. § 4303 relating to performance based adverse actions and thus, cannot appeal a non-disciplinary separation for cause to MSPB under 5 U.S.C. § 7701. See 5 U.S.C. § 2105(c). In addition, according to the parties, NAF employees do not have access to any other statutory appeals procedure in which to contest such non-disciplinary separations for cause. Rather, the Agency has created, by regulation, an internal administrative appeals system in which such matters may be contested. Further, the record indicates that the Agency regulation specifically excludes from coverage of the administrative appeals system any matter that is also covered by a negotiated grievance procedure. Provision 1 simply would grant NAF employees the option to appeal non-disciplinary separations for cause through either the negotiated grievance procedure or through the administrative procedures contained in the Agency regulation.

Thus, the question presented by the disputed portion of Provision 1 concerns whether the Agency's internal administrative appeals system is an "appellate procedure" within the meaning of section 7121(e)(1) of the Statute.

Although the term appellate procedure is not expressly defined in the Statute, the legislative history of section 7121 supports a conclusion that Congress intended that term to include "any applicable appeals procedure established by or pursuant to law." H. REP. NO. 1403, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 55 (1978). See also S. REP. NO. 969, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 109-110 (1978).

2/ While section 7121(a) also refers to matters set out in section 7121(d), such matters relate to discrimination complaints and are not relevant in the instant case.

The Union in this case does not provide any support for its claim that the Agency's internal administrative appeals system constitutes an appellate procedure within the meaning of section 7121(e)(1). Specifically, there is nothing in the record to indicate that the Agency's internal administrative appeals system was established by or pursuant to law. Thus, the Agency's internal appeals system is not an "appellate procedure" within the meaning of section 7121(e)(1) of the Statute. As a result, challenges to performance based separations for cause of NAF employees are required by section 7121(a)(1) of the Statute to be processed exclusively through the negotiated grievance procedure which covers such matters.

C. Conclusion

Consequently, by attempting to provide NAF employees with an option to contest performance based separations for cause through either the Agency's internal regulatory appeals procedure or through the negotiated grievance procedure which covers such matters, the disputed portion of Union Provision 1 is inconsistent with the mandate of section 7121(a)(1). Therefore, Provision 1 is outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

III. Provision 2

> Section 26.07. The parties agree that fair and equitable consideration shall be afforded unit employees in respect to training which will improve their on-the-job performance. In this connection, the selection of candidates for such training shall be made from interested qualified employees in the area concerned.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that because this provision would require management to restrict its assignment of certain training to certain specified employees, it directly interferes with management's right, under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, to assign work. The Union argues that the undisputed first sentence read in conjunction with the disputed second sentence, does not interfere with management's right to assign work. Further, the Union asserts that, under applicable Authority precedent, this proposal is within the duty to bargain because it contains general non-quantitative language which provides, at most, a procedure or an arrangement by which a management right is exercised.

B. Analysis

In our opinion, if this proposal were revised to more precisely implement the Union's stated intent of providing bargaining unit employees with fair and equitable consideration in selection for performance improving training assignments, it would be within the duty to bargain. See Association of Civilian Technicians, New York State Council and State of New York, Division of Military and Naval Affairs, Albany, New York, 11 FLRA 475 (1983) (Union Proposal 1). However, the Union's stated intent is at odds with the plain meaning of the entire proposal. Specifically, the first sentence, which is not in dispute, merely provides that bargaining unit employees will be provided with fair and equitable consideration for training assignments. The second sentence, on the other hand, expressly provides that selections for such training assignments "shall be made" from "interested qualified" employees, in other words from qualified volunteers. Since there is nothing in the record which persuades us that the disputed second sentence was intended to merely establish a nondispositive preference for qualified volunteers, we conclude that this sentence simply would preclude the Agency, for example, from assigning training to a non-volunteer.

It is well settled that an express limitation on an agency's discretion to pick the particular employee to whom specified training will be assigned violates the agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. See National Association of Air Traffic Specialists and department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 6 FLRA 588 (1981) (Union Proposals I through III). Thus, the disputed second sentence would substantively interfere with management's right and does not constitute a negotiable procedure within the meaning of section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982).

We turn now to the question of whether the disputed second sentence constitutes an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. Here, we may assume that the disputed sentence was intended to ameliorate an adverse effect perceived by a qualified volunteer for a performance improving training assignment who was not selected because the training was assigned to a non-volunteer instead. In this circumstance, however, the proposed amelioration would totally preclude the Agency from assigning the training to the non-volunteer notwithstanding any determination on the part of the Agency that such non-volunteer would benefit from the performance improving training. Such a proposed amelioration, which totally abrogates the exercise of a management right, clearly does not constitute an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3). See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183, 1188 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981).

C. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the disputed sentence violates management's right, under section 7106(a)(2)(B), to assign work and does not constitute a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) or an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of three Union proposals. The proposals concern a reduction-in-force (RIF) within an operating division (Public Health Service) of the Agency.

II. Union Proposal 1

> "Competitive Area" is defined as all those positions under the authority of the Principal Regional Official of HHS - Dallas within the commuting area of Dallas, Texas except those which have been determined by the FLRA to be in "bargaining units" other than that represented by Chapter 219, NTEU.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that the proposal conflicts with an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. The Union asserts that the Agency has failed to demonstrate that a compelling need exists for the regulation with which the proposal conflicts.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The positions of the parties here are substantially identical to those which they took concerning a similar proposal which was before the Authority in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of Health and Human Services, Region IV, 11 FLRA 254 (1983) (Union Proposal 1). For the reasons expressed in DHHS, Region IV,[1] the Authority rejects the Agency's argument here that a compelling need exists for the regulation[2] on which it relies.

However, we find that this proposal is nonnegotiable for a reason other than that raised by the Agency. OPM has recently prescribed revised regulations regarding RIFs which are Government-wide regulations within the meaning of section 7117 of the Statute. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of Government Financial Operations, 22 FLRA No. 58 (1986). Among other things, those regulations set forth criteria for defining competitive areas. They require that a competitive area "be defined solely in terms of an agency's organizational unit(s) and geographical location, and it must include all employees within the competitive area so defined." [Emphasis supplied.] 5 CFR 351.402(b), 51 Fed. Reg. 318 at 321 (1986). The proposal does not meet this standard. It would in part define a competitive area in terms of positions in particular bargaining units rather than solely in terms of organizational units and geographical location. Hence, it is inconsistent with a Government-wide rule or regulation and it is not within the duty to bargain.

> Displacement within subgroups will be permitted between competitive levels to the same extent

[1] In DHHS, Region IV the Authority relied in part on an Office of Personnel Management (OPM) regulation found at 5 CFR 351.701(a)(4). The OPM regulations have since been revised. However, an identical provision continues to appear at 5 CFR 351.702(a)(4). 51 Fed. Reg. 318 at 324-5 (1986).

[2] The same regulation, HHS Personnel Manual Instruction 351-1-40, was at issue in that case as well as this one.

OPM regulations permit displacement between subgroups I-A and I-B.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that this proposal conflicts with an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists (HHS Personnel Manual Instruction 351-1-50A3). That regulation sets forth the Agency's policy on types of reassignments of employees during a RIF which are within an agency's discretion to allow under OPM regulations. The Agency's policy specifically does not allow the type of reassignment proposed, that is, employees displacing others in the same subgroup in different competitive levels.[3] The Agency argues that its regulation is essential to preventing the serious disruption of its programs which it contends would result from expanding employee displacement rights beyond those required by OPM regulations. Because of this, it claims, its regulation meets the criterion for compelling need which appears at section 2424.11(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Noting that OPM regulations prohibit an unqualified employee from displacing another employee in a RIF, the Union asserts that the Agency's arguments that its regulation is essential to the accomplishment of its mission is without merit.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

Under OPM regulations an agency may in its discretion permit employees who are competing for retention to displace other employees in the same subgroup. 5 CFR 351.705(a)(1). In support of its argument that there is a compelling need for its regulation the Agency asserts only that an increased number of employees would be affected by a RIF if expanded displacement were permitted. In the Authority's view this alone does not demonstrate that the regulation is essential, as opposed to helpful or desirable, to the accomplishment of the Agency's mission and functions. In fact, the OPM regulations contain safeguards which would permit the Agency to protect its ability to accomplish its mission and functions even in the face of increased displacement actions. OPM regulations require that provisions allowing for expanded displacement be implemented in a manner consistent with the regulations as a whole. 5 CFR 351.705(b)(1). The regulations specifically require that an employee must be qualified for any position to which assigned in a RIF action. 5 CFR 351.702(a). Additionally, the regulations permit agencies to make temporary and continuing exceptions to the normal order of RIF actions where it is necessary to retain an employee on duties which cannot be taken over by another employee without undue interruption to a particular activity. 5 CFR 351.607 and 5 CFR 351.608. Particularly in view of these regulatory provisions which allow agencies to minimize the interruption of their activities which may result from RIFs, the Authority finds that the Agency has not met its burden of demonstrating a compelling need for its regulation. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2670 and Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Keesler Air Force Base Exchange, Mississippi, 10 FLRA 71 (1982). Therefore, the Authority finds Union Proposal 2 is within the duty to bargain.

[3] Employees are placed in "tenure groups" according to the nature of their appointment; i.e., career, career-conditional, indefinite, etc. "Subgroup" placement is based on veteran status. 5 CFR 351.501. Employees are grouped in "competitive levels" by the similarity of their positions and grades. Positions placed in the same competitive level are supposed to be interchangeable. 5 CFR 351.403.

The Authority addressed a similar proposal in International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, AFL-CIO, NASA Headquarters Professional Association and National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Headquarters, Washington, D.C., 8 FLRA 212 (1982). In that case the Authority found that proposal nonnegotiable. The difference between that case and this is that in the NASA case the agency alleged and demonstrated in the record that the proposal would directly determine conditions of employment for employees outside of the bargaining unit and for that reason was nonnegotiable. In this case the Agency has made no similar allegation. Thus the different conclusions reached in the two cases are a consequence of the different circumstances present. See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32, AFL-CIO, and Office of Personnel Management, 14 FLRA 754 (1984), remanded sub nom. Local 32, American Federation of Government Employees v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 498 (D.C. Cir. 1985). In that decision the Authority noted that the responsibility for creating a record on which it could resolve negotiability issues rested with the parties and that where applicability of a proposal to nonunit employees was not raised by the parties, the Authority would not consider it.

IV. Union Proposal 3

> The Employer will provide for assignments across competitive areas to positions from which any Group I or Group II employee was promoted or an essentially identical position.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that this proposal conflicts with an Agency regulation which meets all of the Authority's illustrative criteria for determining compelling need. Section 2424.11(a), (b) and (c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union contends that the Agency regulation does not meet the compelling need criteria.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that this proposal is nonnegotiable for a reason other than that raised by the Agency. While OPM regulations previously allowed assignments across competitive areas to be made at agency discretion, the revised OPM regulations do not. See 48 Fed. Reg. 32304 at 32305 (1983). Under current OPM regulations, employees in a competitive area compete only with each other, not with employees in another competitive area. 5 CFR 351.402 and 351.701(a).[4] As noted in section II(B) of this decision, those OPM regulations are Government-wide rules or regulations. Since Union Proposal 3 conflicts with those regulations, it is not within the duty to bargain. In view of this conclusion and the fact that the Agency's compelling need argument was based in part on OPM regulations which have subsequently been revised, it is unnecessary to address that argument.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposal 2.[5] IT IS

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority under section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by which the parties have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. Briefs for the Authority's consideration were filed by the Respondent, the General Counsel and the Charging Party (the Union).

The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by insisting on bargaining to impasse with the Union on a matter which was outside the Union's duty to bargain.

II. Background

The Union represents a nationwide unit of permanent full-time food inspectors in the field service of the Respondent's Meat and Poultry Inspection Program. In July 1983 the parties initiated negotiations. They reached impasse on about 26 proposed agreement articles in September 1983. One of the articles, "Article 34," was at impasse because the Union opposed proposals by the Respondent which would require the parties to attempt to resolve potential unfair labor practices informally before an unfair labor practice charge could be filed with the Authority.[1]

In December 1983 the Respondent requested the assistance of the Federal Service Impasses Panel (the Panel) to resolve the impasse. The Respondent continued to press its position for Article 34 in the mediation phase of the Panel's proceedings and in a Panel arbitration hearing, and the Union continued its opposition. On March 23, 1984, the day following the Panel's arbitration hearing, the Respondent withdrew its proposals for Article 34 and agreed to the provisions for Article 34 which had been proposed by the Union.

III. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel and the Union argue that the Respondent's Article 34 proposal, on "pre-charge" procedures, was outside the Union's duty to bargain because it would require the Union to waive its statutory right to file unfair labor practice charges in the manner provided by section 7118 of the Statute. They assert that the Respondent's insistence on bargaining concerning a subject which was outside the Union's duty to bargain (that is, on a "permissive" subject of bargaining) should be found to be a violation of the Respondent's statutory duty to bargain in good faith.

The Respondent argues that it did not fail to bargain in good faith, because its proposed "pre-charge" procedure would not unlawfully interfere with the Union's rights and was within the Union's duty to bargain.

IV. Analysis

A. Insisting on proposals which are outside the duty to bargain

In Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Headquarters, 18 FLRA No. 92 (1985), a case which presented an issue directly analogous to this case, the Authority found that agency management had insisted on bargaining to impasse, to and including Panel proceedings under section 7119 of the Statute, concerning a proposal which was outside the union's duty to bargain. In that decision the Authority first considered whether this practice amounted to a failure to bargain in good faith and decided in the affirmative, stating in part:

> [P]arties cannot insist on bargaining to impasse with respect to . . . matters [which are outside the duty to bargain] . . . . Where a matter falls outside the required scope of bargaining . . . there is no mutual obligation to bargain at all.

Finding that one of the proposals on which management had insisted was outside the union's duty to bargain, the Authority concluded that such conduct constituted a failure to bargain in good faith in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

In this case it is stipulated that the Respondent insisted on bargaining to impasse, up to and including Panel proceedings, concerning proposals which were opposed by the Union. As indicated in Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the resolution of this case depends on whether the Respondent's proposal was outside the Union's duty to bargain.

B. Whether the proposal was outside the Union's duty to bargain

1. The proposal: Respondent's Article 34 proposal would require either party to notify the other of a dispute and to follow certain procedures in an attempt to resolve the dispute before the complaining party could file an unfair labor practice charge with the Authority.[2] The Union objected to the proposal because in its view the

[2] We deny the Respondent's motion to strike portions of the General Counsel's brief which are alleged to be an inaccurate description of the disputed proposal because we find that the General Counsel's description of the proposal is consistent with the record.

proposal would prevent the Union from exercising its right to file an unfair labor practice charge under section 7118 of the Statute.[3]

2. Application of section 7118: Section 7118 provides that an unfair labor practice charge may be filed at any time within six months from the date of the event complained of, or within six months of its discovery if discovery of the event has been prevented or concealed. If the charge is not filed within six months, the General Counsel is precluded from issuing a complaint. The person filing a charge may do so as soon as the events or actions complained of have occurred or have been discovered. Alternatively, such person has at least six months to discover the occurrence, consider available options, and choose a position before filing the charge. See United States Department of Labor, 20 FLRA No. 34 (1985), petition for review filed, No. 85-1770 (D.C. Cir. Nov. 22, 1985) (the General Counsel may not issue a complaint on a charge filed more than six months from the date of the occurrence unless the respondent has prevented discovery of the occurrence).

The Respondent's proposal conflicts with section 7118 because, in requiring that the filing of charges would be delayed pending time spent on informal settlement efforts, the Union would be prevented from filing as soon as an event has occurred or been discovered.

Notwithstanding this result, which conflicts with the Union's rights under section 7118, the Respondent argues that its proposed procedures are analogous to the procedures determined to be within the duty to bargain in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1999 and Army-Air Force Exchange, Dix-McGuire Exchange, Fort Dix, New Jersey, 2 FLRA 153, 153-58 (1979) (hereinafter Dix-McGuire), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982). In Dix-McGuire it was decided that procedures which would merely delay the exercise of statutory rights were within the duty to bargain. However, as indicated by the Authority in its decision and by the D.C. Circuit in affirming the Authority's decision, the question presented in that case concerned the reconciliation of two apparently conflicting statutory rights, i.e., the right of management in exercising rights reserved to management as provided under section 7106(a) of the Statute and the right of labor organizations in negotiating procedures bearing on the exercise of these management rights as provided under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute.

Unlike the question presented in Dix-McGuire, the right of a party to file an unfair labor practice charge under section 7118 does not involve the exercise of a management right to which section 7106(b)(2) is applicable. Additionally, the right to file a charge is not subject to any competing statutory right of an opposing party to be free from being subject to a charge. Hence, there is no analogy between the issue in Dix-McGuire and the issue raised by the Respondent.

The Respondent also cites Headquarters, Fort Sam Houston, Department of the Army and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2154, 8 FLRA 394 (1982), in support of its position. In that case the agency excepted to an arbitrator's award to the effect that a contractual pre-charge procedure, i.e., a procedure which had been negotiated by the parties, was unenforceable. In granting the exception and in setting the award aside, the Authority concluded that the arbitrator had erred in denying the grievance on the basis that the negotiated pre-charge procedure was unenforceable, stating that the Statute did not prohibit the union from agreeing to submit potential charges to management before it filed charges with the Authority. Thus, the Respondent is correct in arguing that Fort Sam Houston held that these procedures are "negotiable," but only to the extent that "negotiable" is understood to mean "not illegal." It does not also mean, as the Respondent has argued, that a party may be compelled to bargain on the subject if it chooses not to do so.[4]

[4] See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 15 FLRA 283, 284 (1984), in which the Authority explained that while an agency cannot be required to negotiate procedures for the selection of candidates for supervisory positions, once negotiated, such procedures are enforceable.

Contrary to the Respondent's assertions, this conclusion is not contradicted, but is supported by the report to Congress on these matters by the General Accounting Office in 1982. Steps Can Be Taken To Improve Federal Labor-Management Relations and Reduce The Number and Costs of Unfair Labor Practice Charges, GAO/FPCD-83-5 (Nov. 5, 1982). Recognizing that statutory rights were involved, the GAO did not conclude that pre-charge procedures should be required. It recommended that settlement discussions take place after a charge is filed and that investigations be delayed for such purpose. In this regard, section 2423.2(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations now provides that investigations will normally not commence until parties have been afforded a reasonable time, not to exceed 15 days, for such purpose.

We acknowledge the Respondent's references to the Authority's comments in Fort Sam Houston on the need to encourage informal settlements. We strongly encourage parties engaged in Federal labor-management relations to take the initiative in settling unfair labor practice disputes at any stage. When settlement efforts are postponed, until charges are filed or the General Counsel decides whether a complaint should issue, timely solutions to the problem which gave rise to the dispute may be lost. Recognizing this, parties often lose the incentive to seek their own solutions and concentrate their efforts on litigation. A failure by the parties to attempt at every stage to resolve disputes voluntarily undermines the bilateralism which the Statute and the Authority are committed to fostering.

Far too many disputes are taken to litigation because the parties do not talk with each other and seek mutually satifactory resolutions of their differences. The best resolutions of differences are the resolutions the parties work out themselves. Many unfair labor practice disputes appear to be susceptible to resolution by the parties themselves if they would initiate contact with each other in an attempt to resolve the dispute and approach such discussions with the thought that their differences can and should be resolved.

We support the objective of Respondent's proposal and see no problem with the proposal insofar as it encourages the informal settlement of disputes. The difficulty lies in the proposal's requirement that settlement discussions must delay the filing of a charge. We interpret section 7118 of the Statute to establish certain rights regarding the filing of charges which a party may rely upon and withhold from bargaining if it so chooses. As in Fort Sam Houston, a party may decide to waive these rights if it decides that there are benefits to that. However, also consistent with Fort Sam Houston, a party can decide to stand on its statutory right and refuse to bargain the issue.

Based on this reasoning we decide that the procedures proposed by the Respondent are permissive subjects of bargaining for the Union because the procedures would require the Union to waive certain of its statutory rights. In certain situations, without fault by either party, delaying the filing of a charge could mean that the charge would be filed more than six months after the occurrence. The General Counsel would not be able to act on the charge. This we feel is not consistent with section 7118 of the Statute. We are not persuaded by the Respondent's reasoning that its proposals should be found to be within the duty to bargain insofar as they would only delay filings. The Statute provides that a party may file as soon as it wants to, and neither the language of the Statute nor the legislative history suggests that this right should be qualified.

V. Conclusion

The Authority has considered all the facts and circumstances of this case, including the positions of the parties, and concludes that the Respondent did violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, as alleged in the complaint, by insisting on bargaining to impasse concerning a proposal which was outside the Union's duty to bargain.

Appendix 1

As pertinent herein, the procedures proposed by the Respondent, which led to the submission of the parties' impasse to the Panel, were as follows:

Article XXXIV Unfair Labor Practice Charges

Section A--Informal Resolution

It is the intent of the Service and the Union that labor-management conflicts arising during the life of this Agreement be resolved promptly and equitably using bilateral resolution procedures.

Section B--Procedures

It is understood . . . that nothing in this section shall preclude either the Service or the Union from exercising rights under section 7116 of the . . . Statute. However, in the interest of informally settling labor-management disputes bilaterally, the Service and the Union agree that: (1) Prior to . . . the . . . filing [of] an unfair labor practice charge with the . . . Authority the charging party shall provide written notice to the other party; (2) Notice shall be provided or received only by [designated officials of the Service and the Union]; (3) Such notice shall provide a statement of the particular subsections of . . . the Statute alleged to have been violated; the time; the place; and the date of the alleged unfair labor practice . . . ; and requested relief or settlement . . . ; (4) The parties shall have (30) calendar days after receipt of notice . . . in which to informally resolve the matter in dispute; (5) If not resolved during the above-mentioned (30) calendar day period, the charging party may escalate the matter to the . . . Authority; (6) Extensions to the informal resolution period shall only be approved by mutual consent . . . . [Emphasis added.]

Section C--Exceptions

Employees filing unfair labor practice charges shall not be compelled to utilize these procedures, but may do so at their own election. Unfair labor practice allegations concerning strikes or other work stoppage activities covered by Section 7116(b)(7) of the . . . Statute are excluded from these procedures.

> § 7118. Prevention of unfair labor practices
> (a)(1) If any agency or labor organization is charged by any person with having engaged in or engaging in an unfair labor practice, the General Counsel shall investigate the charge and may issue and cause to be served upon the agency or labor organization a complaint. ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Herbert Oestreich filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. Because the exceptions presented an issue of the Authority's jurisdiction, the Authority requested and received from the parties statements of position on this issue.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case concerned the removal of the grievant, a teacher in the Department of Defense Overseas Dependents Schools System, who apparently is not a preference eligible. As his award the Arbitrator denied the grievance finding that management had proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the grievant's removal was for just cause.

III. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority has determined that it is without jurisdiction to review the Union's exceptions. Section 7122(a) of the Statute pertinently provides:

> Either party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award pursuant to the arbitration (other than an award relating to a matter described in section 7121(f) of this title).

As relevant to this case, the matters described in section 7121(f) of the Statute[1] include matters similar to those covered under 5 U.S.C. § 7512, such as removal actions, which arise under other personnel systems. In this case, for the reasons which follow, the Authority concludes that the award relates to a matter that is similar to those covered under section 7512 and that the matter has arisen under another personnel system within the meaning of section 7121(f).

The legislative history of the Statute provides one specific example of "[an]other personnel syste[m]." The report of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee preceding the enactment of the Statute in explaining the identical reference in section 7121(e) of the Statute[2]

[1] Section 7121(f) pertinently provides:

> In matters similar to those covered under sections 4303 and 7512 of this title which arise under other personnel systems and which an aggrieved employee has raised under the negotiated grievance procedure, judicial review of an arbitrator's award may be obtained in the same manner and on the same basis as could be obtained of a final decision in such matters raised under applicable appellate procedures.

[2] Section 7121(e)(1) pertinently provides:

> Matters covered under sections 4303 and 7512 of this title which also fall within the coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure may, in the used as an example the personnel system established by 38 U.S.C. §§ 4101-4119 for Department of Medicine and Surgery (DM&S) professional employees of the Veterans Administration. S. Rep. No. 95-969, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 110 (1978). In VA Medical Center, Northport, New York v. FLRA, 732 F.2d 1128 (2d Cir. 1984), the court noted some of the features of this personnel system which distinguishes it from the general Federal civil service. Specifically, the court noted that qualifications for DM&S professionals are determined "without regard to civil service regulations," 38 U.S.C. § 4106(a); DM&S professionals have a different probationary period than other civil service employees, 38 U.S.C. § 4106(b); their hours, conditions of employment, and leaves of absence are determined "notwithstanding any law, Executive Order, or regulation," 38 U.S.C. § 4108(a); and they are paid according to special grades and scales, 38 U.S.C § 4107." Id. at 1130 n.4.

Using this personnel system as a benchmark, the Authority concludes that the Defense Department Overseas Teachers Pay and Personnel Practices Act (the Act), Pub. L. No. 86-91, 73 Stat. 214 (1959), 20 U.S.C. §§ 901-907, likewise established a "personnel syste[m]," within the meaning of section 7121(f), for teachers in schools operated by the Department of Defense (DOD) in an overseas area for dependents of members of the Armed Forces and dependents of civilian employees of DOD. As a matter of background, the court in March v. U.S., 506 F.2d 1306 (D.C. Cir. 1974), explained that overseas dependents schools were established > discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures of section 7701 of this title or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both. Similar matters which arise under other personnel systems applicable to employees covered by this chapter may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures, if any, applicable to those matters, or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both.

after World War II to provide educational facilities abroad for dependents of military and civilian personnel. Id. at 1311. Until 1959 the teachers in these schools were subject to civil service laws and regulations which had created a number of inequities. Id. (citing S. Rep. No. 141, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 2 (1959)). As a result Congress sought to correct this situation of inequities by enacting legislation to specifically address the employment and salary practices of DOD respecting overseas teachers. Id. The statutory enactment, as specifically entitled, includes "personnel practices," and the Senate report that accompanied the bill that was enacted and signed into law specifically stated that the purpose of the bill was "to provide a system of personnel administration for schoolteachers and certain school officers and other employees of the dependents schools operated by [DOD] in overseas areas." S. Rep. No. 141, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 1 (1959). The report also stated that "[t]he proposed system recognizes and corrects deficiencies in the present system which [DOD] has identified and which long have been apparent." The major provision and means enacted to correct the deficiencies was to no longer generally subject such teachers to civil service laws and regulations as the source of their personnel system and instead to have the Secretary of Defense prescribe and issue regulations to provide for a system of personnel administration. Under the specific provision of 20 U.S.C. § 902(a), such regulations shall govern: "(1) the establishment of teaching positions; (2) the fixing of basic compensation for teachers and teaching positions . . .; (3) the entitlement of teachers to compensation; (4) the payment of compensation to teachers; (5) the appointment of teachers; (6) the conditions of employment of teachers; (7) the length of the school year . . .; (8) the leave system for teachers; (9) quarters, allowances, and additional compensation for teachers; and (10) such other matters as may be relevant and appropriate to the purposes of this chapter." Thus, as noted by the court in March, DOD, pursuant to the Act, has promulgated regulations to "conduct the employment and salary practices applicable to teachers and teaching positions." 506 F.2d at 1311-12 (quoting Act of July 17, 1959, Pub. L. No. 86-91, § 5(a), 73 Stat. 214).

As noted with respect to DM&S professionals, the source of their personnel system in large measure is not general civil service laws and regulations, but instead is 38 U.S.C. chap. 73. Because the sources of the "employment and salary practices" applicable to overseas teachers, similar to the situation of DM&S professionals, are the Act and the regulations of the Secretary of Defense prescribed by and issued pursuant to the Act, and not civil service laws and regulations generally, the Authority finds the "system of personnel administration" for overseas teachers, S. Rep. No. 141, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 1 (1959), to be "[an]other personnel syste[m]" within the meaning of section 7121(f). Consequently, the Arbitrator's award relating to the grievant's removal relates to a matter described in section 7121(f). Under section 7122(a), exceptions to the Arbitrator's award may not be filed with the Authority, and therefore the Authority is without jurisdiction to review the Union's exceptions.

IV. ORDER

Accordingly, for these reasons, the Union's exceptions are dismissed.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that a 14-day suspension of the grievant could not be upheld because the records used as a basis for the suspension had not been placed in the proper personnel file prior to the proposed suspension as required by the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The arbitrator sustained the grievance, overturned the suspension, and ordered that the grievant be made whole.

In its exception, the agency contended that the award is deficient because the arbitrator failed to make the finding that the violation of the agreement constituted "harmful error" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 7701(c). The Authority found that the harmful-error rule, as it pertains to the arbitration of disciplinary actions, applies in accordance with § 7121(e)(2) only to the more serious adverse actions enumerated in 5 U.S.C. § 7512 that are taken under 5 U.S.C. § 7513; the rule does not apply to suspensions for 14 days or less. The Authority concluded that the arbitrator was not required by law to find that the violation of the parties' agreement constituted harmful error and that his failure to do so provided no basis for finding the award contrary to law as alleged by the agency.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority dismissed the union's exceptions as untimely filed because they failed to comply with SS 2425.1, 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Authority's rules and regulations, applicable to the computation of time limits. The parties' request for clarification of the arbitrator's award did not operate to extend the time limit for filing exceptions. The filing period for exceptions begins with the arbitrator's response to a request for clarification only when an arbitrator, in response to the clarification request, modifies an award and the modification gives rise to the deficiencies alleged in the exceptions.

DIGEST NOTES

The Arbitrator determined in his award that the 14-day suspension of the grievant was not for just cause. He reduced the discipline to an oral admonishment, and ordered that the grievant be made whole. The grievant was suspended on charges that he engaged in conduct prejudicial to the government. The arbitrator determined that the evidence failed to establish that the grievant physically abused a member of the public or acted in any manner clearly inconsistent with agency policy or guidelines. He also determined that that the situation reflected misjudgment by the grievant and a temporary loss of composure. Two mitigating factors were: (1) the grievant's record of no previous disciplinary actions and (2) the several month delay between the alleged misconduct and the imposition of discipline.

In its first exception the agency contended that the award was contrary to law because the arbitrator applied an erroneous standard of review. The Authority has repeatedly held that the standards set forth in in 5 U.S.C. § 7701, pertaining to the appellate review procedures of MSPB, do not apply to the arbitration of suspensions of 14 days or less. Section 7701(c), as it pertains to the arbitration of disciplinary actions, applies in accordance with § 7121(e)(2) only to the more serious adverse actions enumerated in 5 U.S.C. § 7512 that are taken under 5 U.S.C. § 7513; it does not apply to suspensions of 14 days or less in this case. The Authority concluded that the award is not contrary to law because the arbitrator failed to apply the standard of review which the agency asserts is required by § 7701. Unless a specific standard of proof or review is required, an arbitrator may establish whatever standard the arbitrator considers appropriate and the award will not be found deficient on that basis.

In its second exception the agency contended that the award was inconsistent with the agency's table of offenses and discipline which provides for discipline ranging from a 14 day suspension to removal for the first offense of conduct prejudicial to the government. The Authority held that the exception did not provide any basis for finding the award deficient. The agency did not take proper account of the arbitrator's specific finding that the evidence failed to establish that the grievant had engaged in conduct prejudicial to the government.

In its final exception the agency contended that the award was deficient because the arbitrator improperly mitigated the discipline on grounds of delay without making the assertedly required finding that the delay constituted harmful error within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 7701. The Authority concluded that the harmful error rule of § 7701(c) is not an applicable standard of review in arbitrations of suspensions of 14 days or less. As with the standard of review pertaining to disciplinary actions, the rule applies in accordance with § 7121(e)(2) only to the more serious adverse actions enumerated in 5 U.S.C. § 7512.

Whether the agency established that the grievant engaged in the conduct with which he was charged is separate from and independent of any asserted procedural error. The Authority found that, at minimum, the award is primarily based on and properly supported by the independent finding of the arbitrator that the evidence failed to establish that the grievant physically abused the individual involved or acted in a manner clearly inconsistent with agency policy or guidelines. To the extent the arbitrator mitigated the suspension on the basis of the failure to promptly impose discipline as required by the parties agreement, the agency has provided no basis for finding the award deficient.

DIGEST NOTES

The Judge found that the agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) by changing the hours of work and starting and quitting times of unit employees without bargaining over the changes as requested by the union, and also by refusing to bargain concerning a ground rule proposal that preparation time for negotiations be on official time. The Judge concluded that the agency had violated the Statute and recommended that it be ordered to rescind the changes in work hours and make whole those employees who would have earned premium pay but for the unilateral changes in their hours. The agency excepted to the recommended remedy, asserting that the "but for" test required by the Back Pay Act had not been met; that the General Counsel (GC) had not established the amount of pay employees would have earned but for the unilateral change; and that the GC had not established that the employees would have continued to receive premium pay had the matter been negotiated.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

The Authority agreed with the Judge and found that the agency unlawfully refused to bargain over a ground rule which was identical to a ground rule which had been used by the parties in local negotiations on two previous occasions and the proposed rule was fully consistent with decisions of the Authority which hold generally that the granting of official time to prepare for negotiations is a negotiable matter under § 7131(d). After the agency refused to bargain over ground rules, it unilaterally implemented a change in the employees' starting and quitting times which the Authority also has consistently held to be negotiable. Since the decision itself to change the starting and quitting times of and established shift is within the duty to bargain, and the agency failed and refused to bargain concerning such change, the Authority finds that a status quo ante remedy is appropriate and will best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

The Authority found that the General Counsel has established that but for the agency's unilateral change in starting and quitting times, particular employees would not have suffered a loss of pay. Thus, the requirements of the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, have been satisfied and the Judge's make whole remedy is appropriate. The Authority has concluded that but for management's unilateral change in employees conditions of employment, at least 28 employees working the Sunday night shift, would have earned between $17.50 and $27.76 in premium pay for each Sunday night shift worked had the starting and quitting time not been unilaterally changed. The Authority noted that records exist which permit identification both of the employees qualified for such back pay and the amount of back pay to which each employee is entitled.

DIGEST NOTES

As his award the arbitrator ruled that a 5-day suspension was not for just cause and directed that the grievant be made whole. The arbitrator determined that the evidence established that the grievant had engaged in the misconduct with which he was charged. However, he noted that the agency had delayed more than eight months from the date of the incident before proposing the grievant's suspension. He concluded that this "extraordinary delay" resulted in a disciplinary action which was arbitrary, capricious, and unreasonable and which did not promote the efficiency of the service. He further noted that agency regulations, the collective bargaining agreement and 5 U.S.C. § 7503 all provided that disciplinary action should or must be timely. The arbitrator rejected the agency's argument of excusable delay and found that the the delay violated law, agency regulation and the collective bargaining agreement and that the delay constituted harmful error and the discipline was contrary to law.

In its first exception to the arbitrator's award the agency contended that the award was contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 7503 and 7701 and the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596. It argued that the award was deficient because the delay was not a harmful error within the meaning of § 7701(c) which it maintains should be applied to suspensions of 14 days or less taken under § 7503. The Authority held that the harmful error rule of § 7701(c), as it pertains to disciplinary actions, applies in accordance with § 7121(e)(2) only to the more serious adverse actions enumerated in 5 U.S.C. § 7512 that are taken under § 7513. The rule does not apply to suspensions for 14 days or less taken under § 7503. The arbitrator was not required by law to find that the unwarranted delay in proposing disciplinary action constituted harmful error within the meaning of § 7701(c).

In its second exception the agency contended that the award was contrary to management's right to take disciplinary action. It argued that the arbitrator's setting aside of the grievant's suspension merely because of the lapse of time between the act of misconduct and the imposition of the suspension violates § 7106(a)(2)(A). The Authority found that this case involved review of final disciplinary action to determine whether the agency's eight month delay in imposing discipline resulted in an action which was arbitrary capricious, and unreasonable and which did not promote the efficiency of the service. The arbitrator determined that the suspension had resulted in such unwarranted disciplinary action and ruled that the suspension was not for just and sufficient cause. The arbitrator's award did not, as the agency asserted, amount to a statute of limitations provision which prevented the agency from investigating the alleged incident of misconduct and from acting to propose to suspend the grievant for 5 days. Therefore, the agency's argument provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

DIGEST NOTES

An agency violates the requirements of § 7121 when it refuses to continue to participate in proceedings before an arbitrator. Neither the language of § 7121 nor its legislative history provides a basis for excusing a party's continued participation in the procedures for the settlement of grievances. The agency's refusal to to continue to participate in the proceedings results in obstruction of the resolution of a grievance by binding arbitration, contrary to the mandate and intent of Congress.

When agency management at a higher level prevents agency management at a subordinate level of exclusive recognition from complying with its obligations under the Statute by "directive," "requirement," or "direction," the higher-level management entity violates § 7116(a)(1) and (8). Where the subordinate level entity is thus left with no discretion to comply with its statutory obligations, that entity will not also be found to have violated § 7116(a).

Agency Headquarters' "instruction," to its subordinate activity not to comply with an arbitrator's interim awards constituted a violation of § 7116(a)(1) and (8) on Headquarters' part. The Authority viewed the term "instruction" as the functional equivalent of of the terms "directive," "requirement," and "direction," which have been used most frequently in Authority decisions regarding interference violations of § 7116(a)(1). The Authority further found that the "instruction" afforded the subordinate activity no discretion to do otherwise, and rendered its noncompliance with the awards merely ministerial in nature. The subordinate's activity's action in following Headquarters' instruction did not constitute an independent violation of on § 7116(a)(1) and (8).

Although the agency admitted that it refused and failed to comply with the arbitrator's interim awards, the Authority did not find that in doing so it also refused and failed to consult or negotiate in good faith. The agency by its action, did not establish new conditions of employment requiring negotiation, but rather refused to proceed further with the arbitration process. Since these circumstances created no bargaining obligation the Authority dismissed the § 7116(a)(5) allegations.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority addresses for the first time the remedial authority of an arbitrator in resolving grievances disputing determinations by agencies to contract out agency work and holds that an arbitrator is without authority to order cancellation of a procurement action or to review an agency decision in the procurement process concerning a matter of agency judgment or discretion. In view of the substantial discretion vested in agency procurement officials, the paramount public interest in the efficient procurement of goods and services, and the avoidance of excessive costs recognized by both the courts and the Comptroller General, the Authority has determined that an arbitrator may not substitute his or her judgment for that of an agency with respect to the agency's ultimate decision whether to contract out. Similarly, any intermediate decision in the procurement process concerning a matter reserved to agency judgment and discretion also may not be set aside.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

An arbitrator may, in resolving a grievance concerning an agency's determination whether to contract out, in certain circumstances, direct an agency to reconstruct the procurement action. In order to direct an agency to undertake such a reconstruction, the arbitrator must find the following: (1) That in determining to contract out, the agency violated mandatory provisions of applicable procurement laws or regulations. Furthermore, these provisions must contain sufficiently specific standards to objectively analyze and review the agency's actions and permit an objective conclusion that the agency failed to comply with the requirements; and (2) That the agency's failure to comply with those requirements materially affected the final procurement decision and harmed unit employees. The Authority cautions that arbitrators must distinguish between permissible challenges based on material defects in aspects of the procurement process specifically prescribed by law or regulation and improper challenges attacking the exercise of managerial discretion. An agency in taking the action required by such an award must reconstruct the procurement process in accordance with the provisions which were previously not complied with and must determine on reconstruction whether the decision to contract out is now in accordance with law and regulation. If the decision to contract out can no longer be justified, the agency must determine whether considerations of cost, performance, an disruption override cancelling the procurement action and take whatever action is appropriate on the basis of that determination.

The Authority determined that an arbitrator's award insofar as it directed the activity to cancel the procurement action involved was deficient and must be set aside. The Authority noted, however, that the arbitrator expressly found that the activity violated certain specific requirements of applicable law and regulation in the development and comparison of costs in reaching its decision. The arbitrator also effectively found the activity's violations harmed the employees involved and that the violations materially affected the activity's final decision. Thus the arbitrator established sufficient basis for directing the activity to reconstruct the procurement action.

A proposal that would raise the level of authority for both proposing and effecting removal actions is nonnegotiable and inconsistent with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The proposal would require non-bargaining unit personnel to perform duties (propose and effectuate removal actions) which they otherwise would not be required to perform. The Authority has consistently held that proposals prescribing specific duties to be performed by particular non-bargaining unit personnel in an agency directly interfere with management's right to assign work. The proposal is not a negotiable procedure, under § 7106(b)(2), as the union asserted.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Robert H. Mount filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition.[1]

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration claiming, among other things, that the 14-day suspension of the grievant could not be upheld because the records used as a basis for the suspension were not placed in a particular personnel file as required by the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Arbitrator agreed. He concluded that the suspension could not be upheld because the summary of the investigation had not been placed in the proper personnel file prior to the proposed suspension as required by the agreement. For this reason the Arbitrator sustained the grievance, overturned the suspension, and ordered that the grievant be made whole.

[1] In its opposition, the Union argues, among other things, that the Agency's exception should be dismissed because under the parties' collective bargaining agreement, exceptions assertedly cannot be filed to expedited arbitration awards. The Authority, however, has previously rejected this argument and concludes that this matter is properly before the Authority for decision. Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, 16 FLRA 552 (1984).

III. EXCEPTION

In its exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7121(e)(2) of the Statute and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(c) as interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court in Cornelius v. Nutt, 105 S. Ct. 2882 (1985). Essentially, the Agency argues that the award is deficient because the Arbitrator failed to make the finding that the violation of the agreement constituted "harmful error" within the meaning of section 7701(c).

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

In American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760 and Social Security Administration, Northeastern Program Service Center, 22 FLRA No. 19 (1986), the Authority was presented with a virtually identical case involving the same Agency and the same provision of the parties' national collective bargaining agreement. In Northeastern Program Service Center the arbitrator determined that the activity had violated the same requirement of the parties' collective bargaining agreement by failing to place all records relied on for the 10-day suspension of the grievant in the proper file, and the arbitrator for that reason directed that the suspension be rescinded and the grievant be made whole. As in this case, the Agency filed exceptions to that award contending, among other things, that the award was deficient because the arbitrator failed to make the finding that the violation of the agreement constituted harmful error. In rejecting this argument, the Authority explained the proper application of the harmful-error rule as it pertains to the arbitration of disciplinary actions. The Authority explained that the rule applies in accordance with section 7121(e)(2) of the Statute only to the more serious adverse actions enumerated in 5 U.S.C. § 7512[2] that are taken under section 7513; the rule does not apply to suspensions for 14 days or less. In Northeastern Program Service Center the Authority therefore concluded that the arbitrator was not required by law to find that the violation of the parties' agreement constituted harmful error and that his failure to do so provided no basis for finding the award contrary to law as alleged by the Agency.

[2] Section 7512 applies to a removal, a suspension for more than 14 days, a reduction-in-grade, a reduction-in-pay, and a furlough of 30 days or less.

In this case, the Authority concludes for the same reasons set forth in Northeastern Program Service Center that the Arbitrator likewise was not required by law to find that the violation of the parties' agreement constituted harmful error and that his failure to do so likewise provides no basis for finding the award contrary to law.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the Agency's exception is denied.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the interest arbitration award of Arbitrator Robert G. Howlett filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reasons that follow, it has been determined that the Union's exceptions are dismissed as untimely.

The Arbitrator's award in this case is dated January 17, 1985, and appears to have been served on the parties by mail on the same day. In his award the Arbitrator ordered, among other things, that certain pilots employed by the Agency were to receive an annual stipend provided the Union agreed to withdraw five pending unfair labor practice charges. In February 1985, both parties requested clarification of the award. The Arbitrator responded on March 15, 1985, and in response to the request for clarification of this portion of the order essentially reiterated his earlier award. The Union then filed its exceptions with the Authority on April 3, 1985.

Under section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended,1/ and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended,[2/] which amendments are applicable to these exceptions, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of the time limit involved in this case, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award of January 17, 1985, had to be filed with the Authority by the close of business on February 20, 1985.

1/ Section 7122(b) of the Statute was amended by the Civil Service Miscellaneous Amendments Act of 1983 (Pub. L. No. 98-224, § 4, 98 Stat. 47, 48 (1984) to provide that the 30-day period for filing exceptions to an arbitrator's award begins on the date the award is served on the filing party.

The Authority has repeatedly indicated that a party's request for clarification of an award does not operate to extend the time limit for filing exceptions. Portsmouth Naval Shipyard and Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, 15 FLRA 181 (1984). Only when an arbitrator in response to a clarification request modifies an award and the modification gives rise to the deficiencies alleged in the exceptions has the Authority held that the filing period for exceptions began with the arbitrator's response to the request for clarification. See U.S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management, Eugene District Office and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1911, 6 FLRA 401, 403 n.2 (1981). In this case, however, it is clear that in his clarification of March 15 the Arbitrator did not modify his award of January 17 so as to give rise to the alleged deficiencies. To the contrary, the Arbitrator essentially reiterated his earlier award. Thus, the Union is in effect seeking Authority review of the January 17, 1985 award and the exceptions filed on April 3, 1985 are clearly untimely.

Accordingly, and apart from other considerations, the Union's exceptions are dismissed.

For the Authority.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Howard V. Finston filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievant was suspended for 14 days on charges that he engaged in conduct prejudicial to the Government, as the result of argumentative conversation and subsequent physical confrontation with a member of the public, and that he failed to perform assigned duties in a professional manner, as the result of the use of excessive force by kicking that individual after he had fallen to the ground. A grievance contesting the suspension was filed and ultimately submitted to arbitration where the Arbitrator stated the issue as whether the suspension was for just cause. The Arbitrator determined that the evidence failed to establish that the grievant physically abused the individual involved or acted in a manner clearly inconsistent with agency policy or guidelines. Instead, the Arbitrator determined that the situation reflected a misjudgment by the grievant of the individual's obstinancy and a temporary loss of composure. The Arbitrator also identified two mitigating factors: (1) the grievant's record of no previous disciplinary actions, and (2) the several month delay between the alleged misconduct and the imposition of discipline by the Agency. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator found that the 14-day suspension was not for just cause, reduced the discipline to an oral admonishment, and ordered that the grievant be made whole.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to law because the Arbitrator applied an erroneous standard of review. The Agency maintains that with respect to the serious adverse actions enumerated in 5 U.S.C. § 7512,[1] the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) under section 7701 reviews a disciplinary action to determine whether it is arbitrary, capricious, unreasonable, or clearly excessive. The Agency maintains that the Authority should require arbitrators to apply the same standard to suspensions of 14 days or less under 5 U.S.C. chapter 75, subchapter I, and find the award deficient as contrary to management's right to take disciplinary action because the Arbitrator failed to apply such standard.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has repeatedly held that the standards set forth in section 7701, pertaining to the appellate review procedures of MSPB, do not apply to the arbitration of suspensions of 14 days or less. The Authority has explained that under section 7121(e)(2) of the Statute, an arbitrator is governed by the standards set forth in section 7701(c). However, as it pertains to disciplinary actions, section 7121(e)(2) only applies to the more serious adverse actions enumerated in section 7512 and therefore neither that section nor the standards set forth in section 7701(c) apply to suspensions of 14 days or less as in this case. Headquarters, Fort Monroe, Fort Monroe, Virginia and National Association of Government Employees, Local R4-11, 13 FLRA 405 (1983); Naval Weapons Station, Yorktown, Virginia and National Association of Government Employees, Local R4-96, 13 FLRA 133 (1983). Thus, contrary to the Agency's exception, we find that the award is not contrary to law because the Arbitrator failed to apply the standard of review which it asserts is required by section 7701.

[1] Section 7512 applies to a removal, a suspension for more than 14 days, a reduction-in-grade, a reduction-in-pay, and a furlough of 30 days or less.

Furthermore, consistent with the review of arbitration awards by Federal courts in the private sector, the Authority has uniformly held that unless a specific standard of proof or review is required, an arbitrator may establish whatever standard the arbitrator considers appropriate and the award will not be found deficient on that basis. Social Security Administration and Local 1760, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 17 FLRA 1063 (1985); Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Europe and Overseas Education Association, 4 FLRA 412 (1980). Based on this precedent, we conclude that this exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In the second exception the Agency contends that the award is inconsistent with the Agency's table of offenses and discipline. The Agency maintains that the table provides for discipline for the first offense of conduct prejudicial to the Government ranging from a 14-day suspension to removal. The Agency argues that the award is therefore deficient by mitigating the range of discipline for such misconduct below that provided by the table.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that this exception does not provide any basis for finding the award deficient. In arguing that the Arbitrator improperly mitigated the range of discipline for conduct prejudicial to the Government, the Agency does not take proper account of the Arbitrator's specific finding in this case. In particular, the Arbitrator found that the evidence failed to establish that the grievant had engaged in any conduct prejudicial to the Government as was charged by the Agency. Thus, apart from any other considerations, the Agency fails to establish that the award is inconsistent with the table of offenses and discipline.

V. THIRD EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In the third and final exception, the Agency contends that the award is deficient because the Arbitrator improperly mitigated the discipline on grounds of delay. Essentially, the Agency argues that the award is deficient because the Arbitrator failed to make an assertedly required finding that the delay constituted harmful error within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 7701(c).

In its opposition the Union first maintains that to the extent that the harmful-error rule might be applied to a suspension of 14 days or less, it is a consideration only when an agency has supported that its disciplinary action is for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service. In this case the Union argues that the Arbitrator found that the suspension was not for just cause and that therefore the additional finding that there was an unwarranted delay is unnecessary to support the award. However, the Union also states that Article 28, Section 1B of the parties' national collective bargaining agreement provides that "disciplinary action shall be carried out in a prompt and timely manner." Thus, the Union argues that the Arbitrator properly enforced this provision in mitigating the suspension on finding that the Agency failed promptly to impose disciplinary action.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In agreement with the Union, the Authority concludes that whether the Agency established that the grievant engaged in the conduct with which he was charged is separate from and independent of any asserted procedural error. It is not clear from the award whether the procedural error of unwarranted delay served to further mitigate the suspension or only to separately support mitigation. Nevertheless, we find that, at a minimum, the award is primarily based on and properly supported by the independent finding of the Arbitrator that the evidence failed to establish that the grievant physically abused the individual involved or acted in a manner clearly inconsistent with agency policy or guidelines. To the extent that the Arbitrator mitigated the suspension on the basis of the failure promptly to impose discipline as required by the parties' agreement, we conclude that no basis is provided for finding the award deficient as alleged by the Agency in this exception.

Consistent with the decisions previously cited regarding the standard of review in arbitrations of suspensions of 14 days or less, the Authority likewise has held that the harmful-error rule of section 7701(c) does not apply to the arbitration of such disciplinary actions. As with the standard of review pertaining to disciplinary actions, the rule applies in accordance with section 7121(e)(2) of the Statute only to the more serious adverse actions enumerated in section 7512. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760 and Social Security Administration, Northeastern Program Service Center, 22 FLRA No. 19 (1986). On this basis the Authority specifically concluded in Northeastern Program Service Center that the arbitrator was not required by law to find that the violation of the parties' collective bargaining agreement in the process of disciplining the grievant constituted harmful error. Accordingly, the Authority further found that the arbitrator's failure to make such a finding did not provide any basis for finding the award rescinding the 10-day suspension of the grievant contrary to law.

We therefore conclude in this case that for the same reasons set forth in Northeastern Program Service Center, the Arbitrator was not required by law to find that the unwarranted delay in imposing discipline constituted harmful error. His failure to make such a finding therefore provides no basis for finding the award contrary to law.

VI. DECISION

For these reasons the Agency's exceptions are denied.[2]

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority based on exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the Respondents. The General Counsel filed a brief opposing the exceptions. The complaint alleged that the Respondents violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by changing the hours of work and the starting and quitting times of unit employees without bargaining over the changes as requested by the Union, and also by refusing to bargain concerning a ground rule proposal that preparation time for negotiations be on official time. The Judge found that the Respondents had violated the Statute as alleged, and recommended that they be ordered to rescind the changes in work hours and make whole those employees who would have earned premium pay but for the unilateral changes in their hours. The Respondents excepted only to the recommended remedy.

II. Facts

On April 29, 1984, the Director of the Activity's Regional Office Center implemented a change in the hours of the night shift and the p.m. shift. The change involved moving the night shift hours on Sunday night/Monday morning from 11:45 p.m. - 7:45 a.m. to midnight - 8:00 a.m. Also, a regularly scheduled 15 minutes of overtime was added to the 4:00 p.m. - midnight (p.m.) shift on Sundays because of a need for the two shifts to overlap 15 minutes. Because by law[1] a nurse working any part of a period from midnight Saturday to midnight Sunday receives premium pay for the entire 8 hours worked on the shift, the effect of the change was to eliminate 8 hours of premium pay for nurses who would have worked the 11:45 p.m. Sunday to 7:45 a.m. Monday shift but under the new plan would begin their Monday shift at midnight Sunday.

The record, as more fully discussed by the Judge in her Decision, also details the allegation regarding ground rules negotiations.

III. Administrative Law Judge's Decision

The Judge found that the Respondents had engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommended that they be ordered to cease and desist from the unfair labor practices, rescind the changes in hours, and make whole the employees who lost premium pay as a result of the unfair labor practices.

IV. Positions of the Parties

A. Respondents

The Respondents except only to that portion of the Judge's remedy which would require reimbursement for premium pay lost as a result of the unfair labor practices. They argue that the "but for" test required by the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596(b)(1), has not been met. That is, Respondents assert that the General Counsel has not established the amount of pay the employees would have earned but for the unilateral change in hours. Further, there is no certainty that the employees would have continued to receive the premium pay at issue if the matter had been negotiated.

[1] 38 U.S.C. 4107(e)(3).

B. General Counsel

The General Counsel filed a brief in opposition to the exceptions, and in support of the Judge's Decision.

V. Analysis

A. The Judge's findings that Respondents violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute

The Authority has reviewed the findings and conclusions of the Judge with regard to the violations of section 7116(a) (1) and (5) of the Statute alleged in the complaint and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations for the reasons she stated. The Authority notes that no exceptions were filed to this aspect of the Judge's decision.

B. The Judge's recommended remedy

The Judge recommended that the Respondents be directed to cease and desist from the unfair labor practices found, to reestablish the unilaterally changed hours of work, and to make whole those employees adversely affected by the unilateral change in their conditions of employment. The Authority agrees. The Respondents initially refused to bargain over a proposed ground rule providing that preparation time for negotiations would be on official time. As noted by the Judge, this ground rule was identical to a ground rule which had been used by the parties in local negotiations on two previous occasions and the proposed rule was fully consistent with decisions of the Authority which hold generally that the granting of official time to prepare for negotiations is a negotiable matter under section 7131(d) of the Statute.[2] After the Respondents refused to bargain over ground rules, they unilaterally implemented a change in the employees' starting and quitting times which the Authority also has consistently held to be negotiable.[3] Since the decision itself to change the starting and quitting times of an established shift is within the duty to bargain, and the Respondents failed and refused to bargain concerning such change, the Authority finds that a status quo ante remedy is appropriate and will best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.[4]

[2] Environmental Protection Agency, 16 FLRA 602 (1984) remanded to Authority for clarification regarding remedy, sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees v. FLRA, No. 85-1057 (D.C. Cir. February 5, 1986). The Authority issued a supplemental decision affirming the original disposition in Environmental Protection Agency, 21 FLRA No. 98 (1986). See also Association of Civilian Technicians, Granite State Chapter, 7 FLRA 241 (1981); American Federation of Government Employees, Local 225, 4 FLRA 148 (1980).

Finally, with regard to the make whole remedy recommended by the Judge, the Authority notes that the General Counsel has established that but for the Respondents' unilateral change in starting times, as detailed above, particular employees would not have suffered a loss of pay. Thus, the requirements of the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, have been satisfied.[5] In this regard,

The Authority has wide discretion to fashion remedies under section 7105(g)(3) and section 7118(a)(7) of the Statute, including status quo ante remedies where appropriate. the evidence established that management's change in the starting time for nurses on the Sunday night shift from 11:45 p.m. to 12:00 midnight eliminated the 25 percent premium pay that otherwise would have been paid to the nurses who worked that shift. Therefore, but for management's unilateral change in the employees' conditions of employment, at least 28 nurses who worked the Sunday night shift since April 29, 1984, would have earned between $17.50 and $27.76 each in premium pay for each Sunday night shift worked had the starting time remained 11:45 p.m. Further supporting the conclusion that the backpay remedy is not speculative, the Respondents stipulated that records exist which would permit identification both of the employees qualified for such back pay and the amount of back pay to which each employee is entitled. Finally, while the Authority notes that management implemented the change for reasons of economy, there is no indication in the record of other circumstances which might affect the appropriateness of a back pay order.

C. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order, as explained above.

DECISION

This is a proceeding under Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1192, 5 U.S.C. 7101 et seq. (1982), commonly known as the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, and hereinafter referred to as the Statute, and the rules and regulations issued thereunder and published at 5 CFR 2411 et seq.

In Case No. 7-CA-40426, an unfair labor practice charge was filed by the Charging Party (also referred to herein as the Union or AFGE) on May 1, 1984 and amended on June 18, 1984. In Case No. 7-CA-40430, an unfair labor practice charge was filed by the Charging Party on May 3, 1984. These charges were investigated by the Regional Director, Region VII, of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (hereinafter, the Authority), which, on June 29, 1984 served upon Respondents a complaint consolidating the two cases.

The complaint alleges that Respondents have and are violating Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute[1] by (1) unilaterally implementing a change in conditions of employment concerning the hours of work and starting and quitting times of bargaining unit employees without first bargaining, as requested by the Union, concerning such changes; and (2) by refusing to bargain, as requested by the Union, concerning ground rule proposals including one proposal that preparation time for negotiations be on official time.

Respondent entered a general denial as to the alleged violations.

On September 19, 1984, in Fargo, North Dakota, a hearing was held at which the parties appeared, entered into various stipulations of fact, examined witnesses, and adduced documentary evidence. Briefs were filed by the Respondents and the General Counsel on October 19, 1984. Based upon the record made in this proceeding, my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and the briefs, I enter the following findings of fact and conclusions of law and recommend the entry of the following order.

12. The parties to this proceeding entered into a formal stipulation of facts that was received into evidence as G.C. Exh. 41. It includes the following paragraphs. Additional admissions and facts adduced through testimony, exhibits and briefs are indicated in brackets with a transcript, exhibit, or brief page number following.

(1). By letter dated September 16, 1983, Chief, Nursing Service Irene Bloom established as official policy, effective October 2, 1983, a past practice by which nurses on the night shift worked the hours of 11:45 PM to 7:45 AM (G.C. Exh. 4).

(2). By letter dated January 12, 1984, Center Director F.E. Gathman notified the Union that effective February 5, 1984, Bloom would eliminate the 11:45 PM - 7:45 AM hours of work for nurses on the night shift and would schedule routinely 15 minutes of overtime for the nurses working the PM Shift hours of 4:00 PM - 12:00 PM midnight. (G.C. Exh. 5). By letter dated January 16, 1984, the Union demanded to bargain over this proposed change (G.C. Exh. 6).

(3). On January 20, 1984, Gathman notified the Union that the change proposed by letter dated January 12, 1984, had been rescinded. (G.C. Exh. 8). However, by letter dated February 2, 1984, Gathman notified the Union that, effective March 18, 1984, the hours of the night shift and PM shift would be changed according to the proposed schedule attached to Gathman's notice (G.C. Exh. 9). Essentially, the proposed change would regularly schedule 15 minutes of overtime for the 4:00 PM - 12:00 PM midnight PM shift on Sundays and would change the hours of work for the Sunday night shift nurses from 11:45 PM - 7:45 AM to that of 12:00 PM midnight to 8:00 AM.

(4). By virtue of 38 U.S.C. 4107(e)(3), a nurse who performs duty during any part of that period of time from midnight Saturday to midnight Sunday receives an additional premium pay at the rate of 25% of the nurse's hourly rate of base pay for each of every hour worked during that shift. Thus, a nurse who works from 11:45 PM Sunday to 7:45 AM Monday is entitled to receive 25% premium pay for the entire 8 hours worked on that shift. An effect of management's proposed change would eliminate 8 hours of premium pay for nurses who otherwise would have worked the hours of 11:45 PM Sunday - 7:45 AM Monday. (G.C. Exh. 13).

(5). On February 7, 1984, the Union requested bargaining over the proposed change dated February 2, 1984 by Gathman. (G.C. Exh. 10-A). The Union did not receive a reply from Gathman or other management representative in response to the bargaining request. On February 28, 1984, the Union again demanded bargaining (G.C. Exh. 11). The Union also protested to Gathman that management had instructed head nurses on or about February 28 and March 1, 1984 to proceed with and post the proposed implementation of the new schedule, even though negotiations had not yet occurred. The Union also objected that management's primary motive for changing the night shift's hours of work was to eliminate the 25% premium pay for nurses who worked the Sunday night shift. [Respondents admit that "budget restraints entered into the scheduling" (R. Br. 2)].

(6). By letter dated February 29, 1984, Gathman informed the Union that management would meet with the Union on the specific issues of (1) adverse monetary impact on affected employees and (2) regularly scheduled overtime. Gathman informed the Union that management merely was assigning employees to existing tours of duty, but was not changing starting and quitting times for employees working on the PM and night shifts (G.C. Exh. 12).

(7). As of February 29, 1984, all nurses who worked the night shift worked from 11:45 PM - 7:45 AM except for the number 2 nurse at two posts of duty who worked from 12:00 PM midnight to 8:00 AM. There was no previous practice or policy whereby nurses on the PM shift would work the hours of 4:00 PM - 12:15 AM on a regularly scheduled basis. There was no previous practice of regularly scheduled involuntary overtime (G.C. Exh. 7).

(8). After an exchange of additional bargaining requests and proposals, the parties agreed to meet on March 27, 1984, concerning:

(1) The scheduling of work hours for 2 part-time nurses.

(2) The proposed changes affecting nurses on the PM and night shifts.

(3) Regularly scheduled overtime.

(4) Official time for Union officers and steward for representational purposes (G.C. Exh. 10-B, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18).

Management rescinded the proposed implementation of the changes in hours of work for nurses on the PM and night shift, which was scheduled to become effective on March 18, 1984.

(9). During the meeting on March 27, 1984, Union representatives Larney Werth and Debra Cederholm submitted proposed written ground rules proposals for negotiation to management representatives Irene Bloom and Dick Schmiesing (G.C. Exh. 22). On March 27 the parties did not negotiate concerning the substance, impact, or implementation of the (1) scheduling of work hours for 2 part-time nurses, (2) proposed changes in hours of work affecting nurses on the PM and night shifts, (3) regularly scheduled overtime, or (4) official time for Union officers and stewards for representational purposes. The parties did discuss the Union's ground rules proposals. With respect to Union ground rule proposal number 4, management's representatives considered this proposal to be in the nature of mid-term bargaining, considered the proposal to be inappropriate for the purpose of these negotiations, and determined that management was not obligated to bargain concerning proposal number 4. Accordingly, management's representative would not bargain concerning proposal number 4 on March 27, 1984.

(10) By letter dated March 28, 1984, Gathman notified the Union that the meeting held on March 27 was to provide the Union an opportunity to present its views and recommendations, in accordance with Section 7117(d)(2) and (3) of the Statute, regarding the proposed changes in hours of work, that the Union presented no views and recommendations regarding adverse impact or implementation of the proposed changes in hours of work for unit employees, that the Union used the opportunity on March 27 to enter into negotiations concerning official time, that the proposed hours of work for nurses on the PM and night shifts would take effect beginning April 29, 1984, and that management saw no need for further meetings on the issue of hours of work (G.C. Exh. 21).

(11). On March 27, 1984, the parties had mutually agreed to meet again on April 2 to continue discussions (G.C. Exh. 22). Management did not attend that scheduled meeting on April 2 (G.C. Exh. 21, 23, 24).

(12). By letter dated March 30, 1984, the Union protested management's refusal to bargain on March 27 over proposal number 4 of the proposed ground rules, and repeated its request that management negotiate over the subjects which the parties had agreed to and met to bargain over (G.C. Exh. 22). The Union attached to this letter the proposed ground rules as submitted to management on March 27 and with notations of discussions (G.C. Exh. 22).

(13). Union ground rule proposal number 4, as submitted to management on March 27, 1984, was identical to ground rule number 4 which the parties had agreed to previously on two separate occasions on October 24, 1983, and November 22, 1983 (G.C. Exh. 36 and 37). In part these previous ground rules agreements concerned bargaining over the impact and implementation of the Annual Leave Nursing Service Policies (G.C. Exh. 37). Management representatives Steven Nelson and Irene Bloom negotiated these two previous ground rules agreements.

(14). By letter dated April 12, 1984, the Union again demanded to bargain prior to the implementation of proposed and scheduled changes in hours of work (G.C. Exh. 25). The Union also objected to the fact that management had posted in nursing work areas the new schedule of hours of work on or about April 11, 1984 (G.C. Exh. 25 and 26).

(15). By letter dated April 12, 1984, Gathman informed the Union that management would meet with the Union in regard to impact and implementation bargaining on the following:

(a) Official time for Union officers and stewards.

(b) Hours of work for nurses on the PM and night shift.

(c) Part-time hours of work for RNs (G.C. Exh. 27).

Gathman also recommended that the Union should contact Ray Johnson to arrange ground rules for impact and implementation bargaining (G.C. Exh. 27).

(16). By letter dated April 18, 1984, the Union requested that management rescind the scheduled April 29 implementation date concerning the change in hours of work for nurses on the PM and night shifts (G.C. Exh. 8). Also, the Union informed management that the proposed change in hours of work for nurses on the PM and night shifts was subject to bargaining over the substance, impact, and implementation of that change (G.C. Exh. 28). By letter dated April 18, 1984, Gathman responded to the Union's letter of April 18, but did not agree to rescind the effective implementation date of April 29, 1984 (G.C. Exh. 29).

(17). On April 26, 1984, the parties' representatives met as agreed. Bloom and Johnson represented the agency and Werth, Debra Cederholm, and Doris Nelson represented the Union. Again, the Union submitted written ground rules proposals (G.C. Exh. 30). The parties discussed these proposals. Management's representatives would not negotiate concerning the Union's proposed ground rule number 4, and informed the Union that ground rule number 4 was not an appriate [sic] subject to bargain over. Management did not declare the proposal nonnegotiable.

The parties adjourned the April 26 meeting to April 27. Management representative Johnson agreed to review Authority decisions referenced by the Union representatives concerning the negotiability of ground rule proposal number 4. The Union also made it clear that the Union wanted a ground rules agreement completed prior to commencing negotiations over the substantive issues for which the parties had agreed to meet.

(18). On April 27, 1984, during the meeting between the parties' representatives, the agency's representatives again would not negotiate over Union ground rule proposal number 4. The Veterans Administration Central Office, Washington, D.C., had advised Johnson that the VAM & ROC, Fargo, ND, not negotiate over the Union's ground rule proposal number 4. Accordingly, the agency's representatives informed the Union that the agency had concluded that ground rule proposal number 4 was not an appropriate subject for bargaining, and the agency's representatives refused to bargain over it.

(19). The meeting on April 27, 1984, ended without negotiations concerning ground rule proposal number 4 or any of the underlying substantive matters which were to be negotiated (G.C. Exh. 32).

(20). By letter dated April 28, 1984, the Union repeated its desire to negotiate over the proposed changes in hours of work for nurses on the PM and night shifts, insisted upon the right to negotiate a ground rules agreement first and to negotiate over ground rules proposal number 4, and requested that the agency postpone the April 29 implementation date (G.C. Exh. 32).

(21). Effective April 29, 1984, Respondent did implement the proposed change in hours of work for nurses on the PM and night shifts.

(22). By letter dated May 16, 1984, the Union repeated its demand to bargain concerning the subject of official time, starting and quitting times of nurses on the PM and night shifts, and the starting and quitting times of part-time Registered Nurses (G.C. Exh. 33). The parties exchanged proposed dates and times for such a meeting, but have not met for this purpose (G.C. Exh. 34 and 35).

13. Local 3884's proposed ground rule number 4 is as follows: "Preparation time for negotiations and for intent statements will be on official time." See attachment to G.C. Exh. 22.

14. The reason for the overlap of shifts for nurses is to accomplish the narcotics count. Two persons must count narcotics, one coming on duty and one going off. Prior to September 16, 1983, there was a "gentleman's agreement" that the oncoming night shift nurse would come in 15 minutes early at 11:45 and count narcotics with the nurse on the PM shift, and then the night shift nurse would leave at 7:45 in the morning (Tr. 99). No overtime was paid or compensatory time granted to the nurses under the "gentleman's agreement" (Tr. 99). Since April 29, 1984, the overlap to count narcotics, on Sundays only, is accomplished by having the PM nurses work until 12:15 AM on Monday, using "mandatory overtime" (Tr. 77).

15(a). The agreements under which the parties are operating (see finding 4, above) are silent as to any ground rules bargaining nights. AFGE and VA DC have been negotiating a master agreement for several years. Meanwhile, the bargaining obligation of the parties is governed by the Interim Memorandum of Agreement. See finding 4(a), above. Article 6 of the Interim Agreement provides that any local changes in personnel policies, practices or other matters affecting conditions of employment initiated by VA management at its local facilities, which are not covered by a local agreement, shall be transmitted to local union representatives, and that bargaining obligations will continue over such matters at the local level between local management and designated local officials. See G.C. Exh. 3, page 3. The local agreement between VA Fargo and the Union's predecessor (see finding 4(b), above) requires local bargaining concerning personnel policies, practices and matters affecting working conditions of nurses in the bargaining unit. See G.C. Exh. 2, Article III, Section 6 and 10.

(b). During the meetings between the parties on April 26 and 27, 1984, management's representatives did not point to any provision in the national Interim Agreement between VA DC and AFGE, which arguably precluded or barred local negotiations over any of the proposed ground rules. In fact, Respondents' evidence conceded that Article 6 of the national Interim Agreement subjects to bargaining at the local level any local changes in employment conditions, including the nurses' hours of work and starting and quitting times, initiated by Respondents. (Tr. 126, 132-133 and 137). It is essentially uncontroverted that both the pre-existing local contract and the national Interim Agreement give AFGE Local 3884 the right to propose and negotiate ground rules. (See Tr. 130 and 133-134). Respondents' witness Ray Johnson specifically testified that neither the local predecessor union's contract nor the Interim Agreement prohibited or precluded bargaining at the local level over the Union's ground rule proposal concerning official time to prepare for negotiations. (See Tr. 135). Mr. Johnson also acknowledged that there is no provision in the national Interim Agreement which would deny AFGE Local 3884 the authority, or would relieve VA Fargo of the obligation, to bargain over the disputed ground rule proposal concerning negotiations where local management is initiating a local change in hours of work. (See Tr. 138-139). Moreover, Mr. Johnson acknowledged that management was unwilling to negotiate the proposed ground rule on preparatory time for the union negotiators, even if it applied only to the negotiations over the VA Fargo-initiated change concerning hours and starting and quitting times for nurses. See Tr. 146-147.

(c). At the hearing Mr. Johnson attempted to link on-going national negotiations between VA DC and AFGE with the "appropriateness" of local bargaining over the disputed ground rule proposal concerning official time. See Tr. 138-139. The parties stipulated that such national negotiations have not resulted in an agreement which was in effect at times material to this case. See Tr. 139-142. Mr. Johnson also acknowledged that the on-going national negotiations have not addressed official time in terms of local negotiations over ground rules, and have not prohibited negotiations at the local level over official time. (Tr. 127, 140 and 144). Ultimately, Mr. Johnson stated that VA DC had instructed VA Fargo not to bargain over the disputed ground rule proposal because management perceived this to be a Union-initiated proposal concerning substantive matters which involved mid-term bargaining. (Tr. 143-144). VA Fargo in fact recognized that this was a ground rule proposal which the Union had submitted in connection with exercising its right to negotiate over management-initiated changes in conditions of employment. See Tr. 132, 133, 137, 144 and 145-146. Based upon instructions from VA DC however, Mr. Johnson determined that, since VA Fargo had not initiated a change in the use of official time to prepare for negotiations, then it was inappropriate for AFGE Local 3884 to initiate such a proposal, even in the context of a ground rule pertaining only to negotiations over other local management-initiated changes. See Tr. 122-123, 137-138, and 143-144.

16(a). A primary purpose and effect of management's change in the hours of work and starting and quitting times for nurses on the Sunday PM and night shifts is to eliminate the 25% premium pay each Sunday since April 29, 1984, for all those nurses who work the night shift. Uncontroverted evidence showed that at least 28 identifiable nurses have worked the Sunday night shift since April 29, 1984, and that such nurses would have earned between $17.40 and $27.76 each in premium pay for each

Sunday night shift worked had the starting time remained 11:45 PM. See G.C. Exh. 40 and Tr. 88-91. At the hearing, Respondents stipulated that should a backpay order be deemed appropriate, VA Fargo possesses accurate records upon which the Authority can rely in determining which nurses worked a particular Sunday night shift, and what pay such nurses received. See Tr. 94-95.

(b). Another management reason given for the change in hours here involved is that the old schedule worked out so that, in one of the weeks, nurses would only work 39 hours and 45 minutes, whereas the nurses involved were on full-time status and supposed to work 40 hours a week. See Tr. 125.

17. The significance to having proposed ground rule number 4 negotiated before reaching the substantive issues was attested to by Mr. Werth. See Tr. 41-42, establishing that:

> Q. (BY MR. GONZALES) Now, having explained what you were negotiating in terms of ground rules, specifically in reference to the fourth proposal which involved official time for preparing to negotiate, would you explain for the benefit of the Administrative Law Judge what is the particular significance of that proposal with respect to negotiations at the V.A. Hospital here in Fargo between the Union and Management?
> A. There's a great significance to this particular proposal as to number one, also the same reason. Nurses work rotating shifts. They work three shifts a day. The hospital is open 24 hours a day and it's tough to assemble a negotiating team for one thing. If you don't have an agreement that they're going to be off on official time it makes it tougher and you operate at a real disadvantage. And in regard to number four, at these meetings that we came to negotiate on, we came on our own time. And if you don't have time to prepare it and you don't have official time, or official time to negotiate and you worked your own shift, in one day time gets a little bit scarce. It reeks a real hardship on the nurses and negotiators because Management is working their administrative shift, 7:00 or 8:00 to 4:30. We have to prepare for negotiations. We have to negotiate on our own time and unless we get something in writing that stipulates otherwise it just gets to be a real hardship and puts us at a disadvantage when it come to bargaining.
> Q. In that connection have you ever proposed to Management that they negotiate at your shift, at the night shift?
> A. Many times I've asked that they negotiate with me on my schedule of tour of duty. Which I've been working since 1977.

Mr. Werth, the President and chief negotiator for Local 3884 and Ms. Cederholm, the Vice President of Local 3884 were on the negotiating team for the management-initiated proposed changes here at issue, and both are nurses assigned to the night shift. Management has steadfastly refused to bargain, during the night shift.

Discussion and Conclusions

1. The parties do not dispute the well-established principle that an agency may not unilaterally change an existing condition of employment, absent agreement or impasse following good-faith bargaining. See, e.g. Office Program Operations, Field Operations, Social Security Administration, San Francisco Region, 9 FLRA 73, 95 (1982). The condition of employment in this controversy concerns the admittedly established practice and policy whereby nurses on the Sunday night shift worked from 11:45 PM Sunday to 7:45 AM Monday and nurses on the Sunday PM shift worked from 4:00 PM to 12:00 PM. This practice apparently had existed for some time, as a "gentleman's agreement" prior to its maturing into an officially recognized schedule in 1983. The general prohibition against unilateral changes in terms and conditions of employment includes those conditions established by past practice. United States Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Des Moines District, 13 FLRA 296, 307 (1983). In particular, an agency is obligated to negotiate fully, prior to implementation, over the decision to change hours of work and the starting and quitting times of previously existing shifts, as well as over the procedures to be observed in the implementation of, and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by that decision. See, e.g., U.S. Customs Service, Region V, New Orleans, Louisiana, 9 FLRA 116, 118-119 (1982). Within that right to negotiate over the substance of an agency's decision to change starting and quitting times, a union may even object to the change and propose that the existing hours of work be retained. See, National Treasury Employees Union, and Internal Revenue Service, Kansas City Service Center, 1 FLRA 927 (1979). See also, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2875 and Department of Commerce, NOAA, National Marine Fisheries Services, Southeast Fisheries Center, Miami, Florida, 5 FLRA 441-446 (1981).

It is undisputed that proper notice of the intended change was served upon the local union in accordance with the provisions of the National Interim Agreement. It is also undisputed that AFGE Local 3884 promptly and persistently demanded that VA Fargo bargain, prior to implementation, concerning the substance, impact and implementation of the management-initiated change in starting and quitting times. Although VA Fargo met with the Union on three occasions prior to changing the hours of work on April 29, no bargaining over the substantive issues took place. In fact, it is clear there was no discussion of the proposed changes in conditions of employment. It is also clear, and not really controverted, that the changes were bargainable as to substance, impact and implementation and had a "more than de minimis" impact on bargaining-unit employees. See Internal Revenue Service, 16 FLRA 928, fn. 1 (1984).

Ordinarily, the above facts would require a holding that a violation of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) had occurred. Here, however, the evidence shows that Respondents stood ready and willing to bargain over the substantive issues, but Local 3884 refused to do so until bargaining took place over its proposed ground rule number 4, that preparation time for negotiations and for intent statements be on official time. Management negotiated, at some length, over other ground rules proposed by Locals 3884; and agreement was reached as to them. However, VA Fargo balked over negotiating proposed ground rule number 4 and claimed such bargaining was "inappropriate," at that time, apparently on the ground that VA DC was in the process of negotiating a master agreement with AFGE -- a process that has been ongoing for several years. There was no evidence that Local 3884's proposed ground rule number 4 was on the bargaining table at the national level. There was undisputed evidence that Local 3884 was empowered to negotiate over management-initiated local changes; that nothing in the agreements of the parties precluded ground rule bargaining; that ground rule number 4 had been agreed to in the past by VA Fargo in negotiating local changes; and that Local 3884 intended its proposed ground rule number 4 to apply only to the particular management-initiated change then at issue.[3]

Under these circumstances, a conclusion that Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) have been violated turns, in part, on the question of whether the refusal of Local 3884 to discuss the substantive issues between it and VA Fargo, until its proposed ground rule number 4 was negotiated, relieved VA Fargo of its obligations to bargain over the substantive issues.

2. In several recent decisions, this Authority has recognized that negotiating a ground rules agreement prior to commencing bargaining over proposed changes is an inherent aspect of an agency's obligation to bargain in good faith prior to implementation. See Department of Defense Dependents Schools, 14 FLRA 191, 193 (April 6, 1984). The Authority had occasion, recently, to call this to the attention of the Veterans Administration's hospital in Columbia, Missouri. See Harry S. Truman

[3] Inapposite is Respondents' argument and reliance on a case involving a local union's proposal to change working conditions, after a consolidated, national unit is certified. See R. Br. 5, citing Social Security Administration, Mid-Atlantic Program Service Center, Kansas City, Missouri, 10 FLRA 15 (1982). Here, it is management which initiated the changes in conditions of employment. And, as discussed in section 2 of this decision, a management-initiated change gives a union the right to propose ground rules for bargaining over such changes, and requires management to negotiate concerning the proposed ground rules.

Memorial Veterans Hospital, Columbia, Missouri, 16 FLRA 944 (Dec. 18, 1984, hereinafter referred to as the VA Columbia case). As here, the Respondent in the VA Columbia case claimed that negotiating of ground rules was "inappropriate," the logic being that such negotiations should be confined to "formal contract negotiations." (16 FLRA at 944, 945 and compare, here Tr. 138 and 143-144). The Authority held that this logic was "clearly without merit" (16 FLRA at 945), and "found no distinction in the good faith bargaining process between formal contract negotiations and negotiations conducted as a result of a change in conditions of employment made during the term of a collective bargaining agreement" (16 FLRA at 945). The Authority found a violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5), in the VA Columbia case, even though the parties had negotiated an agreement over the change in the conditions of employment at issue.

Here, no such bargaining took place prior to implementation of the change in conditions of employment affecting bargaining-unit employees, due to management's steadfast refusal to bargain, first, over the union-proposed ground rule number 4. Number 4 is similar to other ground rules proposals already determined by the Authority to be negotiable. For example, the Authority has found the following proposals to be within the agency's duty to bargain: "Management will allow equal official time to the Union Negotiation Team, as allotted to the Management Negotiation Team, for preparation of Contract Negotiations;" "All preparation of proposals and impasse resolution shall be on duty time;" ". . . the union negotiating team will be granted official time equal to the time used by management . . . prior to the first negotiating session . . . ." See, respectively, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1692 and Headquarters, 323rd Flying Training Wing, 3 FLRA 305 (1980); American Federation of Government Employees, Local 225 and U.S. Army Armament Research and Development Command, Dover, New Jersey, 4 FLRA 148 (1980); Association of Civilian Technicians, Granite State Chapter and The Adjutant General, State of New Hampshire, 7 FLRA 241 (1981). In view of these precedents, Local 3884's proposal number 4 clearly is negotiable. Respondents, moreover, did not object to or contest the negotiability of the Union's ground rule proposal, either during meetings with the Union's negotiators or during the hearing in this matter.

The fact that VA Fargo did bargain over some ground rules, does not excuse its conduct as to proposed ground rule 4, as Respondents argue at page 9 of their brief. This was not a failure to agree over ground rule 4; it was a failure to bargain over it as being inappropriate, at that time.

Absent a meritorious affirmative defense, it must be concluded that Respondents violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by refusing to negotiate over a ground rule proposal which is substantially similar to proposals already determined by the Authority to be negotiable. See, Department of the Air Force, U.S. Air Force Academy, 6 FLRA 548, 549 (1981).

3. Whether the alleged violation of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) occurred because Respondents unilaterally implemented the change in hours of work and starting and quitting time of the nurses, without first bargaining with Local 3884 is not so easily resolved. As Respondents point out, the record shows that management's representatives were "present and ready to proceed on the substantive issues and attempt to resolve the problems," and implemented the change only "[a]fter three attempts had been rebuffed by the union", which insisted, first, on its right to negotiate ground rule number 4. See R. Br. 8. Respondents rely on Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 10 FLRA 281 (1982), hereinafter Wright-Patterson, wherein the Authority adopted a decision of Administrative Law Judge William B. Devaney, who held that the refusal of the agency to pay travel and per diem expenses to union negotiators violated the Statute, but did not constitute a refusal to bargain over the substantive issues because the agency was willing to bargain over them. Judge Devaney noted that: "The record contains no evidence, or even assertion, that the Union was unable, or even would have been inconvenienced, by proceeding with bargaining and litigating, if necessary, Respondent's liability for the cost of travel and per diem." See 10 FLRA at 292.

The record here does show, at the very least, "inconvenience" to the union bargaining team, if ground rule number 4 could not first be negotiated. On the union negotiating team were the President and chief negotiator for Local 3884, Mr. Werth, and the Vice-President of Local 3884, Ms. Cederholm. Both work as night-shift nurses. Since management's proposed change impacted on the night-shift nurses, it was undoubtedly important for night-shift nurses to represent the interests of the bargaining unit. Management insists on day shift negotiations, which works a "real hardship" on nurses coming off duty on the night shift without any allowances of official time to prepare for negotiations. See finding 17, above.

In view of the record made here, I conclude that the Authority's decision in Wright-Patterson is distinguishable. Furthermore, see Environmental Protection Agency, 16 FLRA 602 (1984) hereinafter EPA, where the agency refused to bargain ground rules proposed by the union prior to the union submitting proposals over management-initiated proposals concerning performance standards, but was ready and willing to bargain over the substantive issues. The Authority adopted the decision of Administrative Law Judge Garvin Lee Oliver that the Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) "when it failed and refused to negotiate in good faith, including the negotiation of ground rules, and unilaterally implemented the standard-setting procedures . . . ." 16 FLRA at 614. While the Authority modified some aspects of Judge Oliver's decision, it issued a cease-and-desist order ordering the agency not to implement the change without first notifying the union and affording it an opportunity to bargain over the change; and it also ordered the agency to bargain with the union, upon request, over ground rules and over the procedures for establishing the change there at issue. See 16 FLRA No. 87.

Under the circumstances of this case, and following the rationale of the EPA case, I conclude that violations of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) did occur when VA Fargo implemented the change in hours and shift times without first bargaining with Local 3884, including bargaining over Local 3884's ground rule proposal 4.

The Remedy

In order to fully and effectively remedy the several violations by Respondents of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, the General Counsel urges the entry of an order directing the Respondents to restore the status quo ante by re-establishing the hours of work and starting and quitting times which existed prior to April 29, 1984 on the Sunday PM and night shifts in the nursing service. See G.C. Br. 25. Since Respondents in this case have unlawfully refused to bargain over the substance of a decision which affects working conditions, it is not necessary to review those several criteria governing whether to award status quo ante relief in those cases involving an agency's failure to bargain over the impact and implementation of a decision reserved to managerial discretion. See, Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604, 606 (1981). In several decisions which are directly precedential to this case, the Authority has ordered restoration of the status quo ante, where the agency has failed to meet its duty to bargain over the decision to change starting and quitting times on existing shifts, "in order to avoid rendering meaningless the mutual obligation under the Statute to negotiate concerning changes in conditions of employment." See U.S. Customs Service, Region V, New Orleans, Louisiana, 9 FLRA 116, 119 (1982). See also Internal Revenue Service, Los Angeles District, 10 FLRA 653, 655 (1982).

Even assuming that the factors pertinent to determining the restoration of the status quo ante in those cases involving only bargaining over impact and implementation were also applicable here, a review of those factors in the context of the evidence clearly supports an order directing Respondents to restore the status quo ante. Thus, the evidence shows that the Union persistently requested bargaining, that Respondents consistently failed and refused to bargain over negotiable matters, that Respondent unilaterally implemented without a showing of an overriding exigency, and that at least 28 employees suffered direct and measurable economic loss.

The General Counsel also urges the entry of an order that Respondents make whole each nurse employed by VA Fargo for the Sunday premium which each would have been earned had VA Fargo not changed the starting time for the Sunday night shift. See G.C. Br. 26. Uncontroverted evidence introduced at the hearing established that at least 28 employees have worked the Sunday night shift since April 29, 1984, and that each employee suffered a loss of up to $27.76 in premium pay each time the Sunday night shift was worked. Respondents stipulated at the hearing that the Veterans Administration possesses the data and records by which each employee who has worked the Sunday night shift since April 29, 1984, as well as the amount of salary earned, can be accurately determined in the event a back-pay order is included in this remedy. Accordingly, this remedy is not speculative. Compare the situation here to those in Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, Region VIII, San Francisco, California, 9 FLRA 606, 608 note 3 (1982) and United States Department of Labor, 16 FLRA 969, 986-987 (1984), where back pay awards were denied.

An order directing the back payment of premium pay is consistent with the Back Pay Act of 1966, as amended by the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, 5 U.S.C. § 5596. The nursing employees here involved would have continued to receive 8 hours of Sunday 25% premium pay, each week on the night shift, but for Respondents' unilateral change in the starting time of the Sunday night shift. The unfair labor practice violation in the instant case is a type of unjustifiable or unwarranted personnel action resulting in clearly identifiable losses of night pay differential envisioned in 5 U.S.C. 5596(b)(1).[4] Also, an order directing back pay is within the Authority's power and mandate to require an agency to take whatever remedial action the Authority considers appropriate, under Section

[4] 5 U.S.C. 5596(b)(1) provides that:

> (b)(1) An employee of an agency who, on the basis of a timely appeal or an administrative determination (including a decision relating to an unfair labor practice or a grievance) is found by appropriate authority under applicable law, rule, regulation, or collective bargaining agreement, to have been affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which has resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of all or part of the pay, allowances, or differentials of the employee -
> > (A) is entitled, on correction of the personnel action, to receive for the period for which the personnel action was in effect -
> > > (i) an amount equal to all or any part of the pay, allowances, or differentials, as applicable which the employee normally would have earned or received during the period if the personnel action had not occurred, less any amounts earned by the employee through other employment during that period; . . . .

7105(g) of the Statute.[5] There is parallel authority and precedent in the private sector to restore to employees those wages or benefits which have been lost due to unlawful changes by an employer in conditions of employment. See Leeds and Northrup Co. v. NLRB, 391 F.2d 874, 879-80 (3rd Cir. 1968); Overnite Transportation Co. v. NLRB, 372 F.2d 765, 770 (4th Cir. 1967), cert. den. 389 U.S. 838.

Respondent's only argument against an award of back pay is that the action taken was not an unjustified personnel action. See R. Br. 9-12. Reliance is placed, first, upon the fact that the action was taken only after several attempts to negotiate or settle. As to this argument, and for reasons already stated, the action was nevertheless an unfair labor practice, under all the circumstances of the case. The only other argument presented in support of the action being a justified one has to do with the "schedule being followed [for the nurses] resulted in confusion and questions as to its legality" in that [t]echnically in the weeks that only 39 3/4 hours were worked, the employee should have been charged annual or some other form of leave." See R. Br. 9-10. If, indeed, this was illegal, then the answer was to correct the problem with an adjustment of leave. Instead, the action taken was to change the hours and starting and quitting times of the shift, unilaterally and admittedly in order to save paying the nurses on the night shift 8 hours of Sunday premium pay when they only worked 15 minutes on Sunday. This action was "justified" in the sense that it was a more economic way to operate. What is unjustified, and an unfair labor practice, was the action of making the changes without first bargaining with Local 3884.

Accordingly, it is concluded that Respondents should reimburse those employees for the Sunday premium pay which they would have earned but for Respondents' conduct. See, generally, Internal Revenue Service, Western Region, 11 FLRA FLRA 655, 656 (1983).

Additionally, an appropriate remedy should include an order that Respondents cease and desist from the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, post an appropriate notice to all employees at Respondent VA Fargo's facility which identifies the violative acts herein and the required remedial action to be taken, and bargain upon request with the

The unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint have been committed, in violation of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

Accordingly, and pursuant to Section 7118 of the Statute and 5 CFR 2423.29, it is hereby ORDERED that Respondents:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Instituting any change in the hours of work or in the starting and quitting times of the existing PM and night shifts for nurses at the Veterans Administration Medical and Regional Office Center, Fargo North Dakota, without affording the American Federation of Government Employees, the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees, or its authorized representative, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3884, the opportunity to negotiate with respect to the change.

(b) Refusing to bargain, upon request of the American Federation of Government Employees, or its authorized representative, AFGE, Local 3884, concerning ground rules for negotiations over changes in conditions of employment, which include proposals regarding official time to prepare for negotiations.

(c) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, and AFGE, Local 3884, the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees, reestablish as the hours of work and the starting and quitting times of the PM and night shifts for nurses at the Veterans Administration Medical and Regional Office Center, Fargo, North Dakota those in existence prior to April 29, 1984, and afford the American Federation of Government Employees and AFGE, Local 3884, the opportunity to negotiate with respect to any proposed changes thereto.

(b) Compensate with appropriate Sunday premium pay and otherwise make whole those unit employee nurses who have worked the Sunday night shift since April 28, 1984 and whose shift hours would have been 11:45 PM Sunday through 7:45 AM Monday were it not for the unilateral change in hours of work and starting and quitting times on the PM and night shifts.

(c) Post at its facilities at the Veterans Administration Medical and Regional Office Center, Fargo, North Dakota, copies of Appendix B, attached hereto, on forms to be furnished by the Regional Director, Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Veterans Administration Medical and Regional Office Center Director, Fargo, North Dakota and shall be posted and maintained by him for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Center Director shall take all reasonable steps to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by other material.

(d) Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator C. Chester Brisco filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievant was suspended for 5 days for improper use of a firearm, unsafe use of a service vehicle, and failure to follow service instructions and regulations. A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration on the issue of whether the suspension was for just and sufficient cause. The Arbitrator determined that the evidence established that the grievant engaged in the misconduct with which he was charged. However, the Arbitrator noted that the Agency had delayed more than eight months from the date of the incident before proposing the grievant's suspension. He concluded that this "extraordinary delay" resulted in a disciplinary action which was arbitrary, capricious, and unreasonable and which did not promote the efficiency of the service. He further noted that agency regulations require that discipline must be timely; that the collective bargaining agreement provides that employees shall be furnished with notices of proposed disciplinary action at the earliest practicable date after the alleged offense has been committed and made known to the Agency; and that 5 U.S.C. § 7503 directs that the employee is entitled to a written decision and the specific reasons for the discipline at the earliest practicable date. Rejecting the Agency's argument that the delay was excusable, the Arbitrator found that the delay violated law, agency regulation, and the collective bargaining agreement and that therefore the delay constituted harmful error and the discipline was contrary to law. As his award the Arbitrator ruled that the suspension was not for just cause and directed that the grievant be made whole.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to 5 U.S.C. §§ 7503 and 7701(c) and the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596. In support of its exception, the Agency essentially argues that the Arbitrator's award is deficient because the delay was not a harmful error within the meaning of section 7701(c) which the Agency maintains should be applied to suspensions of 14 days or less taken under section 7503.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760 and Social Security Administration, Northeastern Program Service Center, 22 FLRA No. 19 (1986), exceptions were filed to an award rescinding a 10-day suspension. The suspension was rescinded because the arbitrator determined that the activity violated a requirement of the collective bargaining agreement by failing to place all records relied on for the suspension in a particular personnel file. In one of its exceptions, the agency contended that the award was deficient because the arbitrator failed to find that the violation of the agreement constituted harmful error.
In denying this exception, the Authority explained the proper application of the harmful error rule of section 7701(c) as it pertains to the arbitration of disciplinary actions. The Authority explained that the rule applies in accordance with section 7121(e)(2) of the Statute only to the more serious adverse actions enumerated in 5 U.S.C. § 7512*/ that are taken under section 7513; the rule does not apply to suspensions for 14 days or less taken under section 7503. In Northeastern Program Service Center the Authority therefore concluded that the arbitrator was not required by law to find that the violation of the parties' agreement constituted harmful error and that his failure to do so provided no basis for finding the award contrary to law.

Consistent with Northeastern Program Service Center, we conclude in this case that the Arbitrator was not required by law to find that the unwarranted delay in proposing disciplinary action constituted harmful error within the meaning of section 7701(c). Accordingly, the Agency's allegation that the Arbitrator failed to properly make such a finding provides no basis for finding the award contrary to law as alleged by the Agency.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second and final exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to management's right in accordance with section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute to take disciplinary action. In support of this exception, the Agency cites the Authority's decision in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 615 and National Park Service, Sequoia and Kings Canyon National Parks, U.S. Department of the Interior, 17 FLRA 318 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. NFFE Local 615 v. FLRA, No. 85-1299 (D.C. Cir. May 15, 1985), and argues that the arbitrator's setting aside of the grievant's suspension merely because of the lapse of time between the act of misconduct and the imposition of the suspension violates section 7106(a)(2)(A).

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that the Agency's reliance on Sequoia and Kings Canyon National Parks is misplaced. In that case, as correctly noted by the Agency, provision 2 essentially provided that investigations of incidents for which disciplinary action may be taken will normally be initiated within 60 days after the incident. The Authority characterized the provision as establishing a contractual "statute of limitations" on the agency's ability to investigate such incidents. 17 FLRA at 321. Recognizing that in many situations investigations are the essential first step to disciplinary action, the Authority concluded that preventing the initiation of an investigation would in certain circumstances prevent the agency from acting at all with respect to the right to take disciplinary action. In this case, the Agency was in no manner prevented by a statute of limitations provision from investigating the alleged incident of misconduct and from acting to propose and suspend the grievant for 5 days. Instead, as stated by the Arbitrator, this case involves review of final disciplinary action to determine whether the Agency's eight-month delay in imposing discipline resulted in an action which was arbitrary, capricious, and unreasonable and which did not promote the efficiency of the service. As noted, the Arbitrator determined that the suspension of the grievant had resulted in such an unwarranted disciplinary action and on that basis ruled that the suspension was not for just and sufficient cause. We conclude that such an award is not precluded by the decision in Sequoia and Kings Canyon National Parks and that therefore the Agency's argument provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

V. DECISION

For these reasons the Agency's exceptions are denied.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 17, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority, in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by the parties who have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. The General Counsel alleges in its complaint that the Respondents committed unfair labor practices in violation of section 7116(a)(1), (5), and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute)[1] by failing and refusing to comply with an interim arbitration award and a supplement to that award, by refusing to consult or negotiate in good faith with the Union, and by interfering with its employees' exercise of their rights under the Statute. Although both the General Counsel and the Charging Party have submitted briefs, only the General Counsel's brief was timely filed and will be considered. The Respondents did not submit a brief.

II. Background

The National Association of Government Employees, R14-32, SEIU/AFL-CIO (NAGE or Union), is the exclusive representative of certain of the Respondents' employees. At all times material to this matter, NAGE and Respondent Fort Leonard Wood have been parties to a collective bargaining agreement providing for binding arbitration as part of the grievance procedure.

On January 30, 1980, Respondent Fort Leonard Wood removed a unit employee for alleged misconduct. The dispute eventually reached arbitration under the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Arbitrator issued an interim award on May 20, 1983, ordering the Union and the employee to elect within 35 days whether to obtain a psychiatric evaluation of the employee. The Arbitrator further ordered that, in any event, a written report should be submitted to him within 90 days, setting forth the arrangements for the employee's evaluation or the reasons for the parties' failure to reach an agreement. The Arbitrator retained jurisdiction to render a final award.

Respondent Fort Leonard Wood filed an "Objection to Interim Award, dated 20 May, 1983, and Request for Reconsideration" on July 1, 1983. The objection concerned the substance of the interim award. The Arbitrator then issued a supplement to the interim award on August 12, 1983. The supplement essentially affirmed the initial award and required that the written report mandated by the initial award be submitted not later than October 11, 1983.

> (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter;

> (5) to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with a labor organization as required by this chapter;
> . . . .
> (8) to otherwise fail or refuse to comply with any provision of this chapter.

Respondent Fort Leonard Wood notified NAGE and the Arbitrator on September 20, 1983, that it had been instructed by Respondent Headquarters not to recognize the authority of an arbitrator to issue an interim award, and to decline to participate further in the procedures specified in the interim award. NAGE attempted to comply with the procedures on October 27, 1983, but the Respondent has refused. No final award has been issued.

III. Position of the General Counsel

First, the General Counsel contends that the interim award and its supplement constitute final interlocutory awards because they were not appealed by Respondent Fort Leonard Wood or Respondent Headquarters, and that the Respondents' failure and refusal to comply with those awards, as required under section 7121, constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(8) by both. The General Counsel concedes that the Authority generally will not consider such interlocutory matters, but it urges the Authority to do so here because there are no other means of resolving the issue of the Respondents' duty to comply with the interim awards.

The General Counsel also asserts in its complaint that the instruction by Respondent Headquarters to Respondent Fort Leonard Wood not to comply with the interim award and its supplement, coupled with the action of Fort Leonard Wood in following that instruction, constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(1). It argues that, since Fort Leonard Wood was the level of exclusive recognition, the involvement of Headquarters in the decision not to comply with the interim awards resulted in improper interference with the collective bargaining relationship.

Finally, the General Counsel contends that the Respondents' failure and refusal to comply with the interim awards also violates section 7116(a)(5). It argues that such failure and refusal "injected a new term and condition into the bargaining relationship without affording the Union prior notice and an opportunity to engage in pre-implementation bargaining" in good faith.

IV. Analysis

In Department of Labor, Employment Standards Administration/Wage and Hour Division, Washington, D.C., 10 FLRA 316 (1982), the Authority reconsidered its previous decisions on whether a refusal to participate in arbitration proceedings under a negotiated grievance procedure is inconsistent with section 7121 of the Statute and consequently violates section 7116(a)(1) and (8) or (b)(1) and (8), as applicable. The Authority concluded that neither the language of section 7121 nor its legislative history "provides a basis for excusing [a] party from participating in the mechanism mandated by Congress in section 7121 for resolving grievances not satisfactorily settled by the parties at earlier stages of the negotiated grievance procedure." 10 FLRA at 320. The Authority noted that a refusal to participate in arbitration proceedings could result in the hindrance or obstruction of grievance resolution by binding arbitration, contrary to the mandate and intent of Congress in enacting section 7121. The Authority therefore ruled that a refusal by a party to participate in "the procedures for the settlement of grievances" conflicts with section 7121 of the Statute.

This principle was subsequently applied in Department of the Army, 83rd United States Army Reserve Command, Columbus, Ohio, 11 FLRA 55 (1983), where the parties had presented their positions to the arbitrator on whether there first should be a separate hearing on a question of the arbitrability of the grievance. When the arbitrator decided not to hold a separate hearing, the agency notified the arbitrator and the union that it refused to participate in the proceeding and that it considered the hearing cancelled. On the basis of the Employment Standards Administration case, the Authority determined that the agency had failed to comply with the requirements of section 7121 and therefore had violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. The Authority held that, whatever the agency's position on the propriety of the arbitrator's procedural determination, the agency was obligated to proceed to arbitration and, if dissatisfied with the award, take the appropriate action of filing exceptions to the award under section 7122(a) of the Statute. 83rd U.S. Army Reserve Command, 11 FLRA 56 n.1.

Although both the Employment Standards Administration and the 83rd U.S. Army Reserve Command cases involved the refusal to participate in any proceedings before the arbitrators, we find in this case that the refusal to continue to participate in the proceedings before the Arbitrator likewise failed to comply with the requirements of section 7121. As similarly concluded in Employment Standards Administration, neither the language of section 7121 nor its legislative history provides a basis for excusing a party's continued participation in the procedures for the settlement of grievances. Further, in this case the Respondents' refusal to continue to participate in the proceedings before the Arbitrator has resulted in the obstruction of the resolution of a grievance by binding arbitration, contrary to the mandate and intent of Congress. See Employment Standards Administration at 321. As the Authority indicated in 83rd U.S. Army Reserve Command, whatever the position of the Respondents on the propriety of the Arbitrator's interim awards, the Respondents were obligated to proceed with the arbitration proceedings absent appropriate action, if any, to challenge those awards immediately.2/

We note that the Respondents admitted in their joint answer to the General Counsel's complaint, and then also stipulated, that Respondent Headquarters "instructed" Respondent Fort Leonard Wood not to comply with the Arbitrator's interim awards, and Fort Leonard Wood followed that instruction. We note further that, before receiving Headquarter's instruction, Fort Leonard Wood had participated actively in the arbitration proceeding, as discussed above.

The Authority has repeatedly held that, when agency management at a higher level prevents agency management at a subordinate level of exclusive recognition from complying with its obligations under the Statute by "directive," "requirement," or "direction," the higher-level management entity violates section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.3/ The Authority has held further that, where the

2/ The Authority notes in this regard that the interim awards relate to a removal action as to which exceptions may not be filed with the Authority under the Statute. Thus, whatever action might appropriately have been available to challenge the interim awards would necessarily have involved the Office of Personnel Management under 5 U.S.C. § 7703(d) which effectively provides that, in certain circumstances, the Director of OPM may obtain judicial review of any final order or decision of an arbitrator in these types of matters.

3/ See, for example, U.S. Department of Justice and Department of Justice Bureau of Prisons (Washington, D.C.) and Federal Correctional Institution (Danbury, Connecticut), 20 FLRA No. 5 (1985), enforced, 792 F.2d 25 (2d Cir. 1986); subordinate entity is thus left with no discretion to comply with its statutory obligations, that entity will not also be found to have violated section 7116(a).[4]

Consistent with this precedent, we find here that Respondent Headquarters' "instruction" to Respondent Fort Leonard Wood not to comply with the Arbitrator's interim awards constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) on Headquarters' part. We view the Respondents' use of the term "instruction" as the functional equivalent of the terms "directive," "requirement," and "direction,"[5] which have been used most frequently in prior Authority decisions regarding "interference" violations under section 7116(a)(1).[6] Further Respondent Headquarters' instruction not to comply with the Arbitrator's interim awards afforded Respondent Fort Leonard Wood no discretion to do otherwise, and rendered its non-compliance with the awards merely ministerial in nature. We therefore find that Fort Leonard Wood's action in following Headquarters' instruction cannot be deemed to constitute an independent violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) by Fort Leonard Wood. We shall therefore dismiss that allegation.

Finally, although the Respondents admitted that they refused and failed to comply with the Arbitrator's interim awards, we cannot find that, in doing so, they also refused and failed to consult or negotiate with the Union in good faith, as alleged. The General Counsel argues in support of this allegation that, by not complying with the interim awards, the Respondents "injected a new term and condition into the bargaining relationship without affording the Union prior notice and an opportunity to engage in pre-implementation bargaining." We find that the Respondents, by their actions, did not establish new conditions of employment requiring negotiation, but rather refused to proceed further with the arbitration process. Since these circumstances created no bargaining obligation, we shall dismiss the section 7116(a)(5) allegation as to both Respondents.

Conclusion

Based on the above analysis, we conclude that Respondent Headquarters has violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute, as alleged, but that Respondent Fort Leonard Wood has not. We conclude additionally that neither of the Respondents has been shown to have violated section 7116(a)(5), as further alleged.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority ORDERS that the Department of the Army Headquarters in Washington, D.C., shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

a. Instructing Fort Leonard Wood not to comply with the Arbitrator's interim awards or otherwise interfering with the pending arbitration regarding a grievance filed by the National Association of Government Employees, R14-32, SEIU/AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative at the Fort Leonard Wood, Missouri, facility, in connection with the removal of a unit employee, contrary to the requirements of section 7121 of the Statute.

b. In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

a. Upon the request of the National Association of Government Employees, R14-32, SEIU/AFL-CIO, permit Fort

Leonard Wood to comply with the Arbitrator's interim awards and otherwise resume full participation in the arbitration proceedings regarding the removal of the unit employee.

b. Post at Headquarters and at its Fort Leonard Wood, Missouri, facility, copies of the attached Notice, on forms furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed personally by the Administrator of the agency, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

c. Notify the Regional Director of Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the allegation in the complaint regarding Fort Leonard Wood's violation of section 7116(a)(1), (5), and (8) of the Statute is DISMISSED, as is the allegation regarding Army Headquarters' violation of section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Preston J. Moore filed by the Department of the Air Force (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.1/

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute before the Arbitrator concerned the Activity's determination to contract out certain aircraft maintenance functions. The grievance alleged that the decision to contract out was not made in accordance with applicable law and regulation governing determinations to contract out commercial and industrial activities in the Department of Defense. Compliance with such law and regulation was required by the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Arbitrator first ruled that the grievance was arbitrable. On the merits of the grievance, the Arbitrator ruled that the Activity's procurement action was not in accordance with the procedures and standards provided by law and regulation in a number of respects. Consequently, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance and directed the procurement action be cancelled.

1/ The National Federation of Federal Employees filed a brief as an amicus curiae.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception the Agency contends that by finding the grievance arbitrable, the award is contrary to management's right pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to make determinations with respect to contracting out.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has previously addressed the grievability and arbitrability of a grievance claiming that a procurement action failed to comply with applicable law and regulation pertaining to contracting out as required by the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Authority specifically held that such a grievance was not contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute and was grievable and arbitrable. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1904, AFL-CIO and United States Army Communications and Electronics Materiel Readiness Command, 16 FLRA 358 (1984). Similarly, the Authority has held that even in the absence of a specific negotiated contract provision, a grievance over whether a procurement action complies with OMB Circular A-76 is within the broad scope grievance procedure prescribed by the Statute and is not precluded by management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to make determinations with respect to contracting out. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of EEOC Locals and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 10 FLRA 3 (1982) (proposal 1), enforced sub nom. EEOC v. FLRA, 744 F.2d 842 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. dismissed, 106 S. Ct. 1678 (1986) (per curiam).[2] Consequently, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's ruling on the arbitrability of the grievance is not contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, and therefore this exception is denied.

[2] Although this determination was affirmed by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, with the U.S. Supreme Court dismissing the agency's subsequent appeal, this same approach was rejected by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in Defense Language Institute, Presidio of Monterey, California v. FLRA, 767 F.2d 1398 (9th Cir. 1985), denying enforcement of National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1263 and Defense Language Institute, Presidio of Monterey, California, 14 FLRA 761 (1984).

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception the Agency contends that the Arbitrator's cancellation of the procurement action is contrary to law. In support of this exception, the Agency argues that the procurement action could not be cancelled by the Arbitrator absent a finding that but for the alleged errors by management in the procurement process, the decision to contract out could not have properly been made.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

This exception provides the Authority with an opportunity to address for the first time the remedial authority of an arbitrator in resolving grievances disputing determinations by agencies to contract out agency work.

General laws and regulations governing contracting out, and specific laws and regulations governing contracting out of commercial and industrial activities in the Department of Defense, evidence a clear intent that their application result in the most cost-effective performance of commercial and industrial activities. Pub. L. No. 96-342, § 502(a)(2)(B), 10 U.S.C. § 2304 note (1982); OMB Circular A-76 (Revised August 1983), para. 5. The longstanding policy of the Federal Government has been to rely on private enterprise to supply commercially available products and services it needs except when comparative cost analysis indicates that procurement from a private source is not as cost effective as in-house performance. AFGE Local 2017 v. Brown, 680 F.2d 722, 724 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1104 (1983). This policy is designed to achieve economy and enhance productivity through competition between in-house and commercial sources for performance of commercial activities. OMB Circular A-76, para. 5. The procurement process established to effectuate this policy accords to agency officials substantial discretion in "the application of technical, and often esoteric, regulations to the complicated circumstances of individual procurements." M. Steinthal & Co. v. Seamens, 455 F.2d 1289, 1301 (D.C. Cir. 1971); see Local 2855, AFGE v. U.S., 602 F.2d 574, 580-83 (3d Cir. 1979).

In conjunction with the provisions of procurement law and regulation, section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute expressly reserves to management officials the right, in accordance with applicable laws, to make determinations with respect to contracting out. The Authority has repeatedly recognized that the plain language of section 7106(a) of the Statute provides that "nothing" in the Statute, including an award of an arbitrator, shall "affect the authority" of an agency to exercise the rights enumerated in that section. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3258 and U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, 21 FLRA No. 56 (1986). More specifically, the Authority has recognized that management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) encompasses not only the right to act, but also the right to deliberate concerning the relevant factors on which a determination to contract out will be made. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 31st Combat Support Group (TAC), Homestead Air Force Base, Florida, 6 FLRA 574, 578 (1981), enforced sub nom. NFFE Local 1167 v. FLRA, 681 F.2d 886 (D.C. Cir. 1982). In addition, with the strong public interest in a Federal Government procurement process which is efficient and economical and which proceeds without disruption, the Authority must be mindful of Congress' admonition in section 7101 of the Statute that the provisions of the Statute "should be interpreted in a manner consistent with the requirement of an effective and efficient Government." See Sea-Land Service, Inc. v. Brown, 600 F.2d 429 (3d Cir. 1979).

In recognition of the substantial discretion accorded agency officials under procurement law and regulation and the many decisions made as a part of the procurement process that necessarily are a matter of judgment and managerial choices, the scope of review of procurement actions by courts and administrative bodies has been narrow and limited. See Local 2855, AFGE v. U.S., 602 F.2d 574 (3d Cir. 1979).

In the administrative review of disputed procurement actions, the Comptroller General will review an action only to determine whether it conforms to mandatory provisions of procurement laws and regulations and will not review matters reserved to agency discretion. Thus, the protester must establish that the disputed action violated requirements of law or regulation and that the violation materially affected the result of the procurement action. Matter of: Video Visions, Inc., Decision of the Comptroller General B-210010.2, June 26, 1984.

Judicial review of disputed procurement actions is also narrow and limited. The most common articulation by the courts of the standard of review of a procurement action is that of a rational or reasonable basis. See Sea-Land Service, Inc. v. Brown; Kinnett Dairies v. Farrow, 580 F.2d 1260 (5th Cir. 1978); M. Steinthal & Co. v. Seamens; Robert E. Derecktor of Rhode Island v. Goldschmidt, 516 F. Supp. 1085 (D.R.I. 1981). As indicated above, the courts also recognize that there must be respect for public interest considerations in the efficient procurement of goods and services and the avoidance of excessive procurement costs. Sea-Land Service, Inc. v. Brown, 600 F.2d at 434. In short, the courts generally hold that a procurement decision may not be overturned unless it is demonstrated that there is no rational basis for the agency's decision and that no public interest considerations override cancelling the procurement. M. Steinthal & Co. v. Seamens, 455 F.2d at 1301. It has been held that the absence of a rational basis may be established by a demonstration that the procurement process involved a clear and prejudicial violation of mandatory provisions of applicable procurement laws or regulations. Kentron Hawaii v. Warner, 480 F.2d 1166, 1169 (D.C. Cir. 1973). However, courts have stressed that the provisions alleged to have been violated must contain discernible requirements and meaningful criteria against which the determination to contract out may be analyzed and reviewed. In other words, there must be rules or specifications that permit adjudication of disagreements and amply specific standards against which agency conduct can be measured. See AFGE Local 2017 v. Brown, 680 F.2d at 726; Local 2855, AFGE v. U.S., 602 F.2d at 582-83. Courts will not review matters within an agency's judgment and discretion because the courts stress that there must be respect for the substantial discretion permitted by, and the judgment to be exercised under, procurement laws and regulations on the part of procurement officials. Kinnett Dairies v. Farrow, 580 F.2d at 1272; M. Steinthal & Co. v. Seamens, 455 F.2d at 1298-99. Courts therefore will not cancel a procurement action just because it seems ill-advised or a less desirable alternative than performing the work in-house. It is regularly stated that the courts must be diligent not to substitute their judgment for that of responsible agency officials in the administration and application of procurement statutes and regulations. See International Association of Firefighters, Local F-100 v. Department of the Navy, 536 F. Supp. 1254 (D.R.I. 1982).

The Authority believes that these analytical approaches provide sound guidance for arbitral review of procurement actions. In view of the substantial discretion vested in agency procurement officials, the paramount public interest in the efficient procurement of goods and services, and the avoidance of excessive costs recognized by both the courts and the Comptroller General, the Authority has determined that an arbitrator may not substitute his or her judgment for that of an agency with respect to the agency's ultimate decision whether to contract out. Similarly, any intermediate decision in the procurement process concerning a matter reserved to agency judgment and discretion also may not be set aside. Thus, the Authority holds that an arbitrator is without authority to order cancellation of a procurement action or to review an agency decision in the procurement process concerning a matter of agency judgment or discretion.

There are, nevertheless, certain permissible remedies available to an arbitrator in resolving a grievance concerning an agency's determination whether to contract out. In particular, with respect to the disputed procurement action, we hold that an arbitrator may, in certain circumstances, direct an agency to reconstruct the procurement action. In order for an arbitrator to direct an agency to undertake such a reconstruction, the arbitrator must find the following:

> (1) The arbitrator must expressly find that in determining to contract out, the agency violated mandatory provisions of applicable procurement laws or regulations. Furthermore, these provisions must contain sufficiently specific standards to objectively analyze and review the agency's actions and permit an objective conclusion that the agency failed to comply with the requirements; and
> (2) The arbitrator must find that the agency's failure to comply with those requirements materially affected the final procurement decision and harmed unit employees. The Authority cautions that arbitrators must distinguish between permissible challenges based on material defects in aspects of the procurement process specifically prescribed by law or regulation and improper challenges attacking the exercise of managerial discretion.

In sum, arbitrators are not authorized to cancel a procurement action and are authorized to consider only grievances challenging a decision to contract out on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. These provisions must be sufficiently specific to permit the arbitrator to adjudicate whether there has been compliance with such provisions. When presented with such a grievance, an arbitrator on finding a failure to comply may sustain the grievance. In sustaining the grievance, the arbitrator as a remedy may properly order a reconstruction of the procurement action when the arbitrator finds that an agency's noncompliance materially affected the final procurement decision and harmed unit employees. An agency in taking the action required by such an award must reconstruct the procurement process in accordance with the provisions which were previously not complied with and must determine on reconstruction whether the decision to contract out is now in accordance with law and regulation. If the decision to contract out can no longer be justified, the agency must determine whether considerations of cost, performance, and disruption override cancelling the procurement action and take whatever action is appropriate on the basis of that determination. For example, an agency could determine that immediate cancellation is warranted, or an agency could determine that cancellation is not warranted, but that an improperly granted contract should not be renewed. Additionally, an agency may use its discretion to fashion other remedies appropriate to the circumstances.

In applying that test in this case, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award insofar as it directed the Activity to cancel the procurement action involved is deficient and must be set aside. We note, however, that the Arbitrator expressly found that the Activity violated certain specific requirements of applicable law and regulation in the development and comparison of costs in reaching its decision. The Arbitrator specifically found that the methodology used in estimating in-house labor costs violated the requirements of Department of Defense Directive 4100.33-H, which provides procedures and standards to assist and guide agencies in cost comparisons. The Arbitrator ruled that the estimate used an incorrect wage inflation factor and improperly accounted for the grade of a temporary position. The Arbitrator also found that contrary to OMB Circular A-76, the Activity failed to account for the costs of obtaining security clearances for contractor employees. We also note that the Arbitrator based his award on the conclusion that the defective procurement action would displace employees and that the violations of procurement law and regulation all favored the decision to contract out. In these circumstances, we conclude that the Arbitrator effectively found that the Activity's violations harmed the employees involved and that the violations materially affected the Activity's final decision. Thus, the Arbitrator established a sufficient basis for directing the Activity to reconstruct the procurement action.

C. Reconstruction

The Agency asserts in its exceptions that a cost analysis revised in accordance with the Arbitrator's findings shows that contracting out is still more economical than in-house performance. In support of this assertion, the Agency offers only wage rate schedules and other computation worksheets which have been revised in part. The Agency does not explain how these attachments demonstrate that reconstruction favors contracting out. In these circumstances, we believe application of the approaches set forth in this decision requires that such a reconstruction be specifically conducted pursuant to the order of the Authority and in accordance with the guidance which has now been provided.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is modified to direct the Activity to reconstruct the disputed procurement action in accordance with the requirements of applicable law and regulation and to make a determination and take appropriate action based upon the results of such reconstruction.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of a Union proposal affecting language in a recently changed Agency regulation (NAVSHIPYDPEARL INSTRUCTION 12750.1F).

II. Union Proposal

1. Letter to FLRA dated September 27, 1985, in the NAVSHIPYDPEARLINST 12750.1F, in the table titled, "Delegation of Authority to Effect Disciplinary Action," under column, "Authority to Effect," in the "Removal" action row.

   HFEMTC proposes to have "Activity Head Level" inserted where presently "Shipyard Commander (Commanding Officer)" exists.

2. Letter to FLRA dated October 16, 1985 - That regarding the table in NAVSHIPYDPEARLINST 12750.1F, titled,

"Delegation of Authority to Effect Disciplinary Action," under the "Authority to Sign Advance Notice" column, "Action" Removal row.

HFEMTC proposal is to retain existing language.

III. Positions of the Parties

The proposal refers to two letters sent by the Union to the Authority in an attempt to comply with the requirements of the Statute and the Authority's Rules and Regulations. It appears from the Union's petition for review that it intends the first part of its proposal to require the Activity Head, rather than the Shipyard Commander, to exercise final authority to effect the removal of employees. The second part of the proposal would require the Group Superintendent or Department Head to exercise authority in proposing the removal of employees. The Union asserts that its proposal is a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. The Union did not file a response to the Agency's statement of position in this case.

The Agency contends that the proposal interferes with its right to assign work, under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

IV. Analysis and Conclusion

It appears from the record that by regulation the Agency changed the level of authority for both proposing and effecting removal actions, and that the Union is proposing to raise the level of authority required for these actions. The Authority has consistently held that proposals prescribing specific duties to be performed by particular non-bargaining unit personnel in an agency directly interfere with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute by eliminating the discretion inherent in that right. See, for example, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 78 and Veterans Administration Regional Office, Indianapolis, Indiana, 9 FLRA 819 (1982). The proposal in this case would require certain non-bargaining unit personnel to perform duties which they otherwise would not be required to perform, and would have the same effect as the proposal held nonnegotiable in Veterans Administration Regional Office. Therefore, the Authority concludes that the proposal would directly interfere with the exercise of the right to assign work and as a result, is not a negotiable procedure.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 24, 1986.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority at this time on a request filed by the Union seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of April 16, 1986, denying the Union's exceptions to the Arbitrator's award in the case, and of the Authority's order of May 29, 1986, denying the Union's first request for reconsideration of that decision.*/ In its decision denying the Union's exceptions, the Authority held that the Union had failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award was deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute. In its first motion for reconsideration, the Union essentially reiterated arguments made in its exceptions that the Arbitrator's award was contrary to law and contained a number of factual errors. In this request for reconsideration the Union again reiterates arguments made in its exceptions to the award and in its first request for reconsideration.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations permits a party that can establish "extraordinary circumstances" to move for reconsideration of a decision of the Authority. Here, however, the Union has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17. Rather, the arguments presented by the Union in support of its request essentially constitute nothing more than disagreement with the merits of both the Authority's decision denying the exceptions and the Authority's order denying reconsideration; in short, the Union's motion is merely an attempt to continue to relitigate this matter.

*/ The Union also filed requests for oral argument and that the motion be held in abeyance to permit the filing of additional submissions with the Authority relative to the award. However, these requests are not warranted and they are denied.

Accordingly, the Union's request for reconsideration is denied.

This matter is before the Authority on a timely motion for reconsideration of a portion of the Authority's Order Denying in Part and Granting in Part the Activity's Application for Review in U.S. Department of Energy, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 22 FLRA No. 1 (1986), filed by the Activity. The Activity seeks reconsideration of that part of the decision in which the Authority upheld the Regional Director's findings that 27 employees were not management officials and should be included in the unit.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides, in part, that a party who can establish extraordinary circumstances can move for reconsideration of an Authority decision. Based upon review of the Activity's arguments in support of its motion, the Authority concludes that the motion raises no issue not previously raised before or considered by the Authority, */ and that no extraordinary circumstances warranting reconsideration have been established. Rather, the arguments made in support of the motion merely constitute disagreement with the Regional Director's finding of fact and application of existing case law.

*/ The Activity is incorrect when it contends that reconsideration should be granted because the Authority failed to consider certain of the Activity's arguments concerning the consistency of the Regional Director's decision with the Statute and Authority precedent. As the Authority stated in its order denying in part the Activity's Application for Review (at 2), "The application as to all of the included employees in essence expresses mere disagreement with the Regional Director's findings which are based on Authority precedent and have not been shown to be clearly erroneous or to have prejudicially affected the rights of any party."

Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that the Activity's motion for reconsideration in the case be, and it hereby is, denied.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority found, consistent with the Judge, that the activity violated § 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) by failing and refusing to furnish the union with necessary data, requested pursuant to § 7114(b)(4). The activity excepted to the Judge's order that it furnish the union with a sanitized copy of its listing of minority employees. The activity asserted that the provisions of the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a (1982), prohibited it from disclosing the listing. The Authority concluded that disclosure of necessary data to exclusive representatives pursuant to requests under § 7114(b)(4) is not prohibited by the Privacy Act if the disclosure will not result in a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy. In making that determination the Authority will balance the necessity of the data for the Union's purposes against the degree of intrusion on the individual's privacy interests caused by disclosure of the data. The necessary data here requested is to be used by the union to determine whether the activity is complying with the provisions of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, to determine whether to file grievances in certain merit promotion actions and to prepare for contract negotiations. The data will receive limited circulation. Striking the balance between the limited intrusion

DIGEST NOTES

On remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, and in response to the court's inquiry as to whether "competitive areas" within an agency for reduction-in-force purposes (RIF) are within the duty to bargain, the Authority concluded, based on American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32, AFL-CIO and Office of Personnel Management, 22 FLRA No. 49 (1986), that a proposal which would establish a competitive area which necessarily includes nonunit employees within its boundaries is outside the mandatory obligation to bargain. The proposal is nonnegotiable because it would directly determine conditions of employment for employees outside the bargaining unit.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable which provides that "employees will have adequate access to telephones in the performance of their official duties if such is required as part of the employees' duties and responsibilities to perform at an acceptable level." The Authority found that the proposal would subject substantive decisions about using telephones to accomplish the agency's work to bilateral determination and intrude upon the the agency's discretion to determine numbers, types and locations of telephones to be provided employees. The proposal likewise concerns the technology of performing work under § 7106(b)(1), and is bargainable only at the election of the agency.

A proposal concerning adequate employee access to telephones which are required in the performance of employees' duties and responsibilities is not an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3). The Authority noted that the union offered no support whatsoever for its assertion that the proposal concerns an appropriate arrangement. There was no information concerning the nature and extent of the adverse effects, if any, on employees which might result from their relocation nor did the record provide a basis for assessing how the proposal would address or ameliorate those adverse effects.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal that requires management to select EEO counselors from among a list of union nominees is nonnegotiable because it interferes with management's right to assign work pursuant to § 7106(a)(2)(B). The proposal directly prescribes the assignment of certain duties to particular employees and prevented the assignment of those duties to other employees. The fact that the proposal concerns only part-time duties does not alter this conclusion. (proposal 1)

A proposal which provides for a union observer on the Position Management Committee is nonnegotiable and is not merely a procedure to be followed by the agency in exercising its reserved rights. The Committee has the responsibility for reviewing and recommending approval prior to implementation of all changes in organization involving work design, occupational distribution, grade distribution, staffing requirements and cost. The Authority found that the committee is an integral part of the process by which management decides and acts pursuant to rights reserved to it by the Statute. Union representation on the committee would directly interfere with management's rights under § 7106. While the union proposal adverts only to an "observer" on the committee, the presence of a union designee would nonetheless prevent management officials from engaging in free and open deliberations. (proposal 2)

A proposal concerning employees' use of recreational facilities on off-duty time (lunch and break periods) does not concern their conditions of employment and is nonnegotiable. Proposals concerning employee activities, unrelated to assigned work, conducted while such employees are in non-duty status, such as employee use of agency recreational facilities during non-duty time, are not within the bargaining obligation because they do not meet the § 7103(a)(14) definition of "conditions of employment." (proposal 3)

A proposal which provides that employees will not be "forced to work overtime if he/she feels it will [affect] his efficiency, health or emotional stability," is nonnegotiable and inconsistent with management's right to assign work pursuant to § 7106(a)(2)(B). The right to assign work includes the right to determine that certain work will be performed on overtime. This proposal would absolutely prohibit management from assigning overtime to employees if the circumstances described in the proposal apply. Such a complete prohibition on the assignment of work is not a procedure, but rather is a substantive infringement on the agency's right to assign work. (proposal 4)

A proposal requiring the agency to furnish transportation for unit employees to and from the subway station violates the prohibition in 31 U.S.C. § 1344(a) against the use of government vehicles for transporting employees between their domiciles and places of employment and is outside the duty to bargain pursuant to § 7117(a)(1). Title 31 U.S.C. § 1344 provides that appropriations may not be expended for operation, maintenance and repair of passenger motor vehicles that are used for "an official purpose." An official purpose does not include transporting officers or employees of the government between their domiciles and places of employment. One narrow exception to the general prohibition on use of government vehicles for commutation is authorized when the home-to-work transportation of employees is incident to otherwise authorized use of the vehicles. 63 Comp. Gen. 438 (1983). There is nothing in the record to indicate that vehicles would be used for any official purpose at the same time it engaged in transporting employees to and from the subway. (proposal 5)

Proposals requiring management to provide formal training, or periodically to assign employees to specific types of training programs, are outside the duty to bargain. Further, any proposal addressing the substantive aspects of training is a direct interference with management's right to assign work. The proposal herein, prescribes the content of training and requires that such training be conducted during duty hours, it is also not a procedure for implementing a training program, but is likewise inconsistent with § 7106(a)(2)(B). The proposal however, is not inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. § 4104(4) as it does not expressly bar the type of training proposed. (proposal 6)

A proposal providing that employees will be eligible for release without charge to leave of any kind when an emergency or illness occurs during the third quarter of the employee's tour of duty is outside the duty to bargain under § 7117(a)(1). FPM, Chapter 630, subchapter 11 governs excused absences and prescribes when absences may be granted individuals without loss of pay or charge to leave. It is clear that annual and sick leave are intended to cover the circumstances described in the disputed proposal and the governing regulations do not contemplate personal emergencies or illnesses as justifiable grounds for granting administrative leave in lieu of annual or sick leave. The proposal is inconsistent with government-wide regulations. (proposal 7)

A proposal which provides that the agency will make every effort to insure that employees whose tours are scheduled for more than five consecutive days will receive three consecutive days off is within the duty to bargain. The agency argued the proposal is integrally related to, and consequently determinative of, numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a work project or tour of duty. The Authority concluded that when a proposal does not "explicitly" relate to the numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a tour of duty or organizational subdivision, it is incumbent upon the agency to support an allegation that § 7106(b)(1) applies to that proposal. The disputed proposal did not reveal any direct or integral relationship to numbers, types and grades, nor has the agency established the necessary connection. (proposal 8)

A proposal providing that "the employer will not institute disciplinary action against an alcoholic or drug abuser until he/she is given every opportunity to overcome his/her alcoholism or drug abuse," is nonnegotiable because it interferes with management's right to discipline employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A). The proposal would effectively enable employees to avoid discipline indefinitely by continuing in any program, the object of which is to treat alcoholism or drug abuse. It would therefore, prevent the agency from exercising its right to discipline. (proposal 9)

A proposal which permits the union to select five members of a committee concerned with alcoholism and drug abuse, prescribes the five members' titles and grants them official time to carry out their functions, interferes with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). Counselors in Alcohol and Drug Abuse Programs perform work assigned to them by their employer. The designation of specific employees to perform alcohol and drug counseling is, in reality, a decision to assign specific duties. Allowing a union to make such designations is outside the duty to bargain. (proposal 9)

and Case No. 7-CA-40283

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES, LOCAL 29

Charging Party

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision, and the General Counsel and the Charging Party filed oppositions to the Respondent's exceptions.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order as modified herein.

The Authority adopts the Judge's conclusion that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by failing and refusing to furnish the Charging Party (the Union) with certain necessary data it requested pursuant to section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute. She ordered the Respondent to furnish the Union with a copy of the "Status of Minority Employment" listing (the Minority Listing)[1] maintained by the Respondent, but to "sanitize" the Minority Listing by deleting all data pertaining to nonbargaining unit employees, and all other data except the names and minority status of bargaining unit employees. We agree.

[1] The Minority Listing is statistical data, compiled from data collected by visual identification by the Respondent, which lists the names, grade plan, pay plan, position title, occupational series and organizational element of all female and minority employees in the Respondent's work force.

The Respondent in its exceptions again contends that, notwithstanding any obligation it might otherwise have under section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute, the provisions of the Privacy Act[2] prohibit it from disclosing the Minority Listing.[3] The Authority has previously determined that disclosure of necessary data to exclusive representatives pursuant to requests under section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute is not prohibited by the Privacy Act if the disclosure will not result in a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy,[4] and that in making such determination in each case the

[3] The Respondent also contends that, pursuant to the provisions of Equal Employment Opportunity Regulation, 29 C.F.R. § 1613.302 (1984), it could not lawfully provide the Minority Listing to the Union. The Respondent argues that the restrictive language in section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute, limiting an agency's duty to furnish data "to the extent not prohibited by law," incorporates the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) regulation. The Authority disagrees, and adopts the Judge's conclusion on this issue. The Authority finds that, while the EEOC has the authority to issue regulations that take precedence over other laws when such regulations apply to EEOC's own proceedings (see Internal Revenue Service, Fresno Service Center, Fresno, California v. FLRA, 706 F.2d 1019 (9th Cir. 1983)), its procedural regulations such as here involved serve rather only as guidelines to agencies, and do not have the force and effect of "law" as that term is used in section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute. See generally General Electric Company v. Gilbert, 429 U.S. 125 (1976).

[4] See Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), Fort Carson, Colorado, 17 FLRA 624 (1985), reversed and remanded as to other matters, sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1345 v. FLRA, No. 85-1378 (D.C. Cir. June 27, 1986); Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, National Office, Washington, D.C., 18 FLRA No. 74 (1985); U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Washington, D.C., 20 FLRA No. 37 (1985).

Authority will balance the necessity of the data for the Union's purposes against the degree of intrusion on the individual's privacy interests caused by disclosure of the data. The Authority notes that the necessary data here requested is to be used by the Union to determine whether the Respondent is complying with the provisions of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, to determine whether to file grievances in certain merit promotion actions, and to prepare for contract negotiations, and has considered the limited circulation the data is likely to receive.[5/]

In striking the balance between the limited intrusion on the privacy interests of the three highest ranked individuals and the selected employees, and the Union's need to identify these individuals and their minority status in order to pursue its representational duties under the Statute, which will also ensure that the Government's merit promotion system operates fairly, the Authority finds that disclosure of the necessary data would not result in a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy and hence would not contravene the Privacy Act so as to be prohibited by law within the meaning of section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute. Therefore, the Authority concludes that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by failing and refusing to furnish the Union with the necessary data contained in the Minority Listing.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, it is hereby ordered that U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District, Kansas City, Missouri, shall:

[5/] Should the data in fact become widely known, the Authority would necessarily take this experience into account in future similar cases.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, furnish to the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29, the exclusive representative of a unit of its employees, the data contained in the "Status of Minority Employment" listing which the Authority has deemed necessary for the full and proper performance by such exclusive representative of its representational duties.

(b) Post at its facilities at the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District, Kansas City, Missouri, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

This is a proceeding under Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1192, 5 U.S.C. 7101 et seq. (1982), commonly known as the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, and hereinafter referred to as the Statute, and the rules and regulations issued thereunder and published at 5 CFR 2411 et seq.

This proceeding was initiated by the filing of an unfair labor practice charge on March 2, 1984, which was amended on May 24. The Region VII Office of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (the Authority) investigated the charges and, on May 30, issued a complaint against Respondent.

The complaint alleges that on or about February 7 and 15, 1984, and pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 7114(b)(4), the Charging Party (also referred to herein as the Union) submitted to Respondent written requests for a copy of the "Status of Minority Employment" listing, which concerns the race, sex, national origin, and disability status of Respondent's employees, and that on or about February 8 and 23, and at all times since, Respondent has failed and refused to furnish the Charging Party the data requested, thereby engaging in unfair labor practices in violation of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8).[1]

> (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise of any right under this chapter; . . .
> (5) to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with a labor organization as required by this chapter. . . [or]
> (8) to otherwise fail or refuse to comply with any provision of this chapter.

5 U.S.C. 7114 provides that:

> (b) The duty of an agency and an exclusive representative to negotiate in good faith under subsection (a) of this section shall include the obligation - . . .
> (4) in the case of an agency, to furnish to the exclusive representative involved, or its authorized representative, upon request and, to the extent not prohibited by law, data -
> (A) which is normally maintained by the agency in the regular course of business;
> (B) which is reasonably available and necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining; and

Respondent admits that the listing has been requested, is normally maintained by it in the regular course of business, and that it has refused to furnish it. Respondent denies that the requested data is reasonably available and necessary for collective bargaining. And it avers that it is constrained from furnishing it by 29 CFR 1613.302(b); by the Privacy act, 5 U.S.C. 552(b); and by 5 U.S.C. 7116(b)(4). And it further avers that it disclosed all relevant and necessary data in accordance with 5 U.S.C. 7114(b)(4).

A hearing on the matter was held in Kansas City, Missouri, on July 10, 1984. The parties appeared, adduced documentary evidence, and examined witnesses. Briefs were filed on August 30, by Respondent, and on August 31 by the General Counsel, pursuant to an August 6 order extending the briefing time until August 31 for good cause shown by the General Counsel of the Authority in an unopposed motion.

Based upon the record made in this proceeding, my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and the briefs, I make the following findings of fact and conclusions of law and recommend the entry of the following order.

Findings of Fact[2]

1. It is admitted that the Charging Party is a labor organization and the Respondent is an agency within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(3) and (4).

2. It is also admitted that the Charging Party has been the exclusive representative of a unit of Respondent's employees since August 5, 1970. The bargaining unit fluctuates between 650 and 750 employees. Its members are spread over approximately 30 installations in 5 states, with stewards in only 2 of the 30.

3. It is also admitted that the Respondent and the Charging Party have been parties to a collective bargaining agreement, effective July 1, 1981 to July 1, 1984, which contains, inter alia, a provision stating that no employee will be discriminated against because of, inter alia, race, sex, national origin, and physical handicap. See Article 6 of GC 2 at page 7. The agreement also contains provisions relative to merit promotion (Article 14 of GC 2 at page 25); equal employment opportunity (EEO, Article 15 of GC 2 at page 28); and a grievance procedure which provides for the processing of grievances concerning equal employment and discrimination complaints (Article 9 of GC 2 at pages 14 and see also TR 49 and 79).

4. In late November or early December, 1983, Gary W. Divine, Union President, met with Elvin J. Gant, the Respondent's Equal Employment Manager, to discuss ways both could "firm up" the relationship between the Union and the Equal Employment Opportunity Office (EEOO), and to discuss a grievance being processed by the Union (TR 22). During this conversation Mr. Gant stated that there was "institutional racism" within the Respondent and, in particular, stated that although there was a large number of minority candidates ranked in the top three on merit promotion referrals, they were routinely not selected (TR 22). Mr. Gant also indicated that he had the documents to verify these statements.[3]

5. Based upon the statements of Mr. Gant, the Union felt compelled, for contract administration purposes, to investigate his allegation of institutional racism. Accordingly, on December 30, 1983, in a letter to Colonel Gurnie C. Gunter, Respondent's District Engineer, Mr. Divine, referencing "information Local 29 ha[d] received from Mr. Gant of [his] staff and in the interest of proper contract administration," requested, pursuant to Section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute, "copies of all DA 2600's dated 1 July 1981 to present; wherein one of the three highest ranked candidates was not selected for the bargaining unit position in question" (G.C. Exh. 3).

6. Department of Army Form 2600 (DA 2600) is a referral and selection roster showing the position to be filled, and listing the best qualified candidates and their present position. The form is forwarded to the selecting supervisor. Article 14, Section 6 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement provides that:

> Selections. The selecting official should normally choose one candidate from the three highest rankings. Any candidate may be selected provided the selecting official furnishes a statement indicating why he/she believes the selected candidate can perform more effectively and efficiently than any candidate in the three highest rankings.

See GC 2 at page 26.

7. Shortly thereafter, Robert G. Blaylock, Respondent's Chief of the Management-Employee Relations and Training Branch of the Personnel Office, told the Union that he would allow the Union access to the DA 2600s contained in the merit promotion files which the Union felt it needed. The Union chief steward and another steward reviewed about 500 merit promotion packages, from which they pulled approximately 150 DA 2600s. According to Mr. Divine, the DA 2600s were requested so that the Union could determine, under the merit promotion process, who was selected for a position. This would, in turn, assist the Union in finding out whether the individual selected was among the three highest ranked candidates, whether a minority candidate was listed, and finally whether the minority candidate was selected.

8. The Union's preliminary review of the DA 2600s revealed that the three highest ranked candidates were not selected approximately 50 per cent of the time. In addition, four position selections, with their accompanying DA 2600s and supporting documents, were particularly instructive to the Union.

a. The first concerned selections for two vacancies in the position of power plant trainee. The DA 2600 listed 14 candidates which, according to a stamp placed on the DA 2600 by the Personnel Office, included 2 females and 1 minority. This DA 2600 was of interest because the selecting supervisor wrote that he selected one of the two candidates because "[h]is selection will also provide a start in overcoming a severe underrepresentation of minorities in this career field" (GC 4). Consequently, two facts became evident from this DA 2600: that the Personnel Office stamp indicated that the selecting supervisor was being notified of minority and female applicants; and that the supervisor's justifications for one of the selections indicated that in at least one case minority consideration had been a factor in the selection. Since it was the Union's understanding that the merit promotion article (Article 14) of the agreement required selections only to be based on merit, and not on race, creed, color, national origin or sex, the Union felt there may have been a contract violation in this instance. Respondent's chief of labor-management relations, Robert G. Blaylock, conceded that it was the policy of the Personnel Office to make merit selections for promotion "without regard to race or sex or any other non-merit factor" (TR 88).

b. The Union's review of the DA 2600s also revealed a possible problem with a selection for the position of civil engineering technician in the Construction Division. In a November 16, 1983, memorandum to the selecting supervisor for this position, Mr. Gant stated, in part, that there was one minority applicant on the referral list for this position, and that Respondent had a severe underrepresentation of minority employees in this particular career field, which should be considered together with other selection criteria. The first DA 2600 for this position indicates that on December 12, 1983, the selecting supervisor made his selection. In a memorandum dated December 15, 1983, to Colonel Gunter, Mr. Gant states that, given the underrepresentation currently existing, the proposed selection did not reflect appropriate support for the spirit, intent, or the implementation of affirmative action policies or objectives.

Thereafter, in a memorandum dated December 16, 1983, the then acting Construction Division Chief stated that while he agreed with Mr. Gant's comments, he supported the selecting supervisor's justifications for the selection. However, the second DA 2600 for this position, dated January 22, 1984, shows that the selection supervisor overturned his original selection and selected a black male based upon merit factors, underrepresentation and Respondent's affirmative action program, indicating that the selection was partly based upon minority consideration, rather than merit only.

c. The Union's review of a DA 2600 for the position of Miscellaneous Documents Examiner, and its investigation of an unrelated employee grievance, revealed another possible problem selection. During investigation of the grievance, the Union learned that the selecting supervisor had originally proposed selecting two employees, but that Mr. Gant did not concur in one of the selections because of the absence and underrepresentation of black employees in this particular career field, and he recommended selection of the black employee on the referral list. Mr. Gant's March 17, 1983 memorandum to the selecting supervisor stated that race can be considered in the selection process and that support for equal employment opportunity (EEO) will be relied upon to determine whether a division chief has met the critical equal employment opportunity element of his or her job performance standards. Subsequently, the selecting supervisor selected the black female, and failed to select any of the three highest ranked candidates, even though the Union's investigation of the grievance revealed that the black female had the lowest ranking of all the candidates. Further, this DA 2600 was again stamped with a statement that the list included seven females and one minority.

d. Finally, the Union's review of a DA 2600 for the Contract Specialist or Contract Administrator position disclosed a fourth questionable selection regarding the administration of the contract's non-discrimination and merit promotion articles. This DA 2600 showed four candidates with the three highest rankings, a stamp stating that the list included nine females and four minorities, and that the person selected was not among one of the candidates in the three highest rankings. The DA 2600, however, did not reveal whether any of the four highest ranked candidates were minorities, and the Union was unable to identify whether two of the four were minorities.

e. The Union's preliminary review of the other DA 2600s disclosed that the candidates in the top three rankings were not being selected approximately one half of the time, and that underrepresentation was a consideration in the selection process.

f. The Union was left with two areas where patterns of discrimination may have been occurring - (1) minority candidates being among the three highest rankings and not being selected, and (2) minority candidates being given preferential treatment and selected over candidate within the three highest rankings. However, from the DA 2600s alone, only the female candidates could normally be identified. The minority candidates could not readily be identified. Accordingly, in order to fully investigate Mr. Gant's allegation of institutional racism and to complete its discrimination analysis, the Union felt it needed the names and the minority status of the candidates to see if there was the possibility of a union grievance or contract compliance problem with the merit promotion article, the employee rights article, and the EEO article.

9. As a result, in late January 1984, Mr. Divine met with Mr. Gant in the EEOO. According to Mr. Divine, he asked Mr. Gant about the stamp showing the number of female and minority applicants on the DA 2600s and if this was done by the EEOO. He was told by Mr. Gant that the stamp was put on by the Personnel Office, and that Mr. Gant did review the stamp for accuracy and completeness using a Status of Minority Employment lising.[4] The listing is a computer-generated, by-name listing of all minorities and women in Respondent's workforce which also identifies their grade, pay plan, position title, occupational series and organizational element. Mr. Gant uses this listing, as raw data, to compile the Affirmative Action Panel Report, a quarterly publication, which assesses Respondent's work force profile in terms of race, gender, grade, pay plan, and organizational element. Mr. Divine asked Mr. Gant if the Union could have access to the information on the listing, and explained the Union's investigation based on Mr. Gant's earlier allegation of institutional racism. Mr. Gant replied that the EEOO would be willing to cooperate in the Union's investigation and in gathering information. Mr. Gant did not indicate that he would give the listing to Mr. Divine.

10. On February 7, 1984, Mr. Divine sent another letter to Colonel Gunter. He referred to his earlier letter of December 30, 1983, requesting copies of the DA 2600s from July 1, 1981 (see finding 5, above) and noted that the Personnel Office had allowed the Union access to them. He requested one copy of each status of Minority Employment listing for the past two years so that the Union might "adequately analyze" the DA 2600s, and cited 5 U.S.C. 7114(a)(4). See GC 8. He stated his "understanding that these document [were] maintained by the Equal Employment Manager and w[ould] be provided upon request" (GC 8).

11. On February 8, 1984, Mr. Blaylock replied to Mr. Divine's February 7 letter to Colonel Gunter. In the letter he stated that the:

[4] Mr. Divine testified that Mr. Gant "showed" him the listing which he "looked at" (TR 45). Mr. Divine denied "show[ing]" the listing to Mr. Divine but admitted that the listing was on his desk when he talked to Mr. Divine about it. See TR 73. I find that Mr. Divine did view the listing during the late January discussion in Mr. Gant's office, as Respondent concedes (see RBr 3), and that Mr. Gant at least indicated to Mr. Divine its position on a desk.

> Statute prohibits the release of employment information by race or national origin. Any such data maintained may be used only in studies and analyses which contribute affirmatively to achieving the objectives of the equal employment opportunity program (See 5 CFR 29, Section 1613.302).

See GC 9. Mr. Blaylock testified that the citation used in his letter was incorrect and should have been 29 CFR 1613.302. See TR 90. The correct citation is to a regulation of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC).[5] Mr. Blaylock never contacted anyone at EEOC for an interpretation of the regulation or for guidance as to what it might mean. He thought it was "plain enough" (TR 91), but admitted that he really did not know the "standard" for individual privacy under the regulation (TR 95).

12. On February 9, 1984, Mr. Divine wrote to Mr. Blaylock and stated his view that refusal to furnish the requested data violated the Statute.

13. On February 15, 1984, in a letter to Colonel Gunter, Mr. Divine made a request for five items, and reiterated the request for the Status of Minority Employment, a copy of which, he explained, he had viewed briefly in the presence of Mr. Gant in late January 1984. Mr. Divine explained to Colonel Gunter that he was making the request as President of Local 29, "in order to prepare for upcoming contract negotiations and to ensure proper administration of the current contract" (GC 11). One of the "primary articles" to be renegotiated was the one concerning "merit promotion" (TR 50).

14. One February 23, 1984, Mr. Blaylock replied to Mr. Divine's letter of February 15. He furnished five of the items requested, but declined to furnish the Status of Minority Employment listing with the comment: "again I must remind you that the release of this information is prohibited by 29 CFR, Section 1613.302" (GC 12).

15. At the hearing, Mr. Blaylock testified that he also relied upon the Privacy Act in declining to furnish the requested listing, but never mentioned reliance upon it to the Union. The Union never indicated to him that it was "investigating a potential grievance" (TR 96).

16. At the hearing, the Union President testified that the Status of Minority Employment listing was needed in order to administer the current contract provisions, particularly Article 6 dealing the non-discrimination provision; Article 14, the merit-promotion provision; and Article 15, the equal employment opportunity provision. He further testified that it was needed also for contract negotiations due to commence in July 1984 because one of the primary articles to be negotiated was the merit promotion one, the Respondent having already given to the Union a "totally new promotion package" (TR 51). The Union had to know the extent of the problem in the merit promotion area as it related to discrimination; whether the contract needed tightening in that area; what emphasis would be placed on minority status and underrepresented positions; how these factors would be identified; and what weight should be given to them in the merit selection process.

17. Respondent never asked the Union why it needed the listing, or to clarify its request. Respondent never offered to sanitize the listing to limit it to bargaining unit members -- an action which the Union President testified would have been acceptable as far as non-unit positions were concerned.

18. However, on or about April 23, 1984, as part of a separate unfair labor practice charge, Respondent did provide to the Union the EEO Affirmative Action Panel Report for the first quarter of fiscal year 1984, as well as a listing of positions designated as underrepresented and other positions filled within the last year. See R 2. The Panel Report was not offered as alternative data to the Union's request for the Status of Minority Employment listing. See TR 56. The Panel Report, while giving an overall profile of Respondent's work force, was of no use to the Union's investigation of discrimination in the merit promotion area, since it did not identify employees by name, and did not allow the Union to identify the minority status of actual candidates on the DA 2600s. And the gross statistics represented by the Panel Report do not allow the Union to identify potential discrimination problems with particular vacancies, or a series of vacancies, which are required to file a grievance, or determine the extent of possible grievances.

19. The data contained in the Status of Minority Employment listing is maintained in Respondent's computer system. This data can be generated into a listing, in the form of a computer print-out, at little cost. When the listing is in computer print-out form, the listing is maintained in the EEO office and is used to compile the EEO Affirmative Action Reports. The form is destroyed after the Reports are compiled.

20. Respondent admits that the Status of Minority Employment listing was and is data normally maintained in the regular course of its business, and does not constitute guidance, advice, counsel, or training provided for management officials or supervisors relating to collective bargaining.

21. Respondent has furnished to the Union the names and addresses of bargaining-unit employees, and allows the Union access to its internal mail system.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel has established, by a preponderance of the evidence,[6] that Respondent committed an unfair labor practice, in violation of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8), by failing to furnish the Status of Minority Representation listings as requested by the Union pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 7114(b)(4).

a. The requested data met the statutory conditions for production.

With exceptions to be discussed infra, all that section 7114(b)(4) explicitly requires to justify a request for information is proof that the information sought is (1) "data;" that it is (2) "normally maintained by the agency in the regular course of business;" (3) that it is "readily available;" and (4) that it is "necessary for the full and proper discussion, understanding and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining." See section 7114(b)(4) quoted fully in footnote 1, supra. Respondent admits that the listings are data, normally maintained by it in the regular course of business. It is established by the record that this data can be easily generated in the form of a computer printout and is, thus, readily available..

As to the last element of proof, the necessity for the data sought, the Authority has held that "matters related to discrimination in employment" are "within the scope of the duty to bargain, under section 7117 of the Statute." See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604, 617 (1980). (See also Respondent's apparent concession on this point, at page 14 of its brief.)

The Authority has not yet ruled on the necessity of minority employment listings in a situation similar to the present case but, in situations arising in the private sector, the National Labor Relations Board had ruled; and the Board's decisions can be instructive, if not dispositive for Federal-sector, labor-relations matters. See Director of Administration, Headquarters, U.S. Air Force, 6 FLRA 110, 120-123 (1981). Thus, in Lucky Markets, Inc., 251 NLRB 836, 837 (1980), the union asked for, inter alia, a list containing the names, ages, race, sex, and marital status of all employees in the bargaining unit. The Board held the list was relevant and necessary, and must be disclosed, citing its prior decision in Westinghouse Electric Corporation, 239 NLRB 106, 108 (1978) wherein the Board, after noting the Union's duty of fair representation, stated:

[6] This is the statutory burden of proof. See 5 U.S.C. 7118(a)(7) and (8).

> Since the cases have plainly established that a union has a right to protect the employees it represents from discriminatory treatment by an employer, it follows that a union needs information related to race and sex in order to make proposals and then to take other action to correct such discrimination.

Also see Safeway Stores, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 691 F.2d 953, 957 (C.A. 10, 1982), holding that when anti-discrimination clauses are inserted into a bargaining agreement, the union has a duty to ensure that the contractual obligations are being met by the employer, and enforcing an order that information pertaining to the employment status, ethnic background and sex of employees be disclosed.

A similar role for Federal sector unions was explicated by Congressman William D. Ford, in a post-enactment statement in which he commented upon the fact that House and Senate conferees in the U.S. Congress had decided to remove from the Statute "the exclusion of discrimination matters from the definition of conditions of employment" which determines which matters are negotiable. Congressman Ford stated that this decision was made because of the belief that: "Federal sector unions should shoulder their full obligation to help achieve equality of employment opportunity in their agencies." See 124 Cong. Rec. H13606, daily ed. Oct. 14, 1978, quoted in full on page 991 of the Legislative History of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, (hereinafter, Legislative History), Committee Print No. 96-7 of the Subcommittee on Postal Personnel and Modernization of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, House of Representatives, 96th Cong., 1st Session. Congressman Ford was a member of the Subcommittee, and a sponsor of legislation that led to enactment of the Statute.

Here, the Union has shouldered this responsibility and bargained for and won from Respondent provisions in its contract relating to merit promotion (which the parties agree must not be on any other factor, such as race or sex); to equal employment opportunity; and to the handling of grievances involving equal employment and discrimination complaints. See finding 3, above. Here, the Union was investigating an allegation of institutional racism, made in particular as as to merit promotion selections and by one of Respondent's own managers. See finding 4. If true, the allegation raised problems of contract administration and the possible filing of grievances over actions that were becoming stale. Whether it was true depended upon information as to the minority status of candidates selected and rejected for promotion, a status which the Union could not always identify. See findings 8d and f. The Status of Minority Employment listings sought from Respondent contain this information.

Here, the Union was also preparing for upcoming negotiations over a contract due to expire July 1, 1984; and one of the primary articles to be renegotiated was the merit promotion article. See finding 13. The Union's investigation of discrimination in merit promotion selections was crucial to determining its negotiation strategies; whether the merit promotion article needed to be strengthened; or whether, and to what degree, minority status and underrepresentation should be given weight in the selection process. See finding 16.

The gross statistics, which Respondent did furnish to the Union, were helpful in showing underrepresented areas in the work force; but they were inadequate for showing whether current contract provisions were being violated as to particular merit promotion selections, and exact problems with the selection process that might help with the renegotiation of the merit promotion article being proposed by Respondent.

These are sufficient facts upon which to conclude that the information sought was necessary to enable the Union to effectively carry out its statutory representational obligations to bargain, to administer its contract, and to obtain evidence in order to handle any grievances based upon allegations of discrimination in making selections for promotions. It is noted that some of these selections were made over two years ago (see finding 5); and the Union needed to act promptly in determining whether to file grievances. See United States Environmental Protection Agency, Health Effects Research Laboratory, Cincinnati, Ohio, 16 FLRA 52, 54 (1984) wherein the Authority repeated its ruling that section 7114(b)(4) "requires management to furnish an exclusive representative with information which would enable the union to effectively carry out its representational obligation in connection with the processing of an employee grievance or the determination whether to file a grievance" (emphasis added).

b. The Union was precise enough in its demand. Respondent argues that the Union was not precise enough in stating its needs for the information sought. See RBr 14. What the Union told Respondent's managers was that it had information from the Equal Employment Manager that required it to look at copies of merit promotion papers (DA 2600s) for the past several years, wherein one of the three highest ranked candidates was not selected for a bargaining unit position (finding 5); that after looking at such papers it needed the Status of Minority Employment listings for the same years to adequately analyze the DA 2600s (finding 10); that it had viewed a listing, briefly, in the presence of the Equal Employment Manager (finding 13); and that it also needed the listings to prepare for the upcoming contract negotiations and to ensure proper administration of the current contract. See finding 13. The Union President told the Equal Employment Manager, before the requests for the listings were made, that he needed access to the information on the listing in connection with the allegation of institutional racism (finding 9).

With this information, an intelligent manager could have concluded that the Union was concerned about discrimination in particular past merit-promotion selections. In view of the fact that Respondent had submitted a new merit-promotion package to the Union in connection with renegotiation of this contract article, an intelligent manager could have also concluded that the Union needed to know what past practices were in regard to merit promotion selections vis-a-vis minorities. Had Respondent's managers been sincerely in doubt as to the need for the requested information, they could have requested clarification, which they did not do. See finding 17. Instead, Respondent's managers simply took the position that they need not furnish the information. See findings 11 and 14. Under these circumstances, the demand must be held as precise enough; and the Union cannot be faulted for not elaborating further.

c. It is irrelevant that the Union is able to obtain requested information from alternative sources.

Respondent stresses the fact that the Union has other means of obtaining the information sought, in that it "need only contact its membership and request the statistical information regarding race, sex, and national origin or any other pertinent data" (RBr 16). Respondent points to the sources it has made available to the Union -- namely use of its internal mail system, and the names and addresses of all bargaining-unit employees.

The fact that a union has alternative means to obtain information it seeks from the agency, through use of section 7114(b)(4), raises an unsettled issue of statutory construction, one on which the Authority has expressly reserved consideration. See Veterans Administration Regional Office, Denver, Colorado (VA), 10 FLRA 453, 458, fn. 11 (1982).

Nothing in the legislative history of the Statute provides any clue of congressional intent on this issue. See references to section 7114(b)(4) at pages 92, 93, 144, 262, 337, 403, 404, 694, 914, 926, 974, and 995 (a post-enactment statement) of the Legislative History of the Statute.

The language of the Statute seems plain enough, however. It deals specifically with exemptions from its reach (see footnote 1, above). It makes no mention of an exemption when alternative sources of information are available to a union. And this makes sense. After all, Congress found that allowing employees to participate in decisions that affect them, through labor organization of their own choosing, contributes to "the effective conduct of public business." See 5 U.S.C. 7101(a)(1)(B). Ineffectiveness will result if public unions are required to scramble around for information necessary for them to represent public employees, even though the information is maintained by public agencies in their files or computer memories. The time and resources which a public union could spend on representational duties on behalf of public employees would be diverted to this needless pursuit of information.

In dealing with other issues raised under section 7114(b)(4), the Authority has favored a broad interpretation of management's duty under it. When called upon to decide whether an agency had a duty to furnish information for purposes of a grievance involving a matter that was nonnegotiable under the parties' contract, the Authority noted how "broadly" section 7114(b)(4) reached, and concluded that the duty to furnish the information did exist. See U.S. Customs Service, Region VII, Los Angeles, California, 10 FLRA 251, 253 (1982). And when called upon to decide whether the agency must furnish the data cost free, the Authority held that it must. See its VA decision wherein it held that an interpretation requiring cost-free information "would further Congressional intent to require an agency to furnish the data" (10 FLRA at 456).

So here, I conclude that Congressional intent is furthered by requiring an agency to furnish to a union information necessary to the union's representational duties, when it is normally maintained by and reasonably available to the agency, and without regard to whether sources other than the agency's files or computer memory may be available to the union for the information.

d. The release of the data sought is not "prohibited by law" within the meaning of section 7114(b)(4).

In denying the Union's request for the data, Respondent relied solely upon regulations of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). See findings 11 and 14. These regulations provide that:

> (b) Data shall be collected only by visual identification and shall be disclosed only in the form of gross statistics. An agency shall not collect or maintain any information of the race or national origin of individual employees except when an automated data processing system is used in accordance with standards and requirements prescribed by the Commission to insure individual privacy and the separation of that information from personnel records.

See 29 CFR 1613.302, emphasis by Respondent (RBr 3). These regulations were formulated and last amended by EEOC prior to passage of the Statute. See 34 FR 5371 (Mar. 19, 1969) as amended at 34 FR 14024 (Sept. 4, 1969) and redesignated at 43 FR 60971 (Dec. 29, 1978).

The General Counsel argues that the EEOC "regulation" cannot preclude release of data to which it is otherwise entitled under section 7114(a)(4), in that section 7114(a)(4) conditions release only to the extent not prohibited by "law," and that "law" refers to a congressional enactment, not an agency regulations.

As in cases cited at pages 7 and 9-10 of Respondent's brief, courts, including the United States Supreme Court, have held that an agency or departmental regulation can have "the force and effect of law if it be not in conflict with express statutory provision." See Maryland Casualty Co. v. United States, 251 U.S. 342, 349 (1920), noting that the regulation must also be "addressed to and reasonably adapted to the enforcement of an act of Congress the administration of which is confided to such department." EEOC, of course, is not charged with the administration of the Statute here involved. And here this Statute expressly deals with the release of information to a union. In formulating this provision, Congress took pains to spell out specific conditions and exemptions governing the furnishing of information by agencies to unions representing their employees. Thus, it is unlikely that Congress would have intended for agencies, such as EEOC, to promulgate their own regulations on the matter, or, in this case, to have its express statutory provisions frustrated because of an agency regulation promulgated even before Congress spoke to the duty to produce, in 5 U.S.C. 7114(b)(4).

The unlikelihood of such a congressional intent is bolstered by the fact that Congress, in formulating the provisions of the Statute, used the terms "law, rule or regulation" (emphasis added) in the sections immediately preceding and following section 7114(b)(4), as well as in several other provisions of the Statute. See sections 7114(a)(5)(B); 7114(c)(2) and (3); 7117(a)(1); and 7122. This indicates that the use of only the term "law," in section 7114(b)(4), was deliberate and purposeful. As the General Counsel argues at page 27 of his brief, to construe the use of the term "law" to include "regulation" could thwart the exclusive representative's right to information from an agency, because an agency could simply promulgate its own regulations prohibiting the release of the information.

Thus, I conclude that Congress did not intend the use of the term "law," in section 7114(b)(4), to embrace regulations of EEOC.

As an affirmative defense in answering the complaint, Respondent raised, for the first time, the issue of the Privacy Act prohibiting the release of the requested data. See findings 11 and 14. Respondent's Chief of Management-Employee Relations and Training Branch testified that he also relied upon the Privacy Act in declining to release the data, but admits that he never mentioned the Privacy Act to the Union. See finding 15. While I do not conclude that Respondent was precluded from raising the issue in its answer to the complaint, I note that the failure to raise it with the Union accounts for why the Union did not try to obtain the listings in an appropriately sanitized format to meet Privacy Act considerations. See finding 15.

The pertinent portion of the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. 5529(b), provides that:

> No agency shall disclose any record which is contained in a system of records by any means of communication to any person, or to another agency, except pursuant to a > written request by, or with the prior written consent of the individual to whom the record pertains, unless disclosure would be - . . . (2) required under section 552 of this title. . . .

Section 552 of Title 5 is the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Section 552(b)(6) of FOIA prohibits disclosure of "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

No "clearly unwarranted" intrusion would result from the disclosure here sought. Assuming that Respondent compiled its Status of Minority listing in accordance with the EEOC regulations quoted above, it did so "only by visual identification." Thus, the information sought is "public" in a sense, anyway, and unlike information that exists only in agency files, as was the situation in the cases cited by Respondent at pages 9-12 of its brief. See Detroit Edison Co. v. N.L.R.B., 440 U.S. 301 (1979) holding protected employee aptitude tests; Local 2047, American Federation of Government v. Defense General Supply, 423 F. Supp. 481 (E.D. VA, 1976), affirmed per uniam, 573 F.2d 184 (C.A. 4, 1978), holding protected the names of employees on lists in respect to awards, promotions, reductions in force, and abuse of leave; and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1745 and Veterans Administration, 13 FLRA 543 (1983) holding non-negotiable a union proposal to allow disclosure of records used by a promotion panel to any rejected candidate for the position, on the ground of Privacy Act restrictions.8/

Balanced against the minor invasion of personal privacy involved here is the Union's need for the information in order to protect the bargaining unit against discrimination in job actions, to administer the contract's provisions on equal employment opportunity and merit promotions, and to bargain intelligently on Respondent's proposal for a revised merit promotion article. While the Union could go out and visually identify each bargaining unit employee, this would require an enormous effort and waste of official time, as the bargaining unit is scattered over approximately 30 installations in 5 States with stewards in only 2 of the 30 installations While the Union could solicit this information from the bargaining-unit members by use of the mails, there is no assurance of a complete or prompt enough response to be helpful in scheduled contract

7/ Another case cited by Respondent, International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, AFL-CIO, CLC v. National Labor Relations Board, 658 F. 2d 18 (1980) could not be found where cited. In any went, the copies of EEO complaints apparently involved there, would also be kept in agency files and not be generally available to the public.

negotiations or in filing grievances on job actions which were already over two years old.[8]

However, the listings should be sanitized to exclude non-bargaining unit employees. See United States Environmental Protection Agency, Health Effects Research Laboratory, Cincinnati, Ohio, 16 FLRA 52, 55 (1984), holding that information as to non-bargaining unit employees (performance appraisal work sheets) need not be furnished under section 7114(b)(4) as the information was not necessary or relevant to assist the Union in determining whether a grievance was warranted over the failure of certain bargaining unit employees to be rated outstanding. Here, the Union apparently agrees that information as to non-bargaining unit employees is not appropriate or needed. See finding 17.[9]

The listings should also be sanitized to exclude all but the names and minority status of bargaining-unit employees, since these are the sole concerns of the Union in obtaining these listings. See findings 8d and f and 16.

In view of the above conclusions, it is unnecessary to decide other issues raised by the General Counsel.

Ultimate Findings and Recommended Order

The General Counsel has proved, by a preponderance of the evidence, that Respondent has committed unfair labor practices, in violation of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) as alleged in the complaint.

Accordingly, and pursuant to 5 CFR 2423.29 and 5 U.S.C. 7118, the Authority hereby orders that the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District, Kansas City, Missouri, shall:

8/ Compare Veterans Administration Regional Office, Denver, Colorado, 7 FLRA 629 (1982), adopting the conclusion of Administrative Law Judge Salvatore J. Arrigo that "arguments against supplying such data [names of individuals corresponding to the alphanumerical designations used by the rating panel needed to process a grievance over a merit promotion selection], such as those raised by Respondent herein with regard to the applicability of the Freedom of Information Act, have been frequently raised and rejected when the privacy rights under the FOIA were balanced against a union's representational rights under the Executive Order [11491, under which Federal sector labor relations were conducted prior to the Statute] and the paramount public interest." 7 FLRA at 637-638.

9/ As to the other exemptions from disclosure in section 7114(b)(C), Respondent admits that they are not applicable here. See paragraph 8(d) to GC 1(d) and (e).

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing or failing to furnish upon request of the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29, herein NFFE, the Status of Minority Employment listing for all unit employees, as appropriately sanitized, which information is necessary and relevant for the NFFE to discharge its obligations as the exclusive representative to represent the interests of all employees in the exclusively represented unit.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, make available to NFFE, the Status of Minority Employment listing for all unit employees, as appropriately sanitized, which information is relevant and necessary to enable NFFE to discharge its obligations as the exclusive representative to represent the interests of all employees in the exclusively represented unit.

(b) Post at its facilities copies of the attached Notice To All Employees on forms to be furnished by the Regional Director, Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the District Engineer, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District, Kansas City, Missouri, and shall be posted and maintained by him for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The District Engineer shall take reasonable steps to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to 5 CFR 2423.30, notify the Regional Director, Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER ON REMAND

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority pursuant to a remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The question involved is whether "competitive areas" within an agency for reduction-in-force (RIF) purposes are within the duty to bargain under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute).

II. Background

In a previous decision in this case, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and Department of the Army, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District, Kansas City, Missouri, 16 FLRA 75 (1984), the Authority held, as relevant here, that the following Union proposal defining the competitive area to be used for a RIF was outside the duty to bargain:

Section 3.

The following definition(s) shall apply:
Competitive Area: The geographic area that > usually constitutes one area for employment purposes. It includes any population center (or two or more neighboring areas) and the surrounding localities in which people live and reasonably can be expected to travel in their usual employment.

On review, the D.C. Circuit found an apparent inconsistency between this Authority finding and the Authority's finding in Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard, 14 FLRA 38 (1984) (ACT) that a proposed competitive area was within the duty to bargain.*/ It remanded this case and another case with the same holding, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32, AFL-CIO and Office of Personnel Management, 14 FLRA 754 (1984) (Local 32), and directed the Authority to address and resolve the apparent conflict between its Local 32 and ACT decisions. Local 32, American Federation of Government Employees v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 498 (D.C. Cir. 1985).

III. Analysis

The proposal at issue in this case would narrow the established competitive area encompassing four states by restricting it to the local commuting area. Even as more narrowly defined, the proposed competitive area would still include both bargaining unit employees and positions and nonbargaining unit employees and positions.

In its Decision and Order on Remand in the Local 32 case referred to above, the Authority responded to various questions raised by the court. With respect to the apparent conflict between the Local 32 and ACT decisions, the Authority reconciled and distinguished the two cases as follows:

> In summary, the proposals in both the ACT and Local 32 cases would have directly determined the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. The critical difference between the proposals lies in the nature and degree of the impact they would have on nonunit employees. The competitive area proposed in ACT only affected > conditions of employment of nonunit employees indirectly: it excluded them from the negotiated competitive area. The proposed competitive area in Local 32, in contrast, consistent with the requirements of applicable OPM regulations, encompassed nonbargaining unit employees in the negotiated competitive area. It directly determined, that is, prescribed, their competitive area.

*/ The Union withdrew its appeal of the Authority's other holding in the case concerning reassignments (Union Proposal 1), and therefore the court did not have that matter before it.

> Consistent with this analysis, in all cases since Local 32 dealing with competitive areas where an agency has objected to bargaining based upon the fact that a proposed competitive area would directly determine nonunit employees' conditions of employment, the Authority has held the proposals to be outside the mandatory obligation to bargain.

American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32, AFL-CIO and Office of Personnel Management, 22 FLRA No. 49, slip op. at 8 (1986). Accordingly, the Authority concluded that the proposal in Local 32 was nonnegotiable because it would directly determine conditions of employment for employees outside the bargaining unit. As the proposal at issue in this case, similar to the one in Local 32, would establish a competitive area which necessarily includes nonunit employees within its boundaries, consistent with the requirements of applicable OPM regulations, it also is outside the mandatory obligation to bargain.

IV. Conclusion

Accordingly, for the reasons stated by the Authority in its Decision and Order on Remand concerning the proposal in the Local 32 case, the proposal at issue here also is nonnegotiable.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 24, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON REMAND

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority pursuant to a remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The question involved is whether "competitive areas" within an agency for reduction-in-force (RIF) purposes are within the duty to bargain under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute).

II. Background

In a previous decision in this case, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1705 and General Services Administration, 17 FLRA 945 (1985), the Authority held that the following Union proposal defining a competitive area within the Agency for purposes of a RIF was outside the duty to bargain:

> The competitive area for bargaining unit employees shall consist of employees of FPRS, OIRM, GMA, and PBS located within the GSA Central Office organization, Metropolitan Washington, D.C. area.

The Union's petition for review of that decision to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia

Circuit was pending when the D.C. Circuit issued its decision in Local 32, American Federation of Government Employees v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 498 (D.C. Cir. 1985), remanding two related cases involving the same issue*/ and directing the Authority to address and resolve what the court described as an apparent conflict between the Authority's finding in those cases and the Authority's findings in Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard, 14 FLRA 38 (1984) (ACT) that a proposed competitive area was within the duty to bargain. On December 3, 1985, pursuant to the Authority's unopposed request, the D.C. Circuit remanded the instant case for further consideration in light of the court's decision and the Authority's consideration of those cases on remand. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1705 v. FLRA, No. 85-1399 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 3, 1985).

III. Analysis

The proposal at issue here would establish a competitive area consisting of portions of four subordinate organizational elements within the Agency's Metropolitan Washington, D.C. Central Office, and would include both bargaining unit and nonbargaining unit employees within that proposed competitive area.

In its Decision and Order on Remand in the Local 32 case referred to above, the Authority addressed the apparent conflict between the Local 32 and ACT decisions, reconciling and distinguishing the two cases as follows:

> In summary, the proposals in both the ACT and Local 32 cases would have directly determined the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. The critical difference between the proposals lies in the nature and degree of the impact they would have on nonunit employees. DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the following Union proposal. The proposal was presented during negotiations concerning the relocation of bargaining unit employees:

> Management agrees that bargaining unit employees will have adequate access to telephones in the performance of their official duties if such is required as part of the employees' duties and responsibilities to perform at an acceptable level.

II. Positions of the Parties

In its petition, the Union asserts that the proposal does not concern the technology of performing work since it is limited to seeking adequate access to telephones only if use of them is required by the Agency as part of the employees' duties. It also contends that the proposal is an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute for employees adversely affected by their relocation.

The Agency argues that the proposal interferes with its right under section 7106(b)(1) to determine the technology of performing work. It contends that, despite the Union's representation that the proposal leaves to the Agency the determination as to whether to use telephones, it would nevertheless have the practical effect of requiring negotiation over the numbers, types and locations of telephones provided. It would also subject the Agency's decisions on these matters to arbitral review. For these reasons, the Agency argues that the proposal is not within the duty to bargain.

The Union did not file a response to the Agency's statement of position.

III. Analysis and Conclusions

A. The Proposal Concerns the Technology of Performing Work

The Authority has previously found that a proposal which required that adequate telephones be provided for the conduct of government business was not within the duty to bargain because it concerned the technology of performing work. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 644, AFL-CIO and U.S. Department of Labor, Mine Health and Safety Administration, Morgantown, West Virginia, 15 FLRA 902 (1984) (Proposal 3). The proposal in this case would have a similar effect as that in Mine Safety and Health Administration, Morgantown in that it would subject substantive decisions about using telephones to accomplish the Agency's work to bilateral determination. In this regard, the Union has not rebutted the Agency's contention that the proposal would intrude upon its discretion to determine the numbers, types and locations of telephones to be provided for employees. Based on the reasons expressed in Mine Safety and Health Administration, Morgantown, and the cases cited in that decision, the Authority finds that this proposal likewise concerns the technology of performing work under section 7106(b)(1), and is bargainable only at the election of the Agency.

B. The Record Doesn't Establish That the Proposal Concerns an Appropriate Arrangement

A proposal is negotiable as an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3), if it would not excessively interfere with management's rights under section 7106. National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA 24 (1986). In applying this standard the Authority considers, as a threshold matter and based on the parties' submissions, whether the proposal is intended to be an arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of its rights. In this case, the Union has offered no support whatsoever for its assertion that the proposal concerns an appropriate arrangement. We have no information concerning the nature and extent of the adverse effects, if any, on employees which might result from their relocation. Additionally, the record provides no basis for assessing how this proposal would address or ameliorate those adverse effects. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Madison Region, 21 FLRA No. 104 (1986) (Union Proposal 3). Consequently, we cannot conclude that this proposal involves an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3).

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 24, 1986.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Tim Bornstein filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

In his award the Arbitrator found that the 30-day suspension of the grievant was for just cause and denied the grievance.

III. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority has determined that it is without jurisdiction to review the Union's exceptions. Section 7122(a) of the Statute provides:

> Either party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award pursuant to the arbitration (other than an award relating to a matter described in section 7121(f) of this title).

As relevant to this case, the matters described in section 7121(f) of the Statute include adverse actions under 5 U.S.C. § 7512, such as a suspension for more than 14 days. Review of an arbitration award relating to such matters must be obtained in accordance with 5 U.S.C. § 7703, i.e., in the same manner and under the same conditions as if the matter involved had been decided by the Merit Systems Protection Board. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1857 and Sacramento Air Logistics Center, McClellan Air Force Base, 21 FLRA No. 41 (1986).

Because the Arbitrator's award relates to a matter covered by section 7512, under section 7122(a) of the Statute, exceptions to the award may not be filed with the Authority. Consequently, the Authority is without jurisdiction to review the exceptions.

IV. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons, the Union's exceptions are dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 24, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON REMAND

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority pursuant to a remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The question involved is whether "competitive areas" within an agency for reduction-in-force (RIF) purposes are within the duty to bargain under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute).

II. Background

In a previous decision in this case, National Association of Government Employees, Local R7-23 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters 375th Air Base Group (MAC), Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 63 (1985), the Authority held that the following Union proposal defining a competitive area within the Agency for purposes of a RIF was outside the duty to bargain:

> All bargaining unit positions in all areas serviced by the CCPO shall be in the same competitive area for reduction-in-force purposes.

The Union's appeal of that decision to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit was pending when the D.C. Circuit issued its decision in Local 32, American Federation of Government Employees v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 498 (D.C. Cir. 1985), remanding two related cases involving the same issue*/ and directing the Authority to address and resolve what the Court described as an apparent conflict between the Authority's findings in those cases and the Authority's finding in Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard, 14 FLRA 38 (1984)(ACT) that a proposed competitive area was within the duty to bargain. On December 3, 1985, pursuant to the Authority's unopposed request, the D.C. Circuit remanded the instant case for further consideration in light of the Court's decision and the Authority's consideration of those cases on remand. National Association of Government Employees, Local R7-23 v. FLRA, No. 85-1522 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 3, 1985).

III. Analysis

The proposal at issue here seeks to define a competitive area within the Agency for RIF purposes which would include all bargaining unit positions serviced by the Consolidated Civilian Personnel Office (CCPO). As noted in the Authority's previous decision in this case, the CCPO services areas that are composed of both bargaining unit and nonbargaining unit employees, as well as appropriated fund and nonappropriated fund employees.

In its Decision and Order on Remand in the Local 32 case referred to above, the Authority addressed the apparent conflict between the Local 32 and ACT decisions, reconciling and distinguishing the two cases as follows:

Accordingly, the Authority concluded that the proposal in Local 32 was nonnegotiable because it would directly determine conditions of employment for employees outside the bargaining unit.

The Union claims that its proposal is not intended to include nonbargaining unit employees or employees represented by another bargaining agent in the proposed competitive area but only to place all bargaining unit employees it represents in a single competitive area. Despite the Union's intent, applicable OPM regulations do not allow a competitive area to be defined in terms of positions (such as bargaining unit positions) but require all employees within the stated organizational or geographic boundaries to be included. As the proposal at issue in this case, similar to the one in Local 32, would establish a competitive area which necessarily includes nonunit employees by operation of applicable OPM regulations, it also is outside the mandatory obligation to bargain.

IV. Conclusion

Accordingly, for the reasons stated by the Authority in its Decision and Order on Remand concerning the proposal in the Local 32 case, the proposal at issue here also is nonnegotiable.

DECISION AND ORDER ON REMAND

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority pursuant to a remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The question involved is whether "competitive areas" within an agency for reduction-in-force (RIF) purposes are within the duty to bargain under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute).

II. Background

In a previous decision in this case, National Treasury Employees Union and Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 20 FLRA No. 21 (1985), the Authority held that the following Union proposal defining a competitive area within the Agency for purposes of a RIF was outside the duty to bargain:

> Our counterproposal in this area is to use commuting area as the area of competition and to allow normal personnel considerations to be used in determining the similarity of positions.

The Union's appeal of that decision to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit was pending when the D.C. Circuit issued its decision in Local 32, American Federation of Government Employees v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 498 (D.C. Cir. 1985), remanding two related cases involving the same issue[*/] and directing the Authority to address and resolve what the Court described as an apparent conflict between the Authority's findings in those cases and the Authority's finding in Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard, 14 FLRA 38 (1984)(ACT) that a proposed competitive area was within the duty to bargain. On January 22, 1986, pursuant to the Authority's unopposed request, the D.C. Circuit remanded the instant case for further consideration in light of the Court's decision and the Authority's consideration of those cases on remand. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, No. 85-1749 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 22, 1986).

III. Analysis

The Union's proposal in this case would define a competitive area within the Agency for RIF purposes as the "commuting area."

In its Decision and Order on Remand in the Local 32 case referred to above, the Authority addressed the apparent conflict between the Local 32 and ACT decisions, reconciling and distinguishing the two cases as follows:

> In summary, the proposals in both the ACT and Local 32 cases would have directly determined the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. The critical difference between the proposals lies in the nature and degree of the impact they would have on nonunit employees. The competitive area proposed in ACT only affected conditions of employment of nonunit employees indirectly: it excluded them from the negotiated competitive area. The proposed competitive area in Local 32, in contrast, consistent with the requirements of applicable OPM regulations, encompassed nonbargaining unit employees in the negotiated competitive area. It directly determined, that is, prescribed, their competitive area.

[*/] The two cases remanded by the Court were American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32, AFL-CIO and Office of Personnel Management, 14 FLRA 754 (1984)(Local 32) and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and Department of the Army, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District, Kansas City, Missouri, 16 FLRA 75 (1984).

> Consistent with this analysis, in all cases since Local 32 dealing with competitive areas where an agency has objected to bargaining based upon the fact that a proposed competitive area would directly determine nonunit employees' conditions of employment, the Authority has held the proposals to be outside the mandatory obligation to bargain.

American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32, AFL-CIO and Office of Personnel Management, 22 FLRA No. 49, slip op. at 8 (1986). Accordingly, the Authority concluded that the proposal in Local 32 was nonnegotiable because it would directly determine conditions of employment for employees outside the bargaining unit.

As noted in our previous decision in this case, while the Union asserts that its proposal applies only to bargaining unit employees, applicable OPM regulations require all employees within the stated organizational or geographic boundaries of the competitive area to be included. As the proposal at issue in this case, similar to the one in Local 32, would establish a competitive area which necessarily includes nonunit employees by operation of applicable OPM regulations, it also is outside the mandatory obligation to bargain.

IV. Conclusion

Accordingly, for the reasons stated by the Authority in its Decision and Order on Remand concerning the proposal in the Local 32 case, the proposal at issue here also is nonnegotiable.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 24, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of nine Union proposals.

II. Procedural Issue

The Union's Petition for Review contained a proposal concerning the staying of adverse personnel actions pending exhaustion of grievance and appeal rights. However, the Union included no document purporting to be an Agency head determination on that proposal, nor did the Agency address that proposal in its Statement of Position. Consequently, the referenced proposal is not appropriately before us for review. American Federation of State, County, and Municipals Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2910 and Library of Congress, 11 FLRA 632 n.1 (1983).

III. Union Proposal 1

> The Union may recommend to Management 10 employees for EEO Counselor positions. Management will select at least 2 of the candidates as counselors. Whereby a counselor serves as a bridge between the complainant and Management in the resolution of problems rather than as a chosen representative of the employee, and in order to avoid conflicts of interest, no Union Officer or Shop Steward may be nominated.

A. Positions of the Parties[1]

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 1 is inconsistent with management's rights, under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute, "to assign" and to determine the personnel by which the Agency's operations will be conducted. The Agency cites American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), enforced as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982) in support of its position.

The Union asserts that the proposal is not inconsistent with the right to assign the workforce because the duties assigned to counselors are not their primary function, but is only part time work.

B. Analysis

In requiring that equal employment opportunity counselors be selected from among a list of Union nominees, Union Proposal 1 is to the same effect as the disputed portion of Union Proposal XI which was found to be outside the duty to bargain in Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, 2 FLRA 604, 622-3 (1980). Proposal XI required that half of the agency's EEO Counselors be selected from a list of union nominees. We determined that the proposal directly prescribed the assignment of certain duties to particular employees and prevented the assignment of those duties to other employees. Concluding that the disputed part of the proposal was inconsistent with management's right to assign work, we noted that "EEO Counselors perform the duties associated with EEO counseling either as their total work assignment or in addition to the other duties which are regularly assigned to them and which comprise their appointed positions."

---

[1] The Union's positions with respect to all nine proposals are drawn from its petition for review because no reply brief was filed in this case.

C. Conclusion

For the same reasons stated in Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, we find that Union Proposal 1 also requiring management to select from a list of Union nominees, is outside the duty to bargain because it interferes with management's right to assign work pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.[2] The fact that the proposal concerns only part time duties does not alter this conclusion.

IV. Union Proposal 2

> The Union will be allowed to have one observer on the Position Management Committee. The observer will be designated by the President, the observer will be notified when the Position Management Committee meets.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency states that its Position Management Committee has responsibility for reviewing and recommending approval prior to implementation of all changes in organization involving work design, occupational distribution, grade distribution, staffing requirements and cost. The Agency asserts that, as the Committee is an integral part of its decision-making process, Union participation in that process would inhibit full and open deliberations and, thus, interfere with management's rights under section 7106 of the Statute. In support, the Agency cites National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1431 and Veterans Administration Medical Center, East Orange, New Jersey, 9 FLRA 988 (1982).

The Union notes that the Committee is a process whereby positions are allocated to bargaining unit employees and contends that the process by which "management engages in its rights [is] negotiable."

B. Analysis

As described by the Agency, the Position Management Committee in this case has responsibilities nearly identical to the committee of the same name on which the union sought representation in VA Medical Center, East Orange, 9 FLRA 988 (1982). There it was determined that the committee was an integral part of the process by which management decides and acts pursuant to rights reserved to it by the Statute. We held that union representation on the committee "would thereby impair the flexibility which Congress intended management officials to have under the Statute." We therefore concluded that the proposal "would directly interfere with management's rights under section 7106 of the Statute . . . ." While we note that the disputed proposal in this case adverts only to a Union "observer" on the committee, the presence of a Union designee would nonetheless "prevent management officials from engaging in free and open deliberations among themselves." 9 FLRA at 1002. Thus, contrary to the Union's view, the proposal is not merely a procedure to be followed by the Agency in exercising its reserved rights, but rather would inhibit management in reaching decisions and in acting with respect to those rights.

[2] In view of our conclusion concerning Union Proposal 1 and the long-standing precedent embodied in the cited case, we find it unnecessary to address the Agency's further contention that its right to determine the personnel by which its operations are to be conducted is also violated.

C. Conclusion

Consistent with our findings in VA Medical Center, East Orange, we conclude that Union Proposal 2 in the present case is outside the duty to bargain.

V. Union Proposal 3

> 1. Bargaining Unit employees will have use of the swimming pool when the pool is not being used for patient therapy. The Union will provide a qualified life guard to oversee the bargaining unit employees, when using the pool.
> 2. Bargaining Unit employees will have use of the gym on the 17th floor. The Recreation Equipment on the 17th floor will be available for the employees to use. It is understood that the gym and equipment will not be available for use by bargaining unit employees if they are being used by patients.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 3 does not concern matters principally related to conditions of employment. The proposal would require management to hire personnel to supervise employee use of the facilities. In addition, the prime beneficiaries of the facilities, hospital patients, would be unable to use them during the period set aside for employee use.

The Union asserts that the proposal relates to working conditions because access to the facilities would allow employees to relax during lunch and break periods and thereby enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of their work performance. Under the proposal, the Union would provide volunteers to supervise use of the facilities and would assume responsibility for security of the equipment.

B. Analysis

In view of the Union's offer of self-supervision of employee use of the recreation facilities involved, we find that the Agency has not sustained its argument that the proposal would require it to hire additional employees to oversee the unit employees' use of such facilities. In addition, since the proposal expressly provides that employees would have access to the recreation facilities only if such facilities are not being used by patients, patients would not be denied access to such facilities.

It is well established however, that the duty to bargain under the Statute extends only to "conditions of employment," as defined in section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute. Parties are obligated to negotiate concerning personnel policies, practices, and matters affecting working conditions. Consequently, proposals concerning employee activities, unrelated to assigned work, conducted while such employees are in a non-duty status, such as employee use of agency recreational facilities during non-duty time, have been held to be not within the bargaining obligation because they do not meet the section 7103(a)(14) definition. For example, see National Association of Government Employees, Local R5-168 and Department of the Army, Headquarters 5th Infantry Division and Fort Polk, Louisiana, 19 FLRA No. 75 (1985). In this case, the Union indicates that its proposal would grant employees access to the listed facilities during lunch and breaks or when the employees are otherwise in a non-duty status. Therefore, based on our holding in Fort Polk, Union Proposal 3 does not concern conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. See also United States Air Force, 2750th Air Base Wing Headquarters, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 16 FLRA 335 (1984).

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 3 does not concern matters directly related to conditions of employment affecting bargaining unit employees. Therefore, it is not within the Agency's duty to bargain.

VI. Union Proposal 4

> No employee will be forced to work overtime if he/she feels it will effect [sic] his efficiency, health or emotional stability.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 4 violates its rights under the statute "to determine the numbers, types and kinds of employees required to carry out its mission" and "to assign."

The Union asserts that its proposal does not violate management's right to assign the workforce. Rather, the Union contends that the proposal "deals with a process whereby management engages in its rights" and further, that "[o]vertime is voluntary" under the parties' negotiated agreement.

B. Analysis

The Agency provides no support whatever for its claim that Union Proposal 4 concerns "numbers, types and kinds of employees." Thus, the Agency's argument cannot be sustained.

This Proposal, however, would prevent the Agency from assigning overtime work to employees who assert the grounds listed in the proposal. In National Federation of Federal Employees, Council of Consolidated Social Security Administration Locals and Social Security Administration, 13 FLRA 422 (1983), we noted, in considering Union Proposal 2, that the management right to assign work, pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, includes the right to determine that certain work will be performed on overtime and that a proposal limiting management's authority to assign overtime work is inconsistent with the Statutory right to assign work. Thus, Union Proposal 4 is to the same effect as the disputed proposal in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3631 and Environmental Protection Agency, 11 FLRA 637 (1983). In that case the proposal sought to prevent assigning employees to WANG terminals for more than three consecutive months if the agency health and safety committee concluded that assignment to such terminals in excess of three consecutive months induced stress. Rejecting the union's argument that the proposal merely constituted a procedure which concerned health and safety matters to be followed in assigning work, we found that "the proposal would absolutely prohibit management from assigning certain duties to employees beyond a specified period of time if the circumstances described in the proposal apply." Such a complete prohibition on the assignment of work "is inconsistent with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to 'assign work' and is not within the duty to bargain."

This analysis is not altered by the Union's claim that under a provision of the parties' agreement "[o]vertime is voluntary." Since there is nothing in the record to indicate the existence of such a provision, the Union's claim is totally unsupported.

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 4 is not a "procedure," but rather is a substantive infringement on the Agency's right to assign work. Therefore, based on our findings in Social Security Administration and Environmental Protection Agency, it is outside the duty to bargain.

VII. Union Proposal 5

> The Medical Center will provide the use of vehicles to representatives of the Union for official business (this does not include internal Union business). Transportation will also be provided to and from the subway along 23rd Street in the non-daylight hours. If necessary Union representatives will be given the opportunity to obtain Federal drivers license.

A. Positions of the Parties

It appears from the record that the Agency objects only to that part of this proposal requiring it to furnish transportation to and from the subway. In the Agency's view, that part of the proposal does not concern a condition of employment.

The Union contends that the disputed part of the proposal is a condition of employment. Citing the high incidence of crime committed against unit employees, the Unions states that the Agency-furnished transportation "would provide a safer means of reaching the place of employment."

It is clear that the transportation contemplated would be provided to employees to assist them in commuting between their homes and the work site. Further, based on the reference in the proposal to "Federal drivers license," such transportation would be provided in the form of a Government motor vehicle.

Title 31 U.S.C. § 1344 governs the use of Government-owned passenger motor vehicles and provides that appropriations may be expended for operation, maintenance and repair of passenger motor vehicles that are used for "an official purpose." This section further states, "An official purpose does not include transporting officers or employees of the Government between their domiciles and places of employment . . .," except in certain situations not relevant in this case. In interpreting 31 U.S.C § 1344, the Comptroller General has determined that, in the absence of other specific authorization, one narrow exception to the general prohibition on use of Government vehicles for commutation is authorized when the home-to-work transportation of employees is incident to otherwise authorized use of the vehicles involved. See 62 Comp. Gen. 438 (1983).

Thus, in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2272 and Department of Justice, U.S. Marshals Service, District of Columbia, 9 FLRA 1004 (1982), Union Proposal 10, which permitted an employee already authorized to use a Government vehicle in traveling to and from his home to arrange a carpool with other employees living in the same general area, was found to be within the duty to bargain. Specifically, we held that the proposal was consistent with the official use only requirement "where transportation of employees in a Government vehicle between their homes and place of employment is such that they merely accompany another employee on an otherwise already authorized trip for the transaction of official business, and the Agency determines that the trip is in the Government's interest." See also American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3525 and United States Department of Justice, Board of Immigration Appeals, 10 FLRA 61 (1982) where a union proposal requiring an agency to provide shuttle bus service between various work sites and permitting employees to ride the buses as part of their travel to and from work was found to be within the duty to bargain because it was also consistent with the statutory requirements concerning the use of Government vehicles.

There is nothing in the record to indicate that the Government vehicle required by Union Proposal 5 would be used for any official purpose at the same time it is engaged in transporting employees to and from the subway. Hence, it must be concluded that the vehicle would be dedicated exclusively to assisting employees in commuting between home and work; a purpose which is inconsistent with Federal law.

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 5 violates the prohibition in 31 U.S.C. § 1344(a) against the use of Government vehicles for transporting employees between their domiciles and places of employment. Therefore, pursuant to section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute, it is outside the duty to bargain.

VIII. Union Proposal 6

> The Medical Center will provide training to all bargaining unit employees on the definition of reasonable accommodation for handicapped employees. This training should include all the aspects of how management can provide a reasonable accommodation for handicapped employees.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency states that bargaining over Union Proposal 6 is barred by the terms of the parties' master agreement. The Agency argues that the proposal also violates its right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The Agency further appears to contend that the type of training proposed is inconsistent with the definition of "training" contained in 5 U.S.C. § 4101(4).

The Union asserts that the proposal is not inconsistent with the master agreement, but rather "has to do with a process whereby management engages in its EEO responsibilities."

B. Analysis

1. Duty to Bargain

When a union files a negotiability appeal under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Statute, section 7117(c) entitles it to a decision on the negotiability issues in dispute. To the extent there are factual issues disputed by the parties in the circumstances of a case, such issues should be resolved in other appropriate proceedings. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 (1984). Hence, the Agency argument that it is relieved of any duty to bargain on the proposal by the master agreement is not relevant in the context of this negotiability appeal.

2. Management Rights

Since both parties interpret this proposal as requiring formal training sessions to be conducted during employees' duty hours, such meaning will be adopted for the purpose of our analysis. It is well established, under Authority precedent, that proposals requiring management to provide formal training, or periodically to assign employees to specific types of training programs, are outside the duty to bargain. In National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 422 and Department of Interior, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Colorado River Agency, Parker, Arizona, 14 FLRA 48 (1984), we noted our consistent position "that training assignments during duty hours are assignments of work, covered by section 7106(a)(2)(B). . . . As such, any proposal addressing the substantive aspects of training is a direct interference with management's right to assign work." Because Union Proposal 6, like the proposals in Bureau of Indian Affairs, prescribes the content of training and requires that such training be conducted during duty hours, it is also not a procedure for implementing a training program, but is likewise inconsistent with section 7106(a)(2)(B).

3. Violation of Law

The Agency's reliance on 5 U.S.C. § 4101(4) is misplaced. The definition contained in the referenced section does not cover the kind of training proposed by the Union and does not render such training illegal. That section of law concerns long-term professional and technical training but does not expressly bar the type of training proposed. Thus, the proposal is not inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. § 4101(4).

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 6 does not violate 5 U.S.C. § 4101(4), but directly interferes with the right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. Consequently it is outside the duty to bargain.

IX. Union Proposal 7

> During the third quarter of an employee's work tour, the employee will be eligible for release without charge to leave of any kind in case of emergency or illness.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal violates laws governing the purpose and uses of annual and sick leave and also is inconsistent with the right to determine the personnel by which Agency operations are conducted under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

The Union contends that the proposal does not violate management rights because discretion to grant or deny an employee's request remains with the supervisor.

Because the proposal does not mandate the granting of leave upon request, we do not find it to be inconsistent with management rights. However, the question remains as to whether the proposal is consistent with law and regulation. More specifically, the issue to be addressed is whether the Agency has the authority to grant administrative leave upon the request of individual employees who are ill or have a personal emergency.

Title 5 U.S.C., chapter 63 governs the accumulation of both annual and sick leave and further authorizes agencies "to grant administrative leave excusing an employee from work when it is in the public interest." 5 U.S.C. § 6326(c). 5 U.S.C. § 6311 states: "[t]he Office of Personnel Management may prescribe regulations necessary for the administration of this subchapter." Thus, the coverage of the relevant OPM regulations is coextensive with that of chapter 63, covering most, but not all, employees in the executive and judicial branches of Government. The OPM regulations are, therefore, "Government-wide" within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 748, 754 (1980). Federal Personnel Manual (FPM), Chapter 630, subchapter 11 governs excused absences and prescribes when absences may be granted to individuals without loss of pay or charge to leave. Subchapter 11-5.b provides:

> Brief absences from duty of less than an hour and tardiness may be excused when the reasons are justifiable to the supervisor. When not justifiable, the absence must be made up or charged to an appropriate leave account; in addition the absence may become the basis for disciplinary action.

Although what constitutes a "justifiable" reason for such a grant is not specified, FPM Supplement 990-2, Book 610, Appendix A-2 provides that when employees are dismissed because of an emergency situation, the emergency "must be general, rather than personal in scope and impact." In this connection, it is pertinent to note that FPM Chapter 630, subchapter 3-4.a(2) states that one of the purposes of annual leave is to provide time off for "emergency purposes." Similarly, with regard to illness, FPM Chapter 630, subchapter 4-2.a states that one of the purposes of sick leave "is for use when an employee is physically incapacitated to do his job . . . ." Thus, annual and sick leave are intended to cover the circumstances described in Union Proposal 7 and the governing regulations do not contemplate personal emergencies or illness as justifiable grounds for granting administrative leave in lieu of either annual or sick leave.

Union Proposal 7 is distinguishable from the proposals before us in International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 174, AFL-CIO and Long Beach Naval Shipyard, Long Beach, California, 7 FLRA 362 (1981). In that case, the proposals concerned the agency's practice of curtailing its operations during the Christmas/New Year holiday period. The proposal specifically sought to change the requirement that employees not needed during that period (4-5 workdays) take annual leave. Noting that pertinent regulations gave management discretion to grant administrative leave when it decided to curtail operations, we found the proposals to be within the duty to bargain. Union Proposal 7 in this case does not concern absence from duty caused by a managerial decision to close a facility temporarily. Rather, it deals with absences sought by individual employees based on their personal needs. Consequently, our decision in Long Beach Naval Shipyard has no bearing on Union Proposal 7.

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 7 is outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it is inconsistent with Government-wide regulations.

X. Union Proposal 8

> If employee tours are scheduled for more than 5 consecutive days, the Medical Center will make every effort to insure that the employees will receive three (3) consecutive days off.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency, states that it is a medical facility providing around the clock care to veterans and asserts that the proposal is integrally related to, and consequently determinative of, the numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a work project or tour of duty. Hence, the Agency claims the proposal is negotiable only at its election in accordance with section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. In support the Agency cites American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3669, AFL-CIO and Veterans Administration Medical Center, Minneapolis, Minnesota, 2 FLRA 641 (1980).

The Union contends that its proposal is a procedure to be observed by management in exercising its rights under section 7106(b)(1).

B. Analysis

When a proposal sought to be bargained does not "explicitly" relate to the numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a tour of duty or organizational subdivision, it is incumbent upon an agency to support an allegation that section 7106(b)(1) applies to that proposal. In National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 66 and Internal Revenue Service, Kansas City Service Center, 1 FLRA 927 (1979) the disputed proposal did not, on its face, relate to "numbers, types and grades," nor was the agency able to support its assertion that a direct or integral relationship existed. The proposal was therefore found to be within the duty to bargain.

As with the proposal in Kansas City Service Center, a reading of Union Proposal 8 does not reveal any direct or integral relationship to numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a tour of duty or organizational subdivision. The Agency appears to argue that Union Proposal 8 relates to these section 7106(b)(1) matters in the same manner as the disputed proposal in VA Medical Center, Minneapolis. In that case, the agency clearly established that the proposal applied to nurses with highly specialized medical skills and knowledges and that the proposal's requirement that the nurses be guaranteed every other weekend off would necessitate the hiring of additional nurses with the requisite skills to provide adequate around-the-clock medical care to the hospital's patients. The Agency having established the necessary connection, we found the proposal to be within the scope of section 7106(b)(1) and to be not within the duty to bargain.

While it is noted that the activity in this case is also a hospital, the Agency nonetheless fails to establish the necessary connection between Union Proposal 8 and the numbers, types and grades of employees. The Agency merely asserts that such a nexus exists without establishing that the employees covered by the proposal possess highly specialized skills such as those in VA Medical Center, Minneapolis that would not be available to the hospital's patients under the terms of the proposal. The record in this case is in fact silent concerning the types of occupations and skills within the bargaining unit. The Agency has, therefore, failed to meet its burden of demonstrating a "direct or integral relationship" between the proposal and 7106(b)(1) of the Statute as required by the Kansas City Service Center decision.

C. Conclusion

The Agency has not established, nor is it otherwise apparent, that Union Proposal 8 imposes any limitation on its ability to determine the numbers, types or grades of employees assigned to a work project or tour of duty. Consequently, the proposal is within the duty to bargain.

XI. Union Proposal 9

> The employer and the Union jointly recognize alcoholism as a treatable illness and drug abuse as a treatable health problem. Therefore, the employer will not institute disciplinary action against an alcoholic or drug abuser until he/she is given every opportunity to overcome his/her alcoholism or drug abuse. Membership of the VA Medical Center Committee established to implement this program will include five Union representatives. The Union representatives will be designated as Substance Abuse Counselors for the Union. They will be given official time to conduct substance abuse program and to counsel bargaining unit employees. Any employee participation in the program should remain confidential. Medical records, if any, > will be protected. No medical records will be released without the employee's consent. Substance Abuse Coordinators should be given beepers in order to cope successfully with emergencies due to the abundance to [sic] substance abuse problems.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that it is not obligated to bargain over the proposal because of its conflict with provisions of the parties' master agreement. The Agency also argues the proposal is inconsistent with management's right to discipline employees pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute and cites in support National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 6 FLRA 522 (1981) (Union Proposal 1). The Agency further asserts that the portion of the proposal permitting the Union to designate five Substance Abuse Counselors violates management's right "to assign" and to determine the personnel by which Agency operations will be conducted pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute.

The Union contends that the Counselors it would designate would represent the Union. According to the Union, substance abuse is a condition of employment. In the Union's view Union representatives are entitled to official time to represent and counsel employees on alcoholism and substance abuse. The designated Counselors would be more accessible to both managers and employees if provided with beepers by the Agency.

B. Analysis

The Authority will address only the negotiability issues involved in a case. Wurtsmith Air Force Base, 14 FLRA 302 (1984). Thus, the Agency's argument that it has no duty to bargain in the circumstances of this case is not relevant in the context of this negotiability appeal.

We previously held in Internal Revenue Service, 1 FLRA 522 (1981) that a proposal, prohibiting the agency from disciplining an employee as long as the employee was an active participant in a recognized alcohol/drug abuse program and requiring a stay of discipline if the employee entered such a program, to be inconsistent with management's right to discipline under section 7106(a)(2)(A). Further, in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1812, AFL-CIO and United States Information Agency, 16 FLRA 308 (1984), we held to be nonnegotiable a provision in that case preventing management from disciplining for substandard performance an employee experiencing personal problems if the employee was participating in a formal counseling program and progressing toward an acceptable performance level. Noting that pursuant to the provision "an employee would completely avoid disciplinary action for his or her conduct or unacceptable work performance by remaining a participant in the program and making progress, however slight," we found that the provision directly affected management's right to discipline employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. Similarly, as this proposal effectively would enable employees to avoid discipline indefinitely by continuing in any program, the object of which is to treat alcoholism or drug abuse, it would for the reasons more fully stated in Internal Revenue Service and USIA, 16 FLRA 308 (1984) also prevent the Agency from exercising its right to discipline.

In addition, Union Proposal 9 permits the Union to select five members of the committee concerned with alcoholism and drug abuse, prescribes the five members' titles and grants them official time to carry out their functions. As with Equal Employment Opportunity Counselors, counselors in Alcohol and Drug Abuse Programs perform work assigned to them by their employer as part of a program established by that employer.3/ The designation of specific employees to perform alcohol and drug counseling is, in reality, a decision to assign specified duties. Allowing a union to make such designations is outside the duty to bargain. Air Force Logistics Command, 2 FLRA 604 (1980).

C. Conclusion

The disputed portions of Union Proposal 9 interfere with management's rights to discipline employees pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B). Consequently, those segments are outside the duty to bargain.

XII. Order

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Kenneth M. McCaffree filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

A union proposal designating the official who will initiate grievances on behalf of the union and establish time limits within which certain prescribed steps will be taken in the grievance process is negotiable. The Authority found that the agency's arguments that the proposal violated § 7101(b), 7102, 7103(a)(9), 7105(a)(2)(E), 7121(b)(1), (3)(A) and (B), and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(c)(2), were, without exception, based upon a misinterpretation of the proposal itself. The proposal did not concern identification of a grievant, employee rights to file or not file grievances, or any remedy that an arbitrator may or may not fashion. Moreover, the Authority concluded that there was no reasonable basis in the proposal or the record for the agency's conclusions.

A proposal which would require an agency to RIF part-time employees before full-time employees is nonnegotiable because it directly interferes with the Agency's discretion to determine to lay offs pursuant to § 7106(a)(2)(A). The Authority held that the proposal would have the effect of determining the particular positions management would be obligated to abolish in a given RIF.

A proposal which would require an agency to RIF part-time employees before full-time employees is not an appropriate arrangement because it would excessively interfere with management's right to layoff and retain employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A). The proposal seeks to ameliorate the adverse effects of a RIF on full-time employees by requiring that part-time employees be RIFed first. The Authority found that the proposed amelioration could totally eliminate the agency's discretion with regard to the exercise of its right to layoff employees. While full-time employees might arguably benefit from the provision, on balance, that benefit is outweighed by the fact that the proposal would require the agency to eliminate part-time positions in circumstances where it might otherwise choose to eliminate a full-time positions. The agency would have no discretion as to the type of position to be eliminated.

DIGEST NOTES

In one of two grievances filed and submitted to arbitration, the Union contended that the activity's determination to contract out a certain custodial activity pursuant to 41 U.S.C. § 46-48c, was not in accordance with OMB Circular A-76. The arbitrator found that the grievance was arbitrable but denied it on the merits.

In its exception the agency contends that the arbitrator's finding that the grievance was arbitrable is contrary to management's right to make determinations with respect to contracting out, pursuant to § 7106(a)(2)(B). The Authority found that a grievance claiming that a procurement action failed to comply with OMB Circular A-76, is within the broad scope grievance procedure prescribed by the Statute and is not precluded by management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to make determinations with respect to contracting out. The agency's exception provides no basis for finding the awards deficient and there is no basis for reconsidering the awards or finding them inapplicable because the procurement action was pursuant to 41 U.S.C. § 46-48c. The agency's argument that the procurement action was exempted by these statutory provisions from the disputed requirements of Circular A-76 bears on the resolution of the grievance on the merits and not whether the grievance is grievable and arbitrable under the Statute.

The union violated § 7116(b)(1) and (8) when in response to an employee's exercise of the statutory right to support a rival labor organization, it ceased to provide to the employee continued representation in an adverse action proceeding held pursuant to the agency's regulations. The Judge held in a decision adopted by the Authority that the union, contrary to its past practice, denied the employee representation equal to that afforded other unit employees in adverse action proceedings. The fact that the union might not be able to use its statutory § 7114(b) rights to information in a forum where its standing is merely that of a personal representative is no defense to its failure to abide by its past practice of providing legal counsel to unit employees in adverse actions. The Authority noted further that the Judge's finding of a § 7116(b)(8) violation is based upon the union's failure to comply with the duty of fair representation set forth in § 7114(a)(1).

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority concluded, in agreement with the ALJ, that the activity violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it refused to negotiate regarding the wages of employees in "Supervisory Craftsman" positions (who were also prevailing rate employees), and refused to recognize these employees as members of the bargaining unit. The activity's refusal to bargain was clearly unjustified and flies in the face of the statutory requirement to bargain in good faith. The Authority noted particularly that the activity was on notice, as a result of an earlier unit clarification petition, that the excluded positions were required to be included in the bargaining unit, and that a reclassification of the positions in question did not change the appropriateness of their inclusion in the unit.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

The Civil Service Reform Act expressly provides that the terms and conditions of employment for prevailing rate employees shall continue to be negotiated as in the past, regardless of contrary provisions in 5 U.S.C., Chapter 71.

The Authority found that the activity's unlawful refusal to negotiate concerning certain prevailing rate employees and its refusal to recognize them as part of the bargaining unit, directly caused the employees to be denied the benefits of exclusive representation. The Authority therefore ordered that the activity apply the terms of any agreement(s) negotiated between the parties covering the bargaining unit to the excluded employees and wherever possible, to apply such terms retroactive to the date of their unlawful exclusion from the unit. Additionally, since the exclusive representative of the unit has been denied the right to negotiate rates of pay for the excluded prevailing rate employees because of their unlawful exclusion, The Authority ordered the activity to negotiate in good faith upon request concerning such rates and apply whatever agreement is reached retroactively.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the following Union proposal:

> Section 9. UNION/MANAGEMENT GRIEVANCES
> b. Union grievances shall be initiated in writing by the President, NWSEO, and presented to the Assistant Administrator for NWS within thirty (30) calendar days of the action or condition giving rise to the grievance. Decisions by management shall be rendered in writing no later than thirty (30) calendar days following receipt of the grievance. Should the issue remain unresolved, arbitration may be invoked by the union under the provisions of Article 10.

II. Positions of the Parties

Based upon statements made during negotiations,[1] the Agency argues that this proposal "as it is interpreted and intended to be applied by the Union" is contrary to:

1. 5 U.S.C. § 7121(b)(3)(A) because it would not require the Union, when filing a grievance, to identify the grievant;
2. 5 U.S.C. § 7102 because it violates an employee's right to refrain from assisting a union in that a grievance could be filed without an employee's knowledge or consent;
3. 5 U.S.C. § 7701(c)(2) because, if a violation were found, an arbitrator could fashion a "class action" remedy applying to both harmed and unharmed employees;
4. 5 U.S.C. § 7121(b)(3)(B) because it removes an employee's right to file a grievance on that employee's own behalf; and
5. 5 U.S.C. § 7101(b) and 7121(b)(1), which require that a grievance procedure be consistent with an effective and efficient government and that it be "simple", because the Union could file a grievance on behalf of "any number of unidentified employees without specifying what harm to employees has occurred."

The Union contends that the proposal does not concern the scope of the grievance procedure but, rather, only restates the law, i.e., 5. U.S.C. § 7103(a)(9).

III. Analysis

The Union states that this provision simply addresses who may file a grievance on behalf of the Union, and when and where it must be filed. This interpretation is completely consistent with the plain language of the proposal. On its face, therefore, and consistent with the Union's statement of its intent, this proposal would designate the official who will initiate grievances on behalf of the Union and establish time limits within which certain prescribed steps will be taken in the grievance process.

[1] The Agency states "the Union contended that the only requirement in the law for a negotiated union/management grievance procedure was that mandated by Section 7103(a)(9)." Agency Statement of Position at 4.

In view of this interpretation, the Authority finds that the Agency's arguments regarding the effects of this proposal are, without exception, based upon a misinterpretation of the proposal itself. The proposal does not concern the identification of a grievant, employee rights to file or not file grievances, or any remedy that an arbitrator may or may not fashion. Moreover, no reasonable basis is apparent, either in the proposal or the record, for the Agency's conclusions. Hence, the Agency's arguments regarding this proposal cannot be sustained.

Consequently, as the Agency has failed to establish any basis for finding the proposal, as interpreted by the Union and the Authority, to be outside the duty to bargain, it is negotiable under, and consistent with, section 7121 of the Statute.

IV. Conclusion

Based upon the foregoing analysis, the Authority concludes that the disputed proposal is within the Agency's duty to bargain.2/

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the

---

2/ In finding this proposal to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority makes no judgment as to its merits.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of a single Union proposal.

II. Union Proposal

> In a reduction-in-force, part-time employees shall be subject to RIF first.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Union argues that the proposal is negotiable as either an "appropriate arrangement" under section 7106(b)(3) or "procedure" under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute.

The Agency contends that this proposal is nonnegotiable because:

1. It interferes with management's right to layoff employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute;

> 2. It interferes with management's right to determine the types of employees assigned to an organizational subdivision, work project or tour of duty, a permissive subject of bargaining under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute concerning which the Agency has elected not to bargain; and
> 3. It excessively interferes with the exercise of management rights and, thus, is inappropriate as an "arrangement" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

IV. Analysis

The Union explains its intent with regard to the disputed proposal as follows (Union Reply Brief at 3):

> . . . where there is a part-time employee whose duties are not concurrent with those of any full-time employee, and whose duties are necessary for the accomplishment of the Agency's mission, the proposal would not require the layoff of that employee over a full-time employee. Only where the part-time employee's duties can be duplicated by those of a full-time employee would the proposal require the layoff of the part-time employee. [Emphasis added.]

The Authority finds that the Union's explanation of the intent of its proposal is inconsistent with the plain language of the proposed requirement. The language of the proposal is not qualified or limited in any way. Rather, the proposal clearly and simply requires that in a RIF situation, part-time employees will be RIFed first. The question is whether the plain language of the proposal constitutes a negotiable procedure or appropriate arrangement.

A. Whether the Proposal Is a Negotiable Procedure

This proposal would require the Agency to RIF part-time employees before full-time employees. Consequently, the proposal would have the effect of determining the particular positions management would be obligated to abolish in a given RIF. That is, once the Agency decided to abolish a number of employee positions, it would be required to abolish part-time positions first. The proposal thus has the same effect as Union Proposal 8 in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 12 and Department of Labor, 18 FLRA No. 58 (1985) which required the Agency to abolish a proportionate number of supervisory and non-supervisory positions in a RIF. In that case, the Authority found that the proposal constituted a direct interference with the Agency's discretion to determine which positions to abolish and which employees to lay off pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. Likewise, the disputed proposal herein also directly interferes with management's section 7106(a)(2)(A) right. It is not, therefore, a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2).

B. Whether The Proposal Constitutes An Appropriate Arrangement

To determine whether a proposal constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3), it is necessary to determine whether the proposal "excessively interferes" with the exercise of management's rights. National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986). In making such a determination, the record in each case will be examined to ascertain as a threshold question whether the proposal is in fact intended to be an arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of its rights. If the Authority concludes that the proposal is intended as an arrangement, we will then determine whether the arrangement is appropriate or inappropriate.

In this case, we find that the Union intended the proposal to be an arrangement for employees adversely affected by the Agency's exercise of its rights to layoff employees. The Union's proposal seeks to ameliorate the adverse effects of a RIF on full-time employees by requiring that part-time employees be RIFed first. The Authority finds that the proposed amelioration could totally eliminate the Agency's discretion with regard to the exercise of its right to layoff employees in the circumstances of this case. By way of example, the Agency states as follows (Agency Statement of Position at 4):

> . . . a given project might be staffed by one part-time and three full-time engineers while another project is staffed by one part-time and two full-time physicists. If management decides that the engineering workload can support only two full-time and one part-time employee, logically, one full-time engineer position would be abolished to achieve the desired staffing level. Under the Union's proposal, this action would be prohibited. To achieve a one man year reduction, management would be forced to abolish the part-time engineer position and the part-time physicist position, resulting in an unnecessary undermanning of one function while failing to completely correct the overstaffing in the function originally requiring reduction-in-force. Reassignment of the physicist's duties to the engineering function obviously would not be feasible in view of the differing qualifications required.

While full-time employees might arguably benefit by a provision requiring that part-time employees be RIFed first, on balance, that benefit is outweighed by the fact that the proposal would require the Agency to eliminate part-time positions in circumstances where it might otherwise choose to eliminate a full-time position. The Agency would have no discretion as to the type of position to be eliminated. In thus removing the Agency's discretion to determine which positions to eliminate in a RIF, the proposal excessively interferes with management's right to layoff and retain employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute and is not an appropriate arrangement.

V. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority concludes that the disputed proposal does not constitute a negotiable procedure or appropriate arrangement but, rather, that the proposal is outside the duty to bargain as contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 24, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Ellen M. Bussey filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

In one of two grievances filed in this case and submitted to arbitration, the Union contended that the Activity's determination to contract out a certain custodial activity to the National Institute of the Severely Handicapped pursuant to 41 U.S.C. §§ 46-48c*/ was not in accordance with OMB Circular A-76 (which prescribes general policies for contracting out). The Arbitrator found that this grievance was arbitrable, but on the merits denied the grievance.

*/ These provisions provide for procurement of commodities and services by the Federal Government from qualified nonprofit agencies for the blind and the severely handicapped.

III. EXCEPTION

In its exception the Agency contends that the Arbitrator's finding that the grievance was arbitrable is contrary to management's right to make determinations with respect to contracting out pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

In Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986), the Authority once again addressed the issue of whether a grievance claiming that a procurement action failed to comply with OMB Circular A-76 was grievable and arbitrable under the Statute. Citing American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of EEOC Locals and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 10 FLRA 3 (1982) (proposal 1), enforced sub nom. EEOC v. FLRA 744 F.2d 842 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. dismissed, 106 S. Ct. 1678 (1986) (per curiam), the Authority again held that such a grievance is within the broad scope grievance procedure prescribed by the Statute and is not precluded by management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to make determinations with respect to contracting out. Consequently, we conclude that the Agency's exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient as contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. Furthermore, contrary to the arguments of the Agency, no basis is provided for reconsidering these decisions or finding them inapplicable because the procurement action in this case was pursuant to 41 U.S.C. §§ 46-48c. The Agency's argument that the procurement action was exempted by these statutory provisions from the disputed requirements of Circular A-76 bears on the resolution of the grievance on the merits and not on whether the grievance is grievable and arbitrable under the Statute. See Blytheville Air Force Base, slip op. at 6-7.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the Agency's exception is denied.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. Section 7101, et seq., and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

Pursuant to a charge filed on September 20, 1984, by Mr. Tyrone M. Bryant, an individual, a Complaint and Notice of Hearing was issued on November 30, 1984, by the Regional Director for Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Washington, D.C. The Complaint alleges that the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, Local 2477, AFL-CIO, (hereinafter called the Union or Respondent), violated Sections 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, (hereinafter called the Statute), by virtue of its actions in refusing to represent Mr. Tyrone M. Bryant in an adverse action proceeding under the Library of Congress Regulations because of Mr. Bryant's activities on behalf of a rival labor organization.

A hearing was held in the captioned matter on February 14, 1985, in Washington, D.C. All parties were afforded the full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. The General Counsel and the Respondent submitted post hearing briefs on March 28, 1985, which have been duly considered.

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

The Union is the exclusive representative of the Library of Congress' nonprofessional employees, including the Special Police. The Union is also a member of the District Council 26, which is an organization chartered by the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) to the service the members of its affiliated locals.[1] The functions of the District Council 26 are set forth in its Constitution and include the following: "to assist member locals with grievances, complaints, appeals, negotiations, contracts, organizational matters, recruiting, publicity and promotional work in general; and to obtain and provide adequate legal representation for locals in the processing of grievances, complaints and other appropriate actions on behalf of members." In discharging these responsibilities District Council 26 utilizes the services of an executive director and other support staff.[2] The executive director is the administrative and executive officer of the Council. The Constitution of District Council 26 specifically mandates that the executive director's position be a full time one and further provides for a general description of job duties associated with that position. The executive director and his support staff are paid by and employed by District Council 26. District Council 26 is funded exclusively from the union dues collected from the various affiliated locals.

[1] The other locals comprising District Council 26 are as follows: Local 2478 - U.S. Commission of Civil Rights; Local 2600 - U.S. Patent Office; Local 2830 - U.S. Justice Department; Local 2910 - Library of Congress (professional employees); Local 3097 - U.S. Justice Department and Local 2027 - ACTION and Peace Corps.

[2] The Constitution of District Council 26 also provides for the election of officers of the District Council by delegates from its constituent locals and the appointment of an Executive Board.

Since November 1981, James E. Mundy has occupied the position of Executive Director of District Council 26.[3] As such, Mr. Mundy performs the duties enumerated for the executive director in the Constitution of District Council 26 which, in pertinent part, include the following: represents unit employees in grievances and adverse actions; represents the constituent locals in representation matters with the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA); and files unfair labor practice charges and appeals with the FLRA on behalf of member locals. Specifically, with respect to adverse actions, Mr. Mundy has admittedly represented numerous unit employees since his tenure as Executive Director of District Council 26 including: Shirley Whetstone, Marzella Rhodes, Roosevelt Davis and Pamela Paris. Former District Council 26 Deputy Director Lynn Sylvester also represented unit employees in adverse actions during her tenure including: Mary Geiger, Marzella Rhodes and Shirley Whetstone. Thus, as described above, the Executive Director and Deputy Director of District Council 26 provides as a service to its member locals, representation for unit employees in grievances and adverse actions.[4] While the evidence establishes that the Union and/or Mr. Mundy and other agents of District Council have consistently represented unit employees in adverse actions held pursuant to the Library of Congress regulations, their representational status was personal to the unit employees involved and did not flow from the union's certification as exclusive representative. In the absence of a request to the Union that it be an employee's personal representative in the adverse action proceeding, it is clear that the Union has no legal standing in adverse action proceeding.

Since August 1968, Tyrone Bryant has been employed as a Special Police Officer at the Library of Congress and has been a member of Respondent's bargaining unit.

On May 31, 1983, Officer Bryant became involved in an incident with his supervisor, Captain Romanelli, over Officer Bryant's use of the Library of Congress parking lot. This incident resulted in Officer Bryant's filing an oral grievance in early June 1983.[5] At Officer

[3] Mr. Mundy is also an attorney and a member of the District of Columbia Bar. However, neither a law degree nor bar membership is a requirement for the position of executive director with the District Council as that position is described in the Constitution of District Council 26.

[4] In its newsletters, bulletins and flyers, Respondent has detailed and advertised to unit employees that such services of the District Council are available to the local and its unit employees.

Bryant's request, Respondent's Steward Edward Jackson undertook representation of Officer Bryant in the grievance process. The grievance was subsequently denied by the Library of Congress on June 14, 1983.

Two and one-half months after the parking lot incident, on August 15, 1983, Officer Bryant was informed by the Library of Congress that he would receive a proposed adverse action, i.e., reprimand for his participation in the parking lot incident. Officer Bryant immediately contacted Union Steward Edward Jackson and requested union representation. Steward Jackson agreed and accompanied Officer Bryant to the Library of Congress' division office on August 16, 1983, where Officer Bryant was officially served notice of the proposed adverse action.6/ Steward Jackson was also given a copy of the letter of proposed adverse action against Officer Bryant. Steward Jackson then told Officer Bryant that this proposed adverse action would be appealed because it was wrong and constituted nothing but retaliation against Officer Bryant for his involvement in union activities and his filing of complaints against the Library of Congress. A response to the proposed adverse action was prepared and forwarded to the Agency on September 7, 1983. On October 4, 1983, Steward Jackson, forwarded to the Agency a request under section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute for a copy of a counselling memorandum which had been placed in Officer Bryant's personnel file by Captain Romanelli sometime earlier. The Library of Congress responded to Steward Jackson by letter dated October 11, 1983, and requested Officer Bryant's written permission for release of the requested document to Steward Jackson. Officer Bryant then signed a letter prepared by Steward Jackson authorizing release of the document to Steward Jackson. This letter dated October 20, 1983, to the Library of Congress also designated Respondent's Steward Jackson as Officer Bryant's representative in the proposed adverse action. On October 21, 1983, Officer Bryant received the Library of Congress' decision on the proposed adverse action which was the insertion of a reprimand in Officer Bryant's personnel file. The Library of Congress also informed Officer Bryant of his appeal rights. Specifically, Officer Bryant could appeal the reprimand under the Library of Congress' adverse action appeal procedures which would entitle Officer Bryant to a hearing before an independent arbitrator and give him the right to be represented by a representative of his choosing. On October 28, 1983, Officer Bryant filed a notice of appeal of the adverse action and specifically designated Mr. Edward Jackson, AFSCME Local 2477, as his representative. Mr. Jackson also signed this notice of appeal acknowledging himself as representative of Officer Bryant. Subsequently, the Library of Congress issued several communications to Mr. Edward Jackson in his capacity as Union Steward. By letter dated December 27, 1983, the Library of Congress informed Steward

Jackson that a list of arbitrators would be forwarded to him for selection in the adverse action hearing. On January 20, 1984, the Library of Congress again wrote to Steward Jackson in order to schedule a time and place for selecting the arbitrator in Officer Bryant's adverse action hearing. When Steward Jackson did not respond to the letter of January 20, 1984,[7] the Library of Congress contacted Marzella Rhodes, the president of the Local Union. In a letter dated April 5, 1984, the Library of Congress notified the Union that unless Respondent contacted the Agency within two weeks, Officer Bryant's case would be placed on the inactive list. Upon receiving a copy of the April 5, 1984 letter to the Union, Officer Bryant wrote to the Union on April 12, 1984, and requested continued representation in connection with his adverse action appeal.[8]

In his letter to Ms. Marzella Rhodes, Officer Bryant referred to evidence given to the Union during a Federal Labor Relations Authority representation hearing in January 1984, namely that the Union was representing him, Officer Bryant, in his appeal of the adverse action. The representation matter referred to by Officer Bryant concerned an RO petition filed with the Washington Regional Office by the Fraternal Order of Police (FOP) in Case No. 3-RO-40001. The FOP was seeking in the RO petition exclusive recognition for a part of the bargaining unit, i.e., the Special Police, currently being represented by the Union. Officer Bryant had signed the RO Petition on behalf of the FOP which was initially filed on October 27, 1983. A hearing on this petition was held before the Washington Regional Office on January 25, 26, 27 and 30, 1984. District Council 26 Executive Director James Mundy represented the Respondent Union at this hearing. One of the issues addressed at the hearing was the adequacy of Respondent's representation of the Special Police as part of Respondent's bargaining unit. Accordingly, Mr. Mundy elicited evidence at the hearing on Respondent's representation of the Special Police Officers. Specifically, evidence was adduced with respect to Respondent's representation of Special Police Officers in adverse action matters. In this regard, Mr. Mundy called as a witness for the Respondent, Ms. Marzella Rhodes, president of the Local Union. In response to questions proferred by Mr. Mundy, Ms. Rhodes testified that the Union, through its Steward, Edward Jackson, was currently representing Officer Bryant in the subject adverse action appeal. Ms. Rhodes further testified that Respondent had just received a letter from the Library of Congress addressed to Steward Jackson concerning the scheduling of a time and place for the selection of an arbitrator for Officer Bryant's hearing. In order to further buttress the claim of Respondent's adequate representation of

[8] In early April 1984, Officer Bryant received a letter from Steward Jackson. Mr. Jackson, who was then on disability leave, informed Officer Bryant that he might retire from the Government. He subsequently retired from Federal service in late April 1984.

Special Police Officers, Mr. Mundy then called as a witness Banks Johnson, a former shop steward. Mr. Johnson testified that the Union was representing Officer Bryant in the adverse action appeal and that he and Steward Jackson were working on it. In addition, Mr. Mundy submitted into the record of the hearing the notice of appeal of the adverse action filed by Officer Bryant on October 28, 1983, which designated the Union and Steward, Edward Jackson, as his representative. Thus, based on these representations made by Respondent at the hearing, Officer Bryant stated in his letter of April 12, 1984, to Ms. Rhodes that he wanted the Union to pursue its representation of him in the adverse action appeal. Officer Bryant further stated that the Union's failure to continue its representation of him would result in his filing an unfair labor practice charge against the Union. A copy of the letter to Ms. Rhodes was also sent to Mr. Mundy.

Within a week to ten days of the date of Officer Bryant's letter to Ms. Rhodes, the Union contacted Officer Bryant and informed him that Mr. Mundy wanted to meet with him for purposes of discussing his adverse action appeal.9/ A secretary employed by the Union then scheduled a date and time with Officer Bryant for his meeting with Mr. Mundy. Officer Bryant and Mr. Mundy met at the Union's office on or about April 24, 1984.10/ Mr. Mundy began the meeting by asking Officer Bryant if he were a lawyer. Officer Bryant told Mr. Mundy that he was not a lawyer but that he knew a little about the law. Mr. Mundy then asked Officer Bryant why he did not represent himself in this case and Officer Bryant replied, "If I represent myself in this case, then I would have a fool for a client." Whereupon Mr. Mundy remarked that the Union did not have to represent unit members in adverse actions. When Officer Bryant, then asked whose responsibility it was to represent him, Mr. Mundy did not respond. Mr. Mundy then changed the subject and told Officer Bryant he was a traitor for signing the FOP petition. Mr. Mundy further indicated he wanted Officer Bryant to sign some type of disclaimer of responsibility for Mr. Mundy in representing him in the adverse action.[11] Mr. Mundy then asked Officer Bryant to withdraw the FOP petition.[12] Officer Bryant replied, "That is a horse of a different color." Officer Bryant then informed Mr. Mundy that he was there asking for representation and was not there to discuss the petition. At that point, Mr. Mundy dropped his discussion of the FOP petition and began reviewing the documents and discussing the merits of Officer Bryant's adverse action case. He told Officer Bryant after reviewing the evidence that he had a strong case. Mr. Mundy based his opinion on the fact that the Agency had waited two and one-half months after the incident to take the adverse action. Mr. Mundy opined that an arbitrator would take a very hard look at the timeliness of the Agency's actions.

9/ Mr. Mundy testified that Officer Bryant's April 12, 1984, letter to Ms. Rhodes was what prompted this contact with Officer Bryant. Mr. Mundy further testified that he picked up several open cases left by Steward Jackson when he retired in late April 1984, one of which was Officer Bryant's adverse action appeal.

10/ Mr. Mundy recalled the date of the first meeting with Officer Bryant as May 6, 1984. Mr. Mundy and Officer Bryant both testified that three meetings were held on this matter, i.e., Mr. Bryant's appeal of the adverse action.

Subsequently, Mr. Mundy initiated and held two more meetings with Officer Bryant in which they reviewed the evidence in the adverse action appeal. During these meetings, Mr. Mundy told Officer Bryant to try to find some witnesses to the parking lot incident who would testify on his behalf at the adverse action hearing. However, Mr. Mundy felt that based on the known facts alone, Officer Bryant's case had merit. These meetings between Mr. Mundy and Officer Bryant occurred in May and June of 1984 and were held at the Union's office in the James Madison Building.

Mr. Mundy was also in contact with the Library of Congress representatives during June and July of 1984, scheduling and rescheduling hearing dates for Officer Bryant's adverse action hearing. The first set of dates (July 26 and 27, 1984) selected by the Library of Congress and Mr. Mundy was cancelled well beforehand due to a scheduling conflict. A second set of dates (August 16 and 17, 1984) were also cancelled. Mr. Mundy and the Agency finally agreed to set the dates of October 4 and 5, 1984, for the adverse action hearing.

During the time Mr. Mundy was representing Officer Bryant, as set forth above, the FOP representation petition was pending before the Washington Regional Office of the FLRA. On July 18, 1984, Region III issued its decision, finding that the FOP petitioned for unit was appropriate and directed an election between the FOP and the Union for the individuals employed as Special Police. The Region's decision was served on the Union's designated representative, Mr. Mundy.

[11] It was Mr. Mundy's intent to secure an agreement from Officer Bryant that if Officer Bryant's adverse action appeal was lost, then Officer Bryant would not use it as an issue in any Authority ordered election between FOP and Respondent.

[12] The representation petition was still pending at this time as the Regional Director had not yet issued his decision on the matter.

After the Region's decision was issued, Mr. Mundy decided that he would no longer represent Officer Bryant in his adverse action appeal. Mr. Mundy then called Officer Bryant and scheduled a meeting with him for September 12, 1984. At the meeting in the Union's office, Mr. Mundy told Officer Bryant that since his (Mr. Mundy's) salary was paid by the District Council and he represented the Local Union, there was a conflict of interest in his representing Officer Bryant because of Officer Bryant's support of the FOP, a rival labor organization. Mr. Mundy then told Officer Bryant he would no longer represent him in the appeal of his adverse action.[13] Officer Bryant, stunned, asked Mr. Mundy, "Who is going to represent me?" Mr. Mundy replied, "It doesn't matter to me who represent you. I suggest you proceed forward with your case." Thereafter, on October 1 and 9, 1984, Officer Bryant requested the Library of Congress and the arbitrator to grant a postponement of the adverse action hearing as he was left without representation. Officer Bryant's case is currently on indefinite postponement.

Mr. Mundy admits that in certain proceedings, namely those proceedings where the Union has authority to act as principal, Council 26 acts as agent for the Union. However, Mr. Mundy denies acting as agent for the Union in adverse actions since the Union has no standing as principal in such situations. To the extent that he, in the past, represented unit employees in adverse actions under the Library of Congress adverse action regulations, he points out that he was merely acting as the designated representative of the affected employee and not the agent of the Union. Mr. Mundy further admits that the Regional Director's "order of election" prompted him to cease representing Mr. Bryant. In this latter context, he points out that the sole reason he withdrew was his opinion that he would be violating the Cannons of Legal Ethics by representing an individual who had taken a position contrary to that of the Union which employs him.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel takes the position that the District Council was the agent of the local Union and in such circumstances the Union was responsible for the actions of Mr. Mundy in refusing to represent Mr. Bryant under the Library of Congress' adverse action procedure. Further, according to the General Counsel, since Mr. Mundy, contrary to his past practice, refused to continue to represent Mr. Bryant in the adverse action proceeding because of his, Mr. Bryant's support of a rival union, the Union not only failed in its duty of fair representation, but also interfered with, restrained and coerced Mr. Bryant in the exercise of his rights accorded by the Statute and hence violated Sections 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

The Union takes the position that it has no obligation to represent employees in adverse actions under the Library of Congress regulations since its sole standing in such proceedings is that of the personally selected representative of the affected employee. In support of this position the Union relies on the decision of the undersigned Administrative Law Judge in Library of Congress and American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, Local 2910, Case No. 3-CA-40116, OALJ-84-87, July 12, 1984. To the extent that a contrary conclusion is reached, the Union takes the further position that it was not guilty of an unfair labor practice since the record evidence establishes that Mr. Mundy was not in any event acting as agent of the Union but rather as the employee's personal representative. Finally, the Union takes the position that "even if the Union can or must represent employees in adverse action proceedings, no unfair labor practice occurred in this case" since the record evidence establishes that Mr. Mundy declined to further represent Mr. Bryant not because of his support of a rival labor organization but rather because of his opinion that he would be violating the Cannons of Legal Ethics imposed upon Attorneys if he continued representing an employee who had taken a position contrary to that of a Union which employs him.

Contrary to the contention of the Union, I find that Mr. Mundy was acting as agent for the Union when he refused to continue representing Mr. Bryant. The Union's sole basis for denying the existence of agency status for Mr. Mundy, the Executive Director of the Council, is the Union's absence of any independent standing in adverse action proceedings under the regulations of the Library of Congress. However, the absence of standing in adverse action proceedings does not in and of itself negate a finding of agency. An agency relationship is not determined by the forum that the alleged representative operates in but rather is determined by the powers conferred upon the alleged representative by the principal, here the Union. Where the alleged representative is empowered to act in the principal's stead, the representative becomes the principal's agent and the principal is responsible for the representative's actions. The fact that the principal has no legal standing in a particular forum does not destroy the agency-principal relationship. Of course, the agent standing in the stead of the principal is subject to any restrictions applicable to the principal.

In the instant case, Mr. Bryant was originally represented in the adverse action proceeding by a union steward. Thereafter, due to the retirement of the union steward, and pursuant to a letter from Mr. Bryant to the Union demanding another union representative in the adverse action proceeding under threat of a ULP, the Union, without any further contact with Mr. Bryant, arranged for Mr. Mundy, who was admittedly its agent in other proceedings, to represent Mr. Bryant. Thus, while it is true that no additional money over and above Mr. Mundy's salary as Executive Director of the District Council was charged for such representation, the fact remains that the Union, in accordance with its advertised services to union members, did provide Mr. Bryant with a representative in the adverse action proceeding, namely Mr. Mundy. To the extent that the Union provided Mr. Bryant, as part of its services, Mr. Mundy stood in the Union's stead and became an agent of the Union. Being an agent of the Union, the Union was responsible for Mr. Mundy's subsequent actions in the adverse action proceedings.

The record establishes and I so find, that Mr. Mundy resented the fact that Mr. Bryant had exercised his statutory rights and sponsored and/or assisted a rival labor organization in an attempt to unseat the Union as the exclusive representative of the Special Police employed by the Library of Congress. Subsequently, when the rival labor organization succeeded in its attempt to have an election scheduled, Mr. Mundy admittedly ceased representing Mr. Bryant in the adverse action proceeding on the alleged ground that the continued representation of Mr. Bryant would result in a breach of the Cannons of Legal Ethics. Thereafter, no attempt was made by the Union to secure an alternate representative for Mr. Bryant in his adverse action proceeding.

While I do not quarrel or take issue with Mr. Mundy's conclusion that his continued representation of Mr. Bryant, due to his personal feelings concerning Mr. Bryant's actions in aiding and abetting a rival union, might well constitute a violation of the Cannons of Legal Ethics, the fact remains that Mr. Bryant because of his exercise of a statutory right to support a rival labor organization was, contrary to the past practice of the Union, denied by the Union's agent, Mr. Mundy, representation equal to that afforded by the Union to other unit employees in adverse action proceedings. Inasmuch as Mr. Mundy was the Union's agent, Mr. Mundy's actions, namely refusing to represent a unit employee because of his dissident activity, are attributable to the Union. The Union, cannot escape liability on the ground that its agent's refusal to continue to represent Mr. Bryant was because of the Cannons of Legal Ethics and not Mr. Bryant's dissident activity. Being responsible for its agent's activity, it was incumbent upon the Union to secure the services of another representative for Mr. Bryant who would not be encumbered by loyalty to the Union and animosity to Mr. Bryant for his participation in activities protected by the Statute.

Inasmuch as the record makes it clear that the reason Mr. Bryant was denied continued representation in his adverse action proceeding was his support for a rival union, I am constrained to find based upon applicable Authority precedent that the Union breached its duty of fair representation in violation of Sections 8(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute when it ceased giving Mr. Bryant representation in the adverse action proceedings being held pursuant to the Library of Congress' regulations. American Federation of Government Employees and SSA, 17 FLRA No. 72.

To the extent that the Union relies on my recommended decision in Library of Congress and American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, Local 2910, supra, as a defense to its actions, I find such case to be distinguishable. The aforementioned case dealt solely with the question of whether the Union's right to information under Section 7114(b) of the Statute was applicable to an adverse action proceeding held pursuant to the Library of Congress' regulations wherein the Union's presence was not based upon its standing as the exclusive representative but rather its selection by the affected employee as his personal representative.

Here the sole issue is the denial of fair representation because of a unit employee's activities on behalf of a rival union and not what statutory rights are available to a union once it undertakes the representation of an employee in a forum where its standing is merely that of a personal representative. The fact that a union might not be able to utilize its statutory Section 7114(b) rights to information in such forum is no defense to its failure to abide by its past practice of providing legal counsel to unit employees in adverse actions. A dissident unit employee is entitled to the same representation from its exclusive representative as a loyal unit employee. To the extent that the union representative's status is confined to that of a personal representative with no Section 7114(b) rights, then, that is all the representation the affected employee is entitled to.

Having found that the Union violated Sections 7116(b(1) and (8) of the Statute, it is hereby recommended that the Federal Labor Relations Authority, issue the following:

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the Respondent and cross-exceptions filed by the Charging Party (Union) and the General Counsel. The Union also filed an opposition to the Respondent's exceptions. The complaint alleged that the Respondent had violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (Statute) by refusing to bargain with the Union over pay rates for prevailing rate employees in Supervisory Craftsman positions.

II. Background

In 1977, Wage Board employees who were involved in the transmission and marketing of electrical power, generated at Federal power projects throughout a 15-state area in the western part of the country, were transferred from the Department of the Interior's Bureau of Reclamation to the Western Area Power Administration in the newly created Department of Energy. The Wage Board employees who were involved in the power production function remained with the Bureau of Reclamation. At the Bureau of Reclamation, the employees who were transferred and the employees who remained had been members of a total of six different bargaining units which were located in the six different organizational sub-elements of the Bureau of Reclamation. Those bargaining units were represented by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW).

In Department of Energy, Western Area Power Administration (WAPA 1), 3 FLRA 76 (1980), the Authority found that the appropriate bargaining unit for those employees transferred from the Department of the Interior's Bureau of Reclamation to the Department of Energy's Western Area Power Administration (WAPA) should be an activity-wide unit at WAPA, as contended by the Agency in that case. However, contrary to WAPA's assertion that the employees classified as Foreman I, II, and III should be excluded from the bargaining unit as supervisors under Executive Order 11491, as amended, the Authority found that those employees should be included in the unit. Id. at 80.

The Authority noted in WAPA 1 that the incumbents of the Foreman I, II, and III positions had been included in the bargaining units at the Bureau of Reclamation from a date prior to 1962, and that a primary reason for their inclusion was that historically their rates of pay were negotiated by IBEW and the Bureau of Reclamation in the same manner as the wage rates of other employees in the units. Id. at 79-80. Further, the Authority noted that Congress had expressed approval of those bargaining practices through the enactment of section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 (CSRA), 92 Stat. 1218 (codified at 5 U.S.C. § 5343 note (1982)),[1] and through the legislative history attendant to its enactment. WAPA 1 at 80-81.

[1] Section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act, codified at 5 U.S.C. § 5343 note (1982), provides as follows:

> (a) Those terms and conditions of employment and other employment benefits with respect to Government prevailing rate employees to whom section 9(b) of Public Law 92-392 applies which were the subject of negotiation in accordance with prevailing rates and practices prior to August 19, 1972, shall be negotiated on and after the date of enactment of this Act in accordance with the provisions of section 9(b) of Public Law 92-392 without regard to any provision of chapter 71 of title 5, United States Code (as amended by this title), to the extent that any such provision is inconsistent with this paragraph.

In addition to the terms of the statutory provision, the Authority noted more specifically that Congressman Ford had stated, with respect to the bargaining practices concerning the "trade and craft employees in units or portions of units" transferred from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Energy, that "[t]his has produced some of the most stable and effective collective bargaining in the history of public employee labor relations." Id. at 78.[2] The Authority therefore concluded that "[t]o disrupt the historical inclusion of Foreman I, II, and III with the nonsupervisory employees in any unit established at WAPA through the period of the Executive Orders and before could frustrate the long history of stable and effective collective bargaining." Id. at 80. Given the special circumstances of these employees, the Authority found the Foreman I, II, and III positions to be appropriately included in the bargaining unit, without consideration of their supervisory status.

On June 29, 1980, one month after the Authority's issuance of its decision in WAPA 1, the Agency reclassified its Foreman II and III positions as Supervisory Craftsman positions. Then, on July 15, 1980, WAPA filed a unit clarification petition with the Authority, seeking to exclude as supervisors those employees in its reclassified Supervisory Craftsman positions. The Regional Director dismissed the unit clarification petition, finding that the evidence on file indicated that the Supervisory Craftsman positions were previously classified as Foreman II and

(b) The pay and pay practices relating to employees referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be negotiated in accordance with prevailing rates and pay practices without regard to any provision of--

(A) chapter 71 of title 5, United States Code (as amended by this title), to the extent that any such provision is inconsistent with this paragraph;

(B) subchapter IV of chapter 53 and subchapter V of chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code; or

III positions so that their inclusion in the unit was governed by the Authority's earlier decision. WAPA appealed this dismissal to the Authority, and the Authority denied the request for review, finding that WAPA "neither contends nor has it demonstrated that the incumbents of the disputed positions no longer perform the duties of the positions previously classified as Foreman II and III." Department of Energy, Western Area Power Administration, Golden, Colorado (WAPA 2), Case No. 7-CU-24 (February 17, 1981).

After the Authority denied WAPA's request for review, the current dispute arose. WAPA refused to negotiate with regard to wages for employees in Supervisory Craftsman positions, and refused to recognize these employees as members of the bargaining unit.

III. Decision of the Administrative Law Judge

The Judge found that the inclusion of "prevailing rate" foremen and supervisors, like the Respondent's Foreman II and III employees and its reclassified Supervisory Craftsman employees, in bargaining units with other "prevailing rate" employees occurred regularly since as early as 1969, and was condoned under Executive Orders 10988 [3] and 11491.[4] The Judge noted, further, that continuation of this practice is permitted under section 7135(a) of the Statute and section 704 of the CSRA.[5] He held, therefore, that the Respondent's improper refusal to bargain with its Supervisory Craftsman employees constituted an unfair labor practice under section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

IV. Positions of the Parties

In support of its position that the Judge erred in finding that its Supervisory Craftsman employees must be included in the bargaining unit, the Respondent argues that the Authority's decision in WAPA 1 is not binding here because it was decided under Executive Order 11491, and not under the Statute. The Respondent argues further that the more recently established Supervisory Craftsman positions are clearly "supervisory" positions to be excluded from the bargaining unit under the Statute, notwithstanding other provisions in title 5 of the U.S. Code regarding "prevailing rate employees," as these positions are categorized. The Respondent argues finally that the Authority's official notice in WAPA 1 that the past inclusion of the Foreman II and III positions in bargaining units resulted in a stable bargaining history is factually inaccurate and, even if accurate, it does not suffice to override the specific prohibition against including supervisors in bargaining units under both Executive Order 11491 and the Statute.

In its opposition to these contentions by the Respondent, the Union argues that the Judge committed no such errors in his legal analysis of this case. The Union also submitted a cross-exception, however, asserting that the Judge erred in his factual determination that the Respondent "substantially changed" the range of supervisory responsibility in the Supervisory Craftsman positions compared with that of the former Foreman II and III positions. The Union further argues that, in any event, this alleged error has no real significance because the Judge correctly found that the Supervisory Craftsman positions were properly included in the bargaining unit for other reasons.

The General Counsel filed a brief in support of the Union's limited factual cross-exception, arguing that any distinctions in supervisory duties between the Foreman II and III positions and the Supervisory Craftsman positions "involve the method or degree of performing a given function rather than significant variance in substantive functions or responsibilities."

V. Analysis

The issue before the Authority is whether the Respondent's refusal to negotiate with regard to wages for employees in the reclassified Supervisory Craftsman positions, and its refusal to recognize these employees as members of the bargaining unit, violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. In making such a determination, the Authority must decide whether these positions continue to be sufficiently analogous to the Foreman II and III positions to warrant their historical inclusion within the unit, as found appropriate in WAPA 1 and WAPA 2.

The Judge found in this case that "Supervisory Craftsmen perform all the duties they previously performed as Foreman II or Foreman III," and that "the record does not show any duty now performed by Supervisory Craftsmen which was not performed by Foreman III and, in most respects by Foreman II." He found further that, although the range of supervisory responsibility did increase "substantially," it was "principally because WAPA [had] unified the duties of Supervisory Craftsmen so that each Supervisory Craftsman . . . perform[ed] the full range of duties previously performed by Foreman II and III."

The Judge went on to note that the Statute generally prohibits the inclusion of supervisors in bargaining units. However, he noted further, as the CSRA expressly provides, the terms and conditions of employment for "prevailing rate employees" shall continue to be negotiated as in the past, regardless of contrary provisions in the United States Code at title 5, chapter 71.6/ He noted additionally that "prevailing rate employees" have been defined by statute to include "a foreman and a supervisor . . . in a position having trade, craft, or laboring experience and knowledge as a paramount requirement . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 5342(a)(2)(A).7/ The Judge then found that the record in this case demonstrates clearly that both the Foreman II and III positions and the Supervisory Craftsman positions were "prevailing rate" positions covered by these statutory provisions. He therefore concluded that, under the terms of these provisions, employees in Supervisory Craftsman positions cannot be excluded from the bargaining unit. We adopt these findings by the Judge, and find that they control the disposition of the case.

Finally, the Respondent challenges the factual accuracy of a statement in the legislative history of the Statute which the Authority discussed, and relied on in part, in the earlier WAPA 1 decision as indicative of legislative intent

6/ See footnote 1.

7/ The Authority relies on this statutory definition of "prevailing rate employee" because the CSRA uses the term in the same title of the U.S. Code without defining it, and we can discern no more appropriate definition. See Sutherland Statutory Construction § 27.02 (4th Ed).

to exempt certain supervisory employees from the general prohibition against their inclusion in bargaining units. We find in the context of this case that the accuracy of the statement at issue is irrelevant; it is not determinative of the legislative intent of the Statute. The challenged statement--whether accurate or inaccurate factually--simply reflects the legislative intent in the enactment of the Statute. See Sutherland Statutory Construction § 48.02 (4th Ed).

VI. Conclusion

Based on the considerations set forth above, the Authority concludes that the Respondent's refusal to negotiate with regard to wages for employees in Supervisory Craftsman positions, and to recognize these employees as members of the bargaining unit, constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. We find further that the Respondent's refusal to bargain was clearly unjustified and flies in the face of the statutory requirement to bargain in good faith.

In reaching this conclusion, we note particularly that the Respondent was on notice, as the result of its earlier unit clarification petition, that the excluded positions were required to be included in the bargaining unit, and that the reclassification of those positions to Supervisory Craftsman did not change the appropriateness of their inclusion in the unit. Department of Energy, Western Area Power Administration, 3 FLRA 76, 80 (1980).[8/] The Respondent has not demonstrated that the duties of the Supervisory Craftsman positions had changed to such an extent that it was justified in ignoring the Authority's previous holdings regarding the same positions and in refusing to recognize employees in Supervisory Craftsman positions as members of the bargaining unit. The Authority will not condone such activity which only serves to impede the collective bargaining process and frustrate our goal of efficient and effective government operations.

[8/] In that case, the Authority's unit determination was based solely on Executive Order 11491, as amended, consistent with section 902(b) of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 (CSRA), 92 Stat. 1224. Nothing in the Statute alters the inclusion of Foreman II and III employees in the unit. To the contrary, the fact that Foreman II and III employees come within the protection of section 704 of the CSRA (see note 1 above) is not in dispute in any of these cases. Whether or not these employees are supervisors within the meaning of the Statute, their entitlement to certain collective bargaining rights continues without regard to any inconsistent provision in the Statute.

Having found that the Respondent's unilateral exclusion of the Supervisory Craftsman positions from the bargaining unit constituted a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, we next consider what remedial order will best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute. In our opinion, the Respondent's unlawful conduct directly caused the incumbents of the excluded positions to be denied the benefits of exclusive representation, specifically the benefits of coverage under the collective bargaining agreement(s) applicable to the bargaining unit ever since their exclusion in 1982. Therefore, we shall order the Respondent to apply the terms of any agreement(s) negotiated between the parties covering the bargaining unit to the incumbents of the Supervisory Craftsman positions and, wherever possible, to apply such terms retroactive to the date of their unlawful exclusion from the unit.

Additionally, since the incumbents of the Supervisory Craftsman positions excluded from the unit are prevailing wage employees whose rates of pay are negotiable under section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 (see note 1), and the exclusive representative of the unit has been denied the right to negotiate rates of pay for the Supervisory Craftsman positions since 1982 because of their unlawful exclusion from the unit, we shall order the Respondent to negotiate in good faith upon request concerning such rates of pay and apply whatever agreement is reached retroactive to 1982. In our opinion, this is the only way that the affected employees can be made whole for the losses caused by the Respondent's unlawful conduct, and such an order is consistent with remedies provided in analogous circumstances. See, for example, Department of the Interior, Water and Power Resources Service, Grand Coulee Project, Grand Coulee, Washington and Office of the Secretary, Department of the Interior, Washington, D.C., 9 FLRA 385, 388-89 (1982), in which the agency was ordered to permit negotiations at the level of exclusive recognition concerning wage rate increases for prevailing rate employees and to adjust their negotiated wage rate retroactively to the date of its unlawful refusal to permit such negotiations, consistent with a memorandum of understanding between the parties.[9]

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the United States Department of Energy, Western Area Power Administration, Golden, Colorado, shall:

---

[9] As the Authority recently stated in its decision and order on remand in Environmental Protection Agency, 21 FLRA No. 98 (1986), slip op. at 5, while the Authority need not--and generally does not--order parties to give retroactive effect to the provisions of a collective bargaining agreement, the Authority will exercise its discretion under section 7118(a)(7)(B) of the Statute to order such a remedy in appropriate circumstances. One such circumstance is where an agency has refused to bargain on a specific proposal which was substantially identical to a proposal previously found by the Authority to be within the duty to bargain. Veterans Administration Regional Office (Buffalo, New York), 10 FLRA 167 (1982). We view the situation in this case as analogous, since the Respondent's unlawful conduct similarly has deprived the exclusive representative of an opportunity to bargain in a timely manner over clearly negotiable conditions of employment affecting some bargaining unit employees. As stated above, such an order is required here if the affected employees are to be made whole for the Respondent's unlawful conduct. Moreover, unlike the circumstances in Environmental Protection Agency, such an order here would not disrupt the agency's operations because it would merely require retroactive application of negotiated wage rates for a relatively few individuals in the Supervisory Craftsman positions.

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to negotiate in good faith with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Locals 640, 1245, 1759, 1959 and 2159, the exclusive representative of its employees, concerning the conditions of employment of employees in Supervisory Craftsman positions.

(b) Refusing to recognize employees in Supervisory Craftsman positions as being included in the unit previously determined to be appropriate by the Federal Labor Relations Authority in Department of Energy, Western Area Power Administration, 3 FLRA 76 (1980), and in Department of Energy, Western Area Power Administration, Golden, Colorado, Case No. 7-CU-24 (February 17, 1981).

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Recognize the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Locals 640, 1245, 1759, 1959 and 2159, as the exclusive representative of all of the employees in the unit where it has been granted exclusive recognition, including the employees in the Supervisory Craftsman positions.

(b) Apply retroactively to the incumbents of the Supervisory Craftsman positions who have been unlawfully excluded since 1982 from the bargaining unit exclusively represented by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Locals 640, 1245, 1759, 1959 and 2159, the terms of any agreement(s) reached between the Respondent and the exclusive representative applicable to that bargaining unit, to the extent that the retroactive application of such terms to the Supervisory Craftsman positions is possible.

(c) Upon request, negotiate in good faith with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Locals 640, 1245, 1759, 1959 and 2159, about the rate(s) of pay applicable to the prevailing wage employees in the Supervisory Craftsman positions who were unlawfully excluded from the bargaining unit since 1982, and apply whatever agreement is reached concerning their pay retroactive to the date of their unlawful exclusion from the bargaining unit in 1982.

(d) Upon request, negotiate in good faith with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Locals 640, 1245, 1759, 1959, and 2159, the exclusive representative of a unit of its employees, concerning the conditions of employment of all its employees in that unit, including those employees in Supervisory Craftsman positions.

(e) Post at its facilities in Golden, Colorado, and at its facilities in each District of the Western Area Power Administration, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed personally by the Administrator, Western Area Power Administration, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that said Notices are not altered, defaced or covered by any other material.

(e) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director of Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply.

DECISION

This proceeding, under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the United States Code, 5 U.S.C. §7101, et seq.,[1] and the Final Rules and Regulations issued thereunder, 5 C.F.R.

[1] For convenience of reference, sections of the Statute hereinafter are, also, referred to without inclusion of the initial "71" of the Statute reference, e.g., Section 7116(a)(5) will be referred to, simply as "16(a)(5)".

§2423.1, et seq., was initiated by a charge filed on May 29, 1981 (G.C. Exh. 21). The Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on August 31, 1981 (G.C. Exh. 24), the hearing being set for November 18, 1981. By Order dated October 28, 1981 (G.C. Exh. 26), the hearing was postponed indefinitely. By Order dated January 20, 1982, this case, together with other cases, was set for calendar call and for hearing on April 19, 1982 (G.C. Exh. 27). By letter dated February 3, 1982, Counsel for the Charging Party, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Locals 640, 1245, 1759, 1959 and 2159 (hereinafter referred to as "IBEW" or the "Union"), filed a Motion For Summary Judgment (G.C. Exh. 28); by Order dated March 1, 1982, the Acting Regional Director transferred Charging Party's Motion For Summary Judgment to the Authority (G.C. Exh. 29); by notice dated March 1, 1982, the General Counsel stated that he ". . . takes no position regarding the merits of the above cited Motion filed by Charging Party" (G.C. Exh. 29); by letter dated February 19, 1982, Respondent filed a Response to the Motion For Summary Judgment (G.C. Exh 30); on, or about, March 9, 1982, Counsel for Charging Party filed a Memorandum In Reply To Respondent's Response (G.C. Exh. 31); by letter dated March 22, 1982, Respondent filed a response to Charging Party's memorandum (G.C. Exh 32); on March 26, 1982, Respondent filed a Motion for a More Specific Hearing Date (G.C. Exh. 34). By Order dated March 31, 1982, the Authority transferred Charging Party's Motion For Summary Judgment to this Office. By Petition dated April 2, 1982, Charging Party requested revocation of the Subpoena Duces Tecum dated March 24, 1982; by Order dated April 6, 1982, said Petition was transferred to this Office; and by Order dated April 12, 1982, the Petition to Revoke was granted and the Subpoena Duces Tecum dated March 24, 1982, was revoked (G.C. Exh 37). In a conference call with counsel for all parties, the undersigned granted Respondent's Motion for a More Specific Hearing Date and fixed April 20 as the date for the commencement of the hearing in this matter and only counsel would be required to appear at the Calendar Call on April 19, and orally advised the parties that Charging Party's Motion For Summary Judgment would not be granted. At the Calendar Call on April 19, 1982, Council for General Counsel filed a further Motion for Summary Judgment which was taken under advisement and after argument on April 20, 1982, after the opening of the hearing, was denied (Tr. 20).

All parties were represented at the hearing by able counsel, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence bearing on the issues as delineated by the undersigned, and were afforded opportunity to present oral argument. At the close of the hearing, May 21, 1982, was fixed as the date for mailing, or filing, post-hearing briefs and counsel for each party has timely filed, or mailed, an excellent brief, received on or before May 25, 1982; however, counsel for General Counsel, by letter dated May 24, 1982, noted the inadvertent ommission of pages 19-23 of his brief and counsel for Respondent by notice dated May 26, 1982, noted an error in citations and submitted corrected pages 6 and 7 of its brief. Each request is granted and each brief has been corrected by inserting the missing or corrected pages as requested. Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Background

Prior to 1977 the activities involved were under the Department of Interior's Bureau of Reclamation (hereinafter referred to as "BR"). In 1977, Congress created the Department of Energy and the Department of Energy Organization Act, P.L. 95-91, transferred various operations, functions and responsibilities from numerous Departments and bodies to the Department of Energy, including all functions of the Secretary of the Interior with respect to:

> "(E) the power marketing function of the Bureau of Reclamation, including the construction, operation, and maintenance of transmission lines and attendant functions." (P.L. 95-91, Sec. 302(a)(1)(E)).

The Department of Energy in turn created the Western Area Power Administration (hereinafter also referred to as "WAPA") to which this power marketing function was delegated. BR had operated through five separate and autonomous regions in a fifteen state area. Although IBEW had a long-standing collective bargaining relationship with the BR, there were a variety of bargaining units, a number of different wage scales, etc. On October 23, 1978, WAPA filed a representation petition (G.C. Exh. 1); and on November 7, 1978, WAPA filed an amended petition (Case No. 61-4217(RA) (G.C. Exh. 2)). Although filed under the Executive Order, the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, P.L. 95-454, had been enacted October 13, 1978, effective 90 days after the date of enactment, and on April 18 and May 29,[2] 1980, the Authority issued its decision in Case No. 61-4217(RA), 3 FLRA No. 12, 3 FLRA 76 (1980). In agreement with WAPA, the Authority concluded that,

> ". . . WAPA is not the successor employer to the bargaining relationship between Intervenors and the USBR. . . ."

[2] In its initial decision, although the Authority stated, in part, that ". . . there are no current WAPA employees who were previously in the bargaining unit . . . represented by Local 611", a footnote stating that "*Accordingly, IBEW Local 611 will not appear on the ballot as described in the Direction of Election" was inadvertently omitted and, accordingly, a corrected decision issued on May 29, 1980.

And, in further agreement with WAPA, concluded,

> "that an activity-wide unit of all WB [Wage Board] employees would be appropriate."

However, in disagreement with WAPA, the Authority held that Foreman I, II, and III should be included in the unit found appropriate. Although the Authority stated,

> "The record herein does not set forth the duties, authority and responsibilities of employees in the disputed classifications." (3 FLRA at 79)

and,

> "The record evidence is insufficient upon which a determination of the supervisory status of Foreman I, II, and III can be based." (3 FLRA at 80)

the Authority concluded that,

> ". . . we include Foreman I, II, and III in the unit here found appropriate, without passing upon their supervisory status." (3 FLRA at 80), for the reasons, inter alia, that,

> ". . . these workers were included as members of the bargaining units at USBR since before 1962 and their wage rates were negotiated in the same manner as the wage rates of other personnel in the units. Congressman Ford stated with respect to the bargaining practices concerning these 'trade and craft employees in units or positions of units' transferred from Interior to DOE that: 'This has produced some of the most stable and effective collective bargaining in the history of public employee labor relations' (124 Cong. Rec. H8469, Aug. 11, 1981) [Legislative History of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Subcommittee on Postal Personnel and Modernization of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, House of Representatives, 96th Cong., 1st Sess., Comm. Print No. 96-7 (hereinafter referred to as "Legislative History") at page 857] To disrupt the historical inclusion of Foreman I, II, and III with the nonsupervisory employees . . . could frustrate the long history of stable and effective collective bargaining. . . ." (3 FLRA at 80)

". . . The legislative history of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 shows the intent of Congress that the wage board employees transferred from Interior to DOE should continue to enjoy the broad scope of bargaining at DOE similar to that which has existed at Interior. Thus, the Conference Committee, in discussing §704 of Title VII of the CSRA (92 Stat. 1218), as subsequently enacted, stated:

> As revised, [section 704] overrules the decision of the Comptroller General . . . relating to certain negotiated contracts applicable to employees under the Department of the Interior and the Department of Energy. This section also provides specific statutory authorization for the negotiation of wages, terms and conditions of employment and other employment benefits traditionally negotiated by these employees in accordance with prevailing practices in the private sector of the economy (H. Rep. No. 95-1717, Oct. 5, 1978, at 159) [Legislative History, p. 827]

"Similarly, Congressman Ford, in explaining his proposed amendment of the House bill which lead (sic) to the adoption of §704, stated:

> "During committee markup, I offered an amendment . . . which is intended to preserve the scope of collective bargaining heretofore enjoyed by certain trade and craft employees. . . ." (124 Cong. Rec. H8468, Aug. 11, 1978) [Legislative History, p. 857]. 3 FLRA at 80-81.

Notwithstanding that the decision of the Authority made reference to the 1978 legislative history of the Civil Service Reform Act, the case arose under, and was decided under, the Executive Order as the Authority specifically stated as follows:

> ". . . the Authority finds the following to constitute an appropriate unit for the purpose of exclusive recognition under Executive Order 11491, as amended:*

*In conformity with §902(b) of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 1224), the present case is decided solely on the basis of E.O. 11491, as amended, and as if the new Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (92 Stat. 1191) had not been enacted. The decision and direction of election does not prejudge in any manner either the meaning or application > of related provisions in the new Statute or the result which would be reached by the Authority if the case had risen under the Statute rather than the Executive Order." (3 FLRA at 80).

The unit found appropriate by the Authority was as follows:

> "All Wage Board (WB) employees of the Department of Energy, Western Area Power Administration, including employees classified as Foreman I, Foreman II or Foreman III, excluding management officials, confidential employees, employees engaged in federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in the Order." (3 FLRA at 80).

By letter dated June 16, 1980, Respondent requested reconsideration of the inclusion of Foreman I, II and III (G.C. Exh. 5) which was denied by Order dated June 30, 1980 (G.C. Exh. 7). Certification of IBEW issued on July 15, 1980 (G.C. Exh. 10) and on July 15, 1980, Respondent filed a Unit Clarification Petition, dated July 7, 1980 (7-CU-24) (G.C. Exh. 11) which sought clarification of "the status of certain persons employed by this agency for the purpose of performing supervisory duties as defined in the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute" namely, "Supervisory Electrician; Supervisory Lineman; Supervisory Mechanic, Meter and Relay; Supervisory Mechanic, Electronic Equipment; Supervisory Substation Operator; and Supervisory Communications and Instrumentation Mechanic are clearly supervisory . . . and therefore are excluded from the unit described in 3 FLRA 12."[3] By letter dated September 30, 1980 (G.C. Exh. 14), the Regional Director dismissed the unit clarification petition for the reason, in essence, that, "The evidence on file indicates that the positions listed . . . were previously classified as Foreman I, Foreman II or Foreman III positions" and, accordingly, their inclusion was governed by the Authority's prior decisions, including its denial of WAPA's Motion for Reconsideration.

Respondent appealed the dismissal to the Authority (G.C. Exh. 15) and the Authority, by Decision dated February 17, 1981 (G.C. Exh. 17), denied the request for review and stated, in part, as follows:

[3] Strictly speaking, the Authority had excluded, inter alia, "supervisors as defined in the Order." The definition of "Supervisor" in Section 2(c) of the Order is somewhat different from the definition of "supervisor" as defined in §3(a)(10) of the Statute; however, as the general effect of each definition is the same, the differences are not material for present purposes.

"In its request for review of the Regional Director's dismissal, the Activity/Petitioner contends . . . that the Foreman II and III positions have been reclassified and that the incumbents of those positions are currently in new classifications with changed duties which meet the statutory criteria for determining supervisory status. (Neither in its petition nor in the request for review did the Agency dispute the unit inclusion status of employees classified as Foreman I.) The Activity/Petitioner further contends that the Regional Director improperly refused to permit the presentation of evidence concerning the issue of supervisory status and ignored the Activity/Petitioner's offer of proof in this regard, and requests that the case be remanded for a hearing. . .

"The Authority concludes that the Activity/Petitioner's request for review herein must be denied. In this regard, the Activity/Petitioner has failed to make a specific offer of proof, either before the Regional Director or on appeal, to support its assertion that the duties performed by the incumbents of the disputed positions have changed significantly . . . More specifically, the Activity/Petitioner neither contends nor has it demonstrated that the incumbents of the disputed positions no longer perform the duties of the positions previously classified as Foreman II and III. Further, the Activity/Petitioner has failed to set forth what specific new duties currently performed . . . require their exclusion from the unit as supervisors within the meaning of section 7103(a)(10) of the Statute. Under the foregoing circumstances, the Authority concludes that no basis has been established to remand the subject case for a hearing . . .

"Accordingly, the request for review, seeking reversal of the Regional Director's dismissal of the . . . Petition for Clarification of Unit, is denied." (G.C. Exh. 17).

THE ISSUE

The issue, of course, is whether, as Paragraphs 4 and 5 of the Complaint alleges, WAPA refused to negotiate for employees "currently classified as Supervisory Craftsmen, and . . . has refused to recognize said employees as members of the bargaining unit. . . ." in violation of §§16(a)(5) and (1) of the Statute. WAPA denied the allegations of Paragraphs 4 and 5 of the Complaint (G.C. Exh. 25). As to Foreman I, II, and III, which the Authority included in the bargaining unit, WAPA asserts that it did bargain and that the agreement of the parties reflects the wage rates agreed upon for Foremen I, II and III (G.C. Exh. 18, Supplementary Labor Agreement #3, Wage Schedules). If WAPA refused to negotiate as to employees classified as Supervisory Craftsmen and refused to recognize Supervisory Craftsmen as members of the bargaining unit, as alleged in the Complaint, and, notwithstanding WAPA's denial, the record shows, as the findings hereinafter demonstrate, it did; nevertheless, an unfair labor practice may be found only if: a) there was interference, restraint, or coercion of "any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter" (§16(a)(1)); or b) a refusal to consult or negotiate "with a labor organization as required by this chapter" (§16(a)(5)). While the Authority included in the unit found appropriate, "All Wage Board (WB) employees . . . including employees classified as Foreman I, Foreman II or Foreman III" the Authority excluded, inter alia, "supervisors as defined in the Order." (3 FLRA at 80). WAPA asserts that Supervisory Craftsmen are supervisors within the meaning of §3(10) of the Statute and that Supervisory Craftsmen are expressly excluded as employees by §3(a)(2)(iii) of the Statute.

Initially, the Charging Party and, subsequently, the General Counsel, at the hearing, moved for Summary Judgment on the ground, in essence, that in litigation before the Authority it had been determined that Supervisory Craftsmen were not excluded as supervisors within the meaning of §3(10) of the Statute and that there was no genuine issue as to any material fact.

Appropriate unit determinations of the Authority are not, pursuant to §23(a)(2), subject to direct review. In like manner, certifications and/or appropriate unit determinations by the National Labor Relations Board under the National Labor Relations Act are not subject to direct review. American Federation of Labor v. NLRB, 308 U.S. 401 (1940); Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company v. NLRB, 313 U.S. 146 (1941). Appropriate unit determinations of the Board under the National Labor Relations Act are, however, subject to challenge when a complaint of unfair labor practice is made predicated upon such determination, Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, supra; and, by like token, appropriate unit determinations of the Authority are subject to challenge when, as here, a complaint of unfair labor practice is made predicated upon such determination.

As to the threshold question as to whether a determination of the Authority in a representation case may be relitigated in an unfair labor practice proceeding predicated thereon, I have no doubt or reservation that it may not, both because, as the Supreme Court stated, as to a like situation under the National Labor Relations Act where the Trial Examiner had refused to admit certain proof and the Board had affirmed the ruling because it was not shown that the evidence sought to be admitted was unavailable at, discovered since, or not introduced in, the representation hearing, and because decisions of the Authority are, of course, controlling in subsequent litigation before the Authority. The fallacy of applying this principle here is, quite simply, that the Authority has not determined that Supervisory Craftsmen are, or are not, excluded as supervisors within the meaning of §3(10) of the Statute. In its decision determining the appropriate unit, the Authority had before it, considered, and decided the status of Foreman I, II and III. Indeed, the classification of "Supervisory Craftsmen" did not exist at the time of the Authority's unit determination. It is quite true that on July 15, 1980, WAPA filed a unit clarification petition which sought clarification of the status of certain persons, namely Supervisory Craftsmen, who were asserted "are clearly supervisory . . . and therefore are excluded from the unit described in 3 FLRA 12." The Regional Director dismissed this petition on September 30, 1980, and the Authority denied WAPA's request for review on February 17, 1981.

> ". . . If the Company or the Crystal City Union desired to relitigate this issue, it was up to them to indicate in some way that the evidence they wanted to offer was more than cumulative. Nothing more appearing, a single trial of the issue was enough." (Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, supra, 313 U.S. at 162.

Although the Authority stated, inter alia, that WAPA had "failed to make a specific offer of proof . . . to support its assertion that the duties performed . . . have changed significantly" and that WAPA "has failed to set forth what specific new duties . . . require their exclusion from the unit as supervisors within the meaning of section 7103(a)(10) of the Statute", the Authority made no determination that Supervisory Craftsmen either are, or are not, supervisors within the meaning of §3(a)(10) of the Statute and its unit determination in 3 FLRA No. 12, 3 FLRA 76. In its unit determination decision, the Authority had stated,

> "The record herein does not set forth the duties, authority and responsibilities of employees in the disputed classifications" [Foreman I, II and III]

and,

> "The record evidence is insufficient upon which a determination of the supervisory status of Foreman I, II, and III can be based."

The Authority, quite properly, in view of the provisions of 5 U.S.C. §5342(a)(2) which defines "prevailing rate employee" as "an individual employed in or under an agency in a recognized trade or craft . . . including a foreman and a supervisor, in a position having trade, craft, or laboring experience and knowledge as the paramount requirement", the bargaining history as to such "prevailing rate employees", and the expressed

Congressional approval of such practice, simply excluded Foreman I, II and III, notwithstanding that the record was "insufficient upon which a determination of the supervisory status of Foreman I, II and III can be based", since, whether they were, or were not, supervisors, the statute defines "prevailing rate employees" as "including a foreman and a supervisor, in a position having trade, craft, or laboring experience and knowledge as the paramount requirement."

Nevertheless, the Authority made no determination of the supervisory status of Foreman I, II and III. By including Foreman I, II and III in the appropriate unit, obviously, the Authority by its exclusion of "supervisors as defined in the Order" excluded supervisors other than "employees classified as Foreman I, Foreman II, or Foreman III", if Foreman I, II and III were, in fact, supervisors, which, as noted, the Authority did not, and could not because of insufficient record evidence, determine. Thereafter, WAPA eliminated the classification of Foreman II and III and reclassified the incumbents as Supervisory Craftsmen who, it asserts, are supervisory and therefore excluded from the unit described in 3 FLRA No. 12. Had WAPA simply refused to bargain as to Supervisory Craftsmen, it would have been necessary, to establish an unfair labor practice, to determine in the complaint proceeding whether they were supervisors inasmuch as the representation proceeding had not considered the status of Supervisory Craftsmen and supervisors were excluded from the unit found appropriate. WAPA did not, however, do this; rather, it filed its unit clarification petition. Had the Authority determined that Supervisory Craftsmen were not supervisors within the meaning of its exclusion of supervisors from the appropriate unit, I would quite agree that WAPA could not relitigate issues which were litigated in a prior representation proceeding, cf. ABC Freight Forwarding Corporation, Blue Ribbon Express, Inc., and Midland-Forwarding Corporation, 194 NLRB 179 (1971); but I can not agree that WAPA may not litigate an issue which, admittedly, could have been litigated in the unit clarification proceeding, but was not because the petition was dismissed. Stated otherwise, summary judgment would be appropriate if the status of Supervisory Craftsmen had been fully litigated. As the Court of Appeals stated in Linn Gear Company v. NLRB, 608 F 2d 791, 103 LRRM 2021 (9th Cir. 1979),

> ". . . In Pittsburgh Plate Glass, in contrast to the case before us, the parties had a full and complete hearing. The court observed that the Union (1) participated in the hearing, (2) called witnesses, and (3) cross-examined those called by other parties. Pittsburgh Plate Glass, supra, [313 U.S. 146, 61 S. Ct. 908, 85 L. Ed. 1251 (1941)] at 162 . . . Here, the only affirmative action taken by Linn Gear was to consent to the holding of the election. Nowhere did it waive its right to be heard on the question of which employees were qualified to vote in the election. Clearly,

> . . .
> ". . . the entry of summary judgment was improper and the case must be remanded for a hearing before the Board." (103 LRRM at 2023)
>> [There were challenged ballots sufficient in number to affect the outcome of the election. The Regional Director "investigated" but did not hold a formal hearing. Whether the Regional Director resolved the challenge of eight other ballots or, sustained the union's challenge as to Hartl, and, therefore, did not reach the other eight since they would then not have been sufficient to affect the outcome, it is clear that the disposition of the challenge of this one ballot, Hartl's, was pivotal; the Regional Director sustained the union's challenge of Hartl's ballot; employer, Linn Gear, refused to bargain; unfair labor practice complaint issued and Board granted summary judgment on the basis that ". . . a respondent in a proceeding alleging a violation of Section 8(a)(5) is not entitled to relitigate issues which were or could have been litigated in a prior representation proceeding", citing Pittsburgh Plate Glass. 236 NLRB 64 (1978)]

See, also, Henderson Trumbull Supply Corporation v. NLRB, 501 F. 2d 1224, 86 LRRM 3121 (2d Cir. 1974).

Similarly, although not involving objections to an election, this case involves material and substantial issues of fact which were wholly unresolved in the representation proceeding, namely: a) the duties of Foreman II and III; and b) the duties of Supervisory Craftsmen. Moreover, as "supervisors as defined in the Order" were excluded from the unit and WAPA asserts that Supervisory Craftsmen are now supervisors, it would be both appropriate and necessary to determine in the complaint proceedings whether, even though the Authority found that WAPA "failed to set forth what specific new duties . . . require their exclusion from the unit as supervisors. . . .", their duties now remove them from the unit as supervisors within the meaning of the Statute. Accordingly, the motions for summary judgment were denied and, the status of Supervisory Craftsmen having been litigated, the renewed motion for summary judgment is denied and the case will be determined on the record.

The factual issues delineated for litigation were: the duties of Foreman II and III and the duties of Supervisory Craftsmen. The prior unit determination was not relitigated and it was made abundantly clear that the Authority's prior unit determination was controlling and that Supervisory Craftsmen would be included in the bargaining unit, as Foreman II and III had been included in the bargaining unit, unless it was shown that their duties now remove them from the bargaining unit as supervisors within the meaning of the Statute.

Findings

1. Effective June 29, 1980, WAPA redescribed and reclassified "craft supervisory positions" in a memorandum, "Subject: Classification and Pay Rate - Wage Board Supervisory Positions" (G.C. Exhs. 8 and 9). Wage board supervisory positions were titled "Supervisory Lineman, Supervisory Electrician, Supervisory Mechanic, Meter & Relay", as applicable; and Pay was fixed at two increments:

> "a. 120 percent over highest rate supervised - applicable when the supervisory position exercises full supervisory responsibility for more than one crew, and each crew consists of three or more employees.
> "b. 115 percent over highest rate supervised - applicable if criteria for the 120 percent rate is not met, but criteria for classification as a supervisory wage board position is badly met (see 1 above).
> ["1. Classification . . . The administrative policy and criteria for allocation of a wage board supervisory position are:
> > "a. The position must meet the minimum supervisory responsibilities and functions of work planning, work direction, administration, personnel, equal employment opportunity, and safety. . .
> > "b. The position must exercise the responsibilities contained in "a" above over three or more trade and craft employees on a regular, continuing basis.

2. By memorandum dated March 17, 1982, to Area Managers, to be disseminated to all wage board supervisors on March 26, 1982, WAPA announced its decision to adopt a single pay rate for all supervisory wage board positions, "Our single rate is temporarily established at 115 percent over the highest journeyman craft supervised. The final rate will be established from wage survey data collected from utilities in the Western Area" (Res. Exh. 9). However, "During the interim between adoption of the single pay rate and implementation of appropriate adjustments consistent with the industry, the existing pay for all supervisory wage board employees will be continued without change" (Res. Exh. 9).

3. On January 13, 1981, the parties entered into a "Memo of Understanding" which provided as follows:

> "The question of whether employees formerly classified as Foremen II and III and now classified as Supervisory Electrician, Supervisory Linemen, etc. is presently in litigation. Should the final decision in this case include these classifications within the unit covered by this Agreement, the provisions of this agreement will apply to them and their rates of pay shall be subject to negotiation." (G.C. Exh. 18).

The Agreement, referred to in the Memo of Understanding, effective January 18, 1981, contained wage rates for Foreman I, II and III and for "Acting Supervisory Craftsmen" (G.C. Exh. 18, Supplementary Labor Agreement #3, Wage Schedules).

4. By letter dated March 30, 1981, IBEW notified WAPA of its desire to reopen bargaining, ". . . to amend our Agreement to include the proper job titles, job descriptions, and wages for all supervisory classifications included in our bargaining unit . . ." (G.C. Exh. 19).

5. By letter dated April 13, 1981, WAPA refused IBEW's request to reopen bargaining,[4] stating, in part, as follows:

> "It is our view that the supervisory craftsmen are excluded from the bargaining unit . . . Accordingly, I must respectfully decline your request to reopen bargaining. . . ." (G.C. Exh. 20).

6. The testimony, as more fully set forth hereinafter, shows that Foreman II and III were supervisors, both within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Order,

[4] By letter dated September 5, 1980, WAPA had agreed to continue to honor dues deduction authorizations from Supervisory Craftsmen (Res. Exh. 18) and, while stated to be a "purely temporary accomodation" pending "decision on the clarification of unit (CU) petition", Mr. Boatman, Chief of Labor/Employee Relations Branch, testified that "They are still being deducted" (Tr. 49).

> "(c) 'Supervisor' means an employee having authority, in the interest of an agency, to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or responsibility to direct them, or to adjust their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action, if in connection with the foregoing the exercise of authority is not of a merely routine or clerical nature, but requires the use of independent judgment;" (E.O. 11491, as amended, Section 2(c)).

and within the meaning of §3(a)(10) of the Statute,

> "(10) 'supervisor' means an individual employed by an agency having authority in the interest of the agency to hire, direct, assign, promote, reward, transfer, furlough, layoff, recall, suspend, discipline, or remove employees, to adjust their grievances, or to effectively recommend such action, if the exercise of the authority is not merely routine or clerical in nature but requires the consistent exercise of independent judgment, except that, with respect to any unit which includes firefighters or nurses, the term 'supervisor' includes only those individuals who devote a preponderance of their employment time to exercising such authority." (5 U.S.C. §7103(a)(10)).

Thus, as the testimony set forth hereinafter shows, both Foreman II and Foreman III had responsibility for assigning work, assuring work completion, responsibility to recommend employees for hire, promotion, awards, or discipline, the responsibility to approve or disapprove leave, responsibility for training, and responsibility for safety. The record shows little about the exercise of authority by Foreman II to adjust grievances at the informal level, but the testimony showed, at the least, that they believed they had the authority to do so had they been confronted with such a problem;[5] but Foreman III did have, and did exercise, such authority, even if, as WAPA asserts, such authority was not exercised when the grievance was against management. Both Foreman II and Foreman III consistently exercised independent judgment in the exercise of their authority. The Authority has held that employees who perform such duties are supervisors within the meaning of §3(a)(10) of the Statute. See, Department of Defense, Department of the Army, Headquarters, U.S.

[5] The absence of "grievances" over extended periods strongly suggests, as the testimony of Mr. Lockwood shows, Tr.228, that problems which others might well have considered "grievances" were resolved without being considered to have been "grievances".

Army Armament, Materials Readiness Command, Rock Island Arsenal, Illinois, 8 FLRA No. 127 (1982); National Guard Bureau, State of New York, Division of Military and Naval Affairs, Albany, New York, 9 FLRA No. 2 (1982). Indeed, WAPA both conceded and asserts that Foreman II and III were supervisors.

The record further shows beyond any possible doubt that personnel administration under WAPA has changed substantially and, clearly, there have been significant changes as to Supervisory Craftsmen. Supervisory Craftsmen have greater independence and supervisory responsibility, in part, because under WAPA certain engineers and managers utilized by BR were eliminated (Tr. 161); but principally because WAPA has unified the duties of Supervisory Craftsmen so that each Supervisory Craftsman now performs the full range of duties previously performed by Foreman II and III. Although duties and functions which were more informal under BR as to Foreman II and III have been formalized under WAPA, such as more detailed performance appraisals, the record does not show any duty now performed by Supervisory Craftsmen which was not performed by Foreman III and, in most respects by Foreman II. It is certainly true that some Foreman II may not have had, or exercised, significant responsibility for long-range planning but some did and all had responsibility, at the least, as Mr. Lighty, stated, for "short term" planning, i.e., monthly planning, albeit in accordance with long range goals; that some Foreman II had less responsibility for hiring new employees than Foreman III; that Foreman II did not prepare performance appraisals, as Foreman III did; nevertheless, the record shows that Foreman II had input on long-range planning, did express preference for selection of new employees and did give their rating of employees. On the other hand, it can not be seriously questioned that under WAPA the supervisory authority and responsibilities of each Supervisory Craftsman have been clearly set forth in WAPA's master position description (G.C. Exh. 11) and that as the result of assigning crews to each Supervisory Craftsman, Supervisory Craftsmen were given responsibilities that some had not had as Foremen II.

Mr. Boatman testified that craft duties performed by Supervisory Craftsmen were the same as the craft duties performed by Foreman II and Foreman III, i.e., as Mr. Boatman stated:

> "A For the journeymen duties, yes. That's right. Depending on the craft. An electrician performs electrician duties." (Tr. 49).

Although Mr. Boatman testified that under BR standards, Foreman II could perform journeymen duties up to 50 per cent of their duty time and Foreman III up to 15 per cent of the time (Tr. 50), from the record it does not appear that either Foreman II or III "worked with the tools" except on occasion. Certainly, the record does not support WAPA's assertion that "Foreman II were required to perform journeymen tasks" (Respondent Brief, p. 5).

a. Mr. Dennis Lenz, Chief, Operations Branch, Division of Organization and Personnel.

Mr. Lenz's task was to re-examine and re-certify all position descriptions transferred from BR. I do not question that, from a classification standpoint, he found inconsistencies and discrepancies (Tr. 65-70); however, for the purpose of this proceeding, only the duties actually performed by Foreman II and III, whether these duties changed under WAPA, and whether any change occurred after the representation hearing, are material. Mr. Lenz was largely without personal knowledge of the duties actually performed by Foreman II and III. With respect to various functions, Mr. Lenz testified that, from their job descriptions, Foreman II and III did not have "formal" responsibility (Tr. 101), for example to recommend training for their employees, but he understood "that they did speak to the second level of supervisors and make suggestions and recommendations" (Tr. 80); he[6] was not the "official rater of employee performance" but he would have recommended (Tr. 89); he would not have formally selected any employee on his crew, but "would have more or less advised . . . his supervisor, his GS supervisor on what he wanted to do." (Tr. 89); if he had a problem on his crew with one of his employees, that would "99 times out of a hundred, elevate to the GS supervisor rather than being resolved by the employee on site with is (sic) crew." (Tr. 89); he would "normally have had a very limited counseling role" (Tr. 89); he would "normally not have been involved in the grievance process under our agreement, that would have normally elevated immediately to the GS supervisor from a practical stand point irrespective of what the paper said."[7] (Tr. 89). With respect to Foreman II and III generally, Mr. Lenz testified that he believed they recommended for training. Thus, he stated,

[6] At this point, Mr. Lenz was specifically referring to a desk audit of Supervisory Lineman Alvin Klaus (Tr. 89). Whether Mr. Klaus had been a Foreman II or a Foreman III was not shown.

[7] Article 15, Section 15.5, of the current agreement provides, in part, as follows:

> ". . . employees will be encouraged to act promptly either directly or through their representatives in bringing to the attention of their immediate supervisors, through informal discussion, any act, condition or circumstance which is causing employee dissatisfaction and to thereby seek supervisory explanation or action to remove the element of dissatisfaction before it serves as the basis for a formal grievance . . . ." Section 15.6 places disposition of formal grievances in supervisors other than Foreman or Supervisory Craftsmen.

> "A I believe they recommended for training but the three that I'm most familiar with did, in fact, make recommendations to their GS supervisor that this employee needs hot line training, that employee needs GMSC training." (Tr. 98).

Mr. Lenz testified that it was his understanding that some BR Foreman II and III made recommendations for promotion and some did not (Tr. 99). Although a GS supervisor actually prepared the paper and was the certifying official, Mr. Lenz stated,

> ". . . I think it would be unrealistic to assume that a GS supervisor who actually prepares the paper and is the certifying official, for, in pragmatic terms, would do that without talking to the people who are actually out there doing the work for him --
> "A I think from my personal knowledge now the GS supervisor, in fact, rarely do not accept the recommendation. . . ." (Tr. 101).

As to Supervisory Craftsmen, Mr. Lenz testified that their responsibility as supervisors has been clearly set forth. For example, as to Mr. Klaus, who is a Supervisory C & I [Communications and instrument] Mechanic (Tr. 85), Mr. Klaus has 4 to 6 lineman working under him; that he is in direct charge; he assigns work; plans the work; hires them; hasn't had occasion to discharge; imposes discipline; makes out performance appraisals - he is first line rater (Tr. 86-87).

b) Mr. David Onstad, District Manager, Phoenix District

Mr. Onstad began employment with the BR as a Staff Engineer in 1963 and has held his present position with WAPA since September, 1978 (Tr. 117, 150). Mr. Onstad explained the organizational chart for the Phoenix District (Res. Exh. 1). He stated that there was only one Supervisory Craftsman who had been a legitimate Foreman III and this is Mr. Lenny Ward, although two others have been "grandfathered" (Tr. 119). As Foreman III, Mr. Ward had been in charge of the line crews and as Supervisory Craftsman he not only directly supervises one Lineman and four General Equipment Operators but also supervises three Supervisory Linemen each of whom directly supervises a line crew (Tr. 119). Mr. Ward is paid at 120 per cent of the journeyman rate and the other three Supervisory Linemen in the Transmission Lines Branch are paid at 115 per cent of the journeyman rate (Tr. 119). Mr. Ward's immediate supervisor is Mr. Dale Fowler, Chief of the Transmission Lines Branch, who in turn reports to Mr. Roy Lucas, Director of Transmission Lines and Substation Maintenance Division, and Mr. Lucas reports to Mr. Onstad (Tr. 120).

Mr. Onstad testified that Supervisory Craftsmen assign and direct work; and are responsible for long range planning, "They are responsible for figuring out what they are going to be doing the next year, the next week and the next months or so." (Tr. 120). When asked whether the Foreman had the same responsibility prior to 1980, Mr. Onstad testified that they did. He stated,

> "A Well, they've probably been in charge of most of the long range planning for quite some time prior to my coming to Phoenix. They worked together with the branch chiefs to figure out what maintenance would be done during the next year in different areas of responsibility.
> "Q What is the change then from what they are doing now with regard to long range planning and the way it was earlier?
> "A Probably not much in the area of long range planning.
> "Q Any other changes with regard to their assignment and direction of work?
> "A In regard to those two areas there hasn't been much change as far as what they do." (Tr. 120-121).

Mr. Onstad testified that all Supervisory Craftsmen approve leave (Tr. 121); that on the transmission line crew prior to May or June of 1980, the three Foreman II's "did not approve leave for people that worked for them.

8/ I am aware of the April 21, 1980, "sick-out" incident when about one-half of the wage board work force assigned to the Phoenix District Office failed to report for work and WAPA's assertion that some Foremen had both participated in the sick-out and had improperly approved leave for absentees which "resulted in five proposed letters of reprimand. In two cases leave granting authority has been withdrawn for an indefinite period." (Res. Exh. 22; Tr. 131). Although Mr. Onstad referred to "supervisory craftsmen" (Tr. 131), as the reclassification occurred later, it is apparent that his terminology was in error as Respondent Exhibit 22 confirms.

While Respondent points to this incident and the action of certain Foremen as showing a conflict in interest, it also confirms the leave granting authority possessed and exercised by Foremen.

Only the foremen III in charge of the entire crew approved leave and he did it for the whole crew." (Tr. 121); however, Mr. Onstad stated that Foremen II's, other than the three on the line crew, did approve leave[8] (Tr. 141), "I believe that the ones for the meter-relay mechanics and the electronic equipment mechanics and the automotive mechanics I believe that they did have [leave granting authority]" (Tr. 142). Mr. Onstad stated that when Foremen were reclassified as Supervisory Craftsmen, "we made a change in their responsibilities [speaking specifically of the Foreman II's on the line crew] and assigned people directly to them and they now have the leave approving authority for those people. They also do performance appraisals and anything else that goes along with being a supervisor for those people." (Tr. 121-122).

Mr. Onstad testified that there "was never a performance appraisal made as long as I was in Phoenix until last fall [1981] . . . there was an informal system in practice before but it was really on an exception basis. If there was something wrong somebody would bring something forward . . . there was never anything put in the record on a satisfactory performance." (Tr. 122).

Mr. Onstad further testified that Supervisory Craftsmen recommend promotions (Tr. 122; Res. Exh. 13) and that he did not believe that Foreman II or III did (Tr. 124); that Supervisory Craftsmen make recommendations for special achievement awards (Tr. 125; Res. Exh. 14); and that he was not aware of a similar responsibility of Foreman II or III (Tr. 126); that Supervisory Craftsmen certify position descriptions (Tr. 127-128; Res. Exh. 15); that he was not aware that Foreman II or III did so (Tr. 128); that Supervisory Craftsmen recommend training (Tr. 129; Res. Exh. 12) and that to his knowledge Foreman II and III did not. Mr. Onstad further testified that Supervisory Craftsmen attend management staff meetings (Tr. 130) but also conceded that Foreman II and III attended the "first formal staff meeting" in April, 1980 (Tr. 130-131).

c) Mr. Orlan O. Lighty, Director, Transmission Line and Substation Maintenance Division, Sacramento, California

Mr. Lighty was initially employed by the BR as a GS supervisor at Shasta Dam where he supervised one line crew, two electrician crews and one electronics crew (Tr. 158). There were three Foreman III's and one Foreman II. He began his present duties with WAPA in 1978 (Tr. 159).

Mr. Lighty testified that considerably more tasks are performed by the supervisor now than previously with the BR because of the reduction of levels of supervision,

> "A Previously with the Bureau if you took from the crafts supervisor up through the regional director > there were six levels of supervision where with us there were only four.

> "Q Is that one of the reasons why these supervisors now have more supervisory responsibilities?
> "A They have a wider range of supervisory level and as I do myself." (Tr. 161).

Mr. Lighty testified that, ". . . our supervisors do not perform hands-on work." (Tr. 168; see, also, Tr. 177). He continued,

> "A . . . I'm not saying that if an emergency would occur on a tower that a foreman might go assist to get the man off. I'm saying they are not working supervisors.
> "Q . . . Did the foremen II's and III's prior to the creation of supervisory craftsmen do hands-on work?
> "A No.
> "Q So there has been no change as far as that goes?
> "A In the day-to-day direction of the job it's similar but the supervisory responsibility in management and long range planning has increased.
> "Q Okay. You stated that as to this planning aspect under U.S.B.R. there was a supervisory engineer there and he did the planning. You said to a degree. Now, did Foreman II and III's also get involved in long range planning?
> "A It was more or less layed (sic) out as long range plans by the GS supervisor and the foremen III's that you referred to would be more of a monthly planning, if you call it long range. I would call it short range myself.
> "Q So he did planning for the up coming month, that type of planning?
> "A Based on the long range plans set up the supervisor.
> "Q Did they participate in the development of long range planning?

"A Yeah, I think most GS supervisors would like input from those foremen.

"Q So they did participate in the development of the long range planning?

"A To some degree, yes. Not totally.

"Q On the hiring aspect . . . you mentioned that today qualified applicants were sent to the craft supervisors, they review, interview and make a recommendation.

"When you worked for the U.S.B.R. did your foremen III's make recommendations as to whether or not an individual should be hired?

"A The way I personally conducted it was the personnel returned to me a list of applicants. I reviewed and made a tenative selection, if need be call the applicant's supervisor and ascertain what I thought was the best man for the position. At that point I reviewed with the foremen his feeling on that man or another man -- let's say the better choices within the selection.

"Q You prefaced all that by saying the way you did it.

"A I can only speak for myself and as far as I know the others did the same." (Tr. 168-170).

As to performance appraisals, Mr. Lighty testified that under the BR Foreman II and III made appraisals but they were more informal and the Foreman II and III were not involved in setting up the standards by which his people were to be rated as is true with Supervisory Craftsmen . Thus, he testified, in part, as follows:

"Q . . . Now, the primary difference what was done under U.S.B.R. and what is done now under the Department of Energy, Western Area, is that primary difference that the supervisors are looking at more things because there are now performance standards. . . .

"A . . . generally what you're saying is true, however, the consequences of their rating is much more important. . . .

> "A . . . the present craft supervisor is involved in setting up those standards by which his people be rated which is a very critical thing. He has to be knowledgeable with what functions need to be performed much more than before when somebody just said here is the thing you go rate your people against. Does he report to work on time, is he cooperating with the other employees. Anybody could hand him that. Now he has to set up a specific performance standard that is based on his technical knowledge.
> "A Are those standards the same for each craft?
> "A No. It may be similar but there are different performance standards for different crafts." (Tr. 172-173).

With regard to awards, Mr. Lighty stated that Supervisory Craftsmen definitely make recommendations for awards (Tr. 163) and when asked how it was handled in the BR, stated,

> "A I think there were occasions where they did make recommendations for approval. They may or may not have written it up. In many cases they recommended their people verbally and the GS supervisor wrote up the recommendation." (Tr. 163).

With regard to the Foreman II and Foreman III handling grievances, Mr. Lighty stated, in part, as follows:

> "WITNESS: The particular example, sir, was between two employees that were within his own crew he would probably try to resolve it himself. If it were between himself and a member of his crew or between two crew then he would obviously want support from somebody above him. . . ." (Tr. 164).

When a grievance was between an employee and management, Mr. Lighty said the Foreman would, "More likely refer it." (Tr. 165). Mr. Lighty testified that Supervisory Craftsmen,

> "A Because of the remoteness of some of these crews and the lack of a GS supervisor in that area, they would attempt to resolve everything at the lowest possible level. That is our policy." (Tr. 166).

Mr. Lighty stated that Supervisory Craftsmen regularly attend steward-management meetings (Tr. 166). While Foremen, prior to 1980, attended "by invitation rather than on a regular schedule" (Tr. 166); that Supervisory Craftsmen regularly attend monthly management meetings (Tr. 166); but that such meetings were not "a regularly scheduled thing" under the BR; however, Foreman II and Foreman III would, by invitation, attend certain ones (Tr. 167).

d) Mr. William R. Miller, Supervisory Craftsmen

Mr. Miller began employment with the BR in 1957 as a lineman. He was promoted to Foreman III in 1967 (Tr. 184). His title is now Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 185). Both as a Foreman III and now as a Supervisory Craftsman he had four linemen under him and at one time also had a groundman (Tr. 185). He stated that he did not have as Foreman III, and does not have as Supervisory Craftsman, any authority to furlough, layoff, or to recall employees (Tr. 185).

Mr. Miller stated that as a Foreman III with the BR he rated employees,

> "A We had a performance appraisal that we did once a year and it had various categories layed (sic) out. You would judge a man on how he mastered his capabilities or didn't master them. When you were through with it you sat down and talked to the individual and he either agreed or disagreed with your appraisal." (Tr. 186).

Mr. Miller stated that these appraisals continued until 1977 when he became an employee of WAPA; that from that time, 1977, until 1980, no performance appraisals were made, ". . . because we didn't have the organization to do it", not a lack of authority (Tr. 197). As a Supervisory Craftsman, he has made one appraisal of employees working for him,

> "A We have another type of appraisal form and we also have the critical elements and you judge the man on the elements . . . and you sit down with him and go over it with him and explain it to him and he signs it." (Tr. 186).

Mr. Miller stated that both as a Foreman III with the BR and now as a Supervisory Craftsman: he granted annual leave; vacation leave requests; sick leave (Tr. 187-188). With respect to informal grievances he did the same as Foreman III as he does as a Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 188). Thus, he stated,

> "A I would say if a man came to me and was unhappy about the overtime I gave him the day before and he and I would sit down and talk about it and I would decide in his favor of if I was still convinced he didn't have it coming I would send him to talk to his shop steward.
> "Q Is that any different now in your capacity as a supervisory craftsman at Western. Do you do the same thing?
> "A No different." (Tr. 188).

Miller testified that as a Foreman III with the BR he had had occasion to recommend disciplinary action to his supervisor (Tr. 191); and that as Supervisory Craftsman he has the same authority to recommend disciplinary action to his supervisor. Mr. Miller stated that as a Foreman III he had recommended hiring and firing of an employee; that he hired two apprentices and two or three linemen and he let a man go on his probationary period (Tr. 191). More accurately, Mr. Miller said he shouldn't say he hired them, he decided on which one was the man he wanted and told his supervisor this was the man he would like to have (Tr. 191-192); that this is the same procedure he now follows as a Supervisory Craftsman, "I hired two the same way . . . . I read their application and their form and talked to them, recommended to my supervisor this is the man I want." (Tr. 192). Mr. Miller stated that he had, both as a Foreman III with the BR and as Supervisory Craftsman, recommended promotion to acting foreman (Tr. 192). He has never recommended promotion of apprentices to journeymen because that is done by the apprenticeship committee (Tr. 192); and while he has authority to recommend that somebody be held back he had never done so. (Tr. 192-193). He stated that as a Foreman III he "recommended to my supervisor that there was a craftsman I thought should get an award and he processed it." (Tr. 193); that it is done the same way now (Tr. 193).

As a Foreman III he did receive required supervisory training,

> "A I took training on how to listen, to talk to people and role playing and how to settle grievance and work out problems.
> "Q Who else attended the supervisory training courses besides foremen III?
> "A GS people.
> "Q Did other foremen participate?

"A Yes.

"Q Just the foremen III?

"A Yes." (Tr. 193-194).

Mr. Miller, when asked if he certified position descriptions at the BR said, "I'm sure I did, but I don't remember any certain instances but I'm sure I did." (Tr. 195). He further stated that he had done so as a Supervisory Craftsmen (Tr. 195).

When asked whether there was any change in his function as a Supervisory Craftsman as compared to Foreman III with the BR, Mr. Miller testified as follows:

> "Q Now you were asked about a number of specific supervisory duties. Just as a general question do you have more supervisory responsibilities today with Western than you had with the Bureau of Reclamation?
> "A No.
> "Q Unchanged?
> "A I have -- the only more responsibilities I have are because I'm in a remote area now. I don't have any supervision at Tracy. I used to be able to walk across the street and see my boss now I have to call him on the telephone or drive to Sacramento.
> "Q . . . Could you tell us specific examples, for example, the long range planning, do you have more responsibility now than you had with the Bureau?
> "A No, it's the same.
> "Q But there is a difference of supervisory responsibilities?
> "A I don't say responsibility, I'd say duties.
> "Q For example?
> "A Well, something might come up, say a line come down, and I had to go on and work on it right away. I could not reach my supervisor to authorize the overtime. I would go ahead and exercise my own judgment and do the work without prior approval.

> "Q What would you have done at the Bureau of Reclamation?
> "A My boss would have been right there and I would have asked him. If he wasn't there there would have been a succession that I could have talked to." (Tr. 201-202).

When asked if he performed any craft duties as a Supervisory Craftsman, Mr. Miller said, "Very small. For all intents and purpose I don't perform any" and he did not as a Foreman III with the BR (Tr. 202-203).

As to long range planning with the BR, Mr. Miller stated it was accomplished by,

> "A Attending meetings with the other craft supervisors, other craft foremen III's and our supervisors.
> "Q How do you do it now?
> "A We do the same thing now." (Tr. 203).

e) Mr. Norman Miller, Supervisory Craftsman

Mr. Norman Miller (hereinafter referred to as "N. Miller" to distinguish him from Mr. William R. Miller), was employed in 1960 by the BR as a communication and instrumentation mechanic at Folsom (Tr. 204). He had a four year apprenticeship before becoming a journeyman electrician (Tr. 205). In 1979, Mr. N. Miller became a Foreman II with WAPA (Tr. 204, 205, and 219) and is now a Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 205). Mr. N. Miller is now located at Alberta and has three crews in three different areas, one at Alberta, one at Keswick and one at Tracy (Tr. 205). He has under him communication and instrumentation mechanics, meter and relay mechanics. There are two employees in two of the crews and three in the other, a total of seven (Tr. 205). He has performed an annual performance evaluation as Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 205), but had no official evaluation program while he was a Foreman II with WAPA, "just talked to them once in a while and told them how they were doing or what was expected of them" (Tr. 206) and informally told his supervisor "the people were doing fine or weren't doing fine." (Tr. 206). Mr. N. Miller stated that there had been no change except "now, ... we have paper that we do use and there's, as I understand it, at least once a year we sit down and do it formally." (Tr. 206).

While a journeyman with the BR his supervisor was a Foreman II (Tr. 207) and the Foreman II evaluated him, "The same way, he sat down with me with a form and we went throught it and I signed it and he signed it." (Tr. 207).

As a Foreman II with WAPA, Mr. N. Miller had, and exercised, authority to grant annual and sick leave (Tr. 207) and approved vacation leave (Tr. 208). While a journeyman with the BR, his Foreman II approved leave the same way (Tr. 208). As a Foreman II with WAPA, Mr. N. Miller never had a grievance (Tr. 208). While he was a journeymen with the BR, Mr. N. Miller stated that the Foreman II did participate in informal grievance proceedings (Tr. 208-209). As a Foreman II with WAPA he recommended hiring, "looked at the applications and rated them informally and recommended who I thought was best" (Tr. 210); made the recommendation to his immediate supervisor and does the same thing as a Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 210). Mr. N. Miller has never exercised authority with respect to promotions and did not know whether there had been any change (Tr. 212); and he has never taken disciplinary action although he "felt" he could recommend discipline both as a Foreman II and as a Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 212). Mr. N. Miller had 40 hours introduction to supervision under OPM and later went to a supervisory training seminar for 40 hours (Tr. 213) but the record does not show when he received this training.

Mr. N. Miller stated that he did not "believe" he had any authority "even to recommend" furlough, layoff or recall (Tr. 214). Mr. N. Miller stated that he is now involved in long range planning (Tr. 215) and that, in the same manner, he had been involved in long range planning as a Foreman II (Tr. 215); that he "planned the various jobs and maintenance, ordered equipment and supplies and scheduled." (Tr. 215; 216); that as a Supervisory Craftsman there has been no change (Tr. 216). Mr. N. Miller stated there had been no change in his supervisory duties since he became a Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 214, 215). As a Supervisory Craftsman, Mr. N. Miller performs craft duties about 10 per cent of the time. When asked if there were any difference in the amount of time he spent performing craft duties as a Foreman II with WAPA, Mr. N. Miller replied,

> "A Yes and no. Part of the -- I performed more when I was a foreman II because I only had one meter relay mechanic under me originally and a lot of the work was done by contract by the Bureau of Reclamation C and I crews and I advised their foremen, their C and I foreman as to the work I would like to have them do and I picked up part of it myself but then when they hired an additional six people I did less and less work." (Tr. 217-218).

f) Mr. Lyle Lockwood, Supervisory Craftsman

Mr. Lockwood was initially employed by the BR in 1950 (Tr. 223), became a Foreman III in 1966 (Tr. 223), and had been a Foreman II for some period (Tr. 234). He is a journeyman electrician (Tr. 223). He has been employed by WAPA since its inception and is now Electrical Supervisor (Tr. 223, 224). As a Foreman III at the BR he was involved in long range planning, "I planned our maintenance work at least a year ahead, I had a year's schedule" (Tr. 224). He filled out the work schedule and it was approved by his supervisor (Tr. 224). As a Supervisory Electrician long-range planning has not changed at all, "It's just the same as it was when I was with the Bureau." (Tr. 224). As a Foreman III he did not work with the tools nor does he now work with the tools (Tr. 224-225).

As a Foreman III he evaluated or rated employees and does so now. He stated, "Under the Bureau we had . . . a performance appraisal system and later WAPA put in or has instituted a new system . . ." He explained that under WAPA, "We have a set of duties that are involved with a certain craft. We follow through those duties and counsel him or talk to him about those duties and whether or not he is fulfilling his duties. If not we counsel him as to why and then we do the formal appraisal and that is sent in to my supervisor for approval. . . ." (Tr. 226); he stated that with the BR he did, "The same but the format was a little bit different but as far as evaluations were concerned it was the same." (Tr. 226; 227).

He granted annual and sick leave as a Foreman III with the BR and does so now as a Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 227-228) and there has been no change. With respect to grievances, Mr. Lockwood, stated,

> "A Well, if a person has a problem or whatever he comes to me as his supervisor first and we discuss it. If I can't resolve it, and normally we can, but if I can't resolve it it goes to the shop steward and then, as far as I'm concerned, is when the grievance procedure starts. He goes on up. I'm no longer involved in it. He goes on up to my supervisor.
> "Q Was that the case at the Bureau of Reclamation?
> "A Yes.
> "Q Is that the case now at Western?
> "A Yes.
> "Q Has there been any change in your function since you became a supervisory electrician?
> "A No." (Tr. 228).

Mr. Lockwood testified that he had recommended disciplinary action as a Foreman III with the BR (Tr. 228) and had done so with WAPA (Tr. 229). In each instance, the recommendation was to his supervisor (Tr. 228, 229). Mr. Lockwood said he did not have authority to hire and fire as a Foreman III but could, and did, recommend "from looking at the job applications the person I felt was best qualified." (Tr. 229); that this has not changed (Tr. 229). Mr. Lockwood stated that he had never had occasion to recommend promotions (Tr. 229) but both as Foreman III and as Supervisory Craftsman he has appointed acting foreman (Tr. 229-230). He has recommended that employees be given awards both as Supervisory Craftsman and at the BR and in each instance he made the recommendation to his supervisor (Tr. 230). He had supervisory training as a Foreman III with the BR as did Foremen I's and II's (Tr. 231); that he had had further training with WAPA (Tr. 231). As a Supervisory Craftsman he did object to certain position descriptions; his objections were made to his supervisor and the position descriptions were changed (Tr. 232). He never had "an occasion to at Reclamation" (Tr. 232). Mr. Lockwood said there were no changes in his supervisory duties as a Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 232). Indeed, he further stated that there had been no change in his duties when he went from Foreman II to Foreman III (Tr. 234), the only distinction being that as Foreman II he could, and did on occasion, work with the tools (Tr. 234) but did not as a Foreman III (Tr. 235). Mr. Lockwood testified that as a Foreman II he engaged in the same kind of performance appraisal as he did as a Foreman III (Tr. 235); that Foreman II at the BR interviewed applicants for jobs and made recommendations in regard to selections (Tr. 235-236).

g) Mr. Vincente Abeyta, Supervisory Craftsman

Mr. Abeyta was initially employed by the BR as an apprentice in 1947 (Tr. 239), worked as a journeyman electrician from 1951 until 1979 when he became a Foreman II with WAPA (Tr. 239-241). Mr. Abeyta stated that the Branch Chief and he, as a Supervisory Craftsman, met with the administrative officer and set up standards for an electrician, heavy duty mechanic and then rated employees by that (Tr. 242); that while a Foreman II with WAPA, "We didn't use to do it except -- we just said efficiency rating." (Tr. 242).

Both as a Foreman II and now as a Supervisory Craftsman, Mr. Abeyta approved annual and sick leave (Tr. 242); that there has been no change (Tr. 242). He had supervisory training when he became a Foreman II (Tr. 243). He has not as a Foreman II or Supervisory Craftsman been involved in handling informal grievances (Tr. 244); however, he testified that,

> "A Well, as a steward I was called in to try and resolve a grievance and I went to the first line supervisor which if it was a journeyman, it would be a foreman and most were resolved right there. There were a few that went into a formal grievance and as steward I filled out the form and turned it over to the assistant manager and it left my hands. I was out of it. . . ." (Tr. 250).

As a Foreman II he did not have authority to hire new employees but had authority to recommend which he did only once (Tr. 245), and he has the same authority as Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 245). He has never recommended disciplinary action (Tr. 245) but such recommendation would be made to his supervisor (Tr. 245). He also has not recommended any awards (Tr. 246).

h) Mr. Ronald D. Dockins, Journeyman

Mr. Dockins was hired by the BR as a journeyman lineman in about 1975 (Tr. 267); has been a lineman with WAPA since its inception; and is President and Business Manager of Local 1759, IBEW. When hired, he worked under a Foreman II; when he transferred to Casper, he worked under a Foreman III; and he now works under a Supervisory Craftsman (Tr. 267-268). Mr. Dockins testified that he had observed no change in the duties of the supervisor (Tr. 269). All kept time and attendance records, approved leave, assigned work (Tr. 269-270). He stated, as to assignment of work,

> "A The foreman would line out the work in the morning, regardless Foreman II, Foreman III. There really wasn't that much difference. Foreman II was allowed to work; Foreman III wasn't allowed to do as much work as a Foreman II.
> "The difference in the application or the way they give me duties, they would instruct you on what we had to do everyday at the beginning of the day and you'd go do your job. And I seen no difference in their duties in the transition.
> "Q That is still the way its done, to your knowledge?
> "A Yes." (Tr. 270).

Mr. Dockins said, "Well, the Foreman II was more or less classified as a working foreman" (Tr. 275) and "what they did before they're still doing, the same with the Foreman III. The title changed, it made no difference, really, in work." (Tr. 275).

CONCLUSIONS

Foreman II and Foreman III were supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of Executive Order 11491. The fact that some Foreman II's did not have certain authority, for example, to approve leave, did not mean that they were not supervisors. The Council had made clear that Section 2(c) must be applied in the disjunctive and that, ". . . and individual who possesses the authority to perform a single function described in section 2(c), provided he does so in a manner requiring the use of independent judgment, is a supervisor. . . ." United States Naval Weapons Center, China Lake, California, FLRC No. 72A-11, 1 FLRC 404; A/SLMR No. 297, 3 A/SLMR 459 (1973); see, also, Mare Island Naval Shipyard, Vallejo, California, FLRC No. 72A-12, 1 FLRC 410; A/SLMR No. 298, 3 A/SLMR 464

(1973), and the record is clear, as Mr. Onstad conceded and as the record otherwise shows, that all Foreman II were in charge of crews, assigned and directed work, and participated in planning "to figure out what maintenance would be done. . . ." Nor were they "working foremen" in the usual sense of the term as the record shows that, while Foremen II were permitted to "work with the tools", most Foremen II's did not "work with the tools" at all and, so far as the record shows, those who did, did not spend more than 10 per cent of their duty time in performing craft work. Thus, Foreman II were principally, if not exclusively, supervisors. Accordingly, because they possessed one or more of the characteristics described in Section 2(c) and consistently exercised independent judgment in the performance of their duties, Foremen II were supervisors. Accord, Department of Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, Yuma Projects Office, Yuma, Arizona, A/SLMR No. 1151, 8 A/SLMR 1246 (1978). Of course, Foreman III possessed all of the authority of Foreman II and in some respects broader authority and responsibility and they did not "work with the tools". They too, consistently exercised independent judgment in the performance of their duties and were supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(c) of the Executive Order.

WAPA, effective June 29, 1980, reclassified Foreman II and III as Supervisory Craftsmen. The record is clear that Supervisory Craftsmen are supervisors within the meaning of §3(a)(10) of the Statute. While Supervisory Craftsmen perform all duties they previously performed as Foreman II or Foreman III, the record shows that the range of supervisory responsibility has substantially changed. Thus, crews were directly assigned to each Supervisory Craftsman and each Supervisory Craftsman performs the full range of supervisory functions including: granting of leave, initiating recommendations for awards or for discipline, performance appraisals, recommends hiring, participates fully in long range planning. As Supervisory Craftsmen, they participated, beginning in 1981, in the development of performance standards, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. §4302, and appraised employees assigned to them in the fall of 1981. WAPA has reduced the levels of supervision that previously existed and Supervisory Craftsmen have greater supervisory responsibility than Foremen II's and III's had under the BR. WAPA on March 17, 1982, further unified the duties of Supervisory Craftsmen by adopting a single pay rate for all supervisory wage board positions.

Consequently, the record does show: a) that Supervisory Craftsmen are supervisors within the meaning of §3(a)(10) of the Statute; b) that supervisory duties of Supervisory Craftsmen have been substantially broadened so as to include all supervisory responsibility previously performed by both Foremen II and Foremen III; c) that WAPA's reduction of the levels of supervision has resulted in increased supervisory responsibility of Supervisory Craftsmen; and d) that as Supervisory Craftsmen they not only make performance appraisals, as Foremen II and III had done with the BR, but they participate in the development of performance standards, including the critical elements of the positions under their supervision.

Do the present duties of Supervisory Craftsmen constitute them "supervisors" which were excluded by the Authority from the bargaining unit or are they included in the bargaining unit because they are craft supervisors whose duties are so essentially like the duties of Foreman II and Foreman III that they are, and remain, the class of supervisors which the Authority included in the bargaining unit as Foreman II and Foreman III? For reasons set forth hereinafter, I conclude that Supervisory Craftsmen are included in the bargaining unit as the same class of supervisors which the Authority included as Foreman II and Foreman III and that they are not "supervisors as defined in the Order" which the Authority excluded from the bargaining unit. Moreover, as set forth hereinafter, the Statute expressly authorizes the inclusion of such supervisors in bargaining units, notwithstanding that, except under very narrow exceptions as provided in the Statute, supervisors must be excluded from appropriate bargaining units.

At least as early as 1949, Congress in the Classification Act of 1949 removed "employees in recognized trades or crafts, or other skilled mechanical crafts, or in unskilled, semiskilled, or skilled manual labor occupations . . ." (P.L. 429, Chapter 782, 63 Stat. 954) from the plan for classification of positions and for rates of basic compensation and provided that their "compensation shall be fixed and adjusted from time to time as nearly as is consistent with the public interest in accordance with prevailing rates" (P.L. 429). The Classification Act of 1949 did not, with respect to prevailing wage employees, specifically refer to foremen or supervisors; but Congress did so in 1954 when Paragraph (7), above, was amended as follows:

> "(7) employees in recognized trades or crafts, or other skilled mechanical crafts, or in unskilled, semiskilled, or skilled manual labor occupations, and other employees including foremen and supervisors in positions having trade, craft, or laboring experience and knowledge as the paramount requirement . . . The compensation of such employees shall be fixed and adjusted from time to time as nearly as is consistent with the public interest in accordance with prevailing rates. . . ." (P.L. 763, Chapter 1208, 68 Stat. 1106)

This language, as pertinent, is continued in 5 U.S.C. §5102(c)(7) and, further, is part of the definition of "prevailing rate employee" in 5 U.S.C. §5342(a)(2)(A).

Of course, directly, Congressional authorization to include foremen and supervisors as prevailing rate employees did not treat with their inclusion in bargaining units. Indeed, there was no general program for federal employee labor relations until January 17, 1962, when Executive Order 10988 became effective; nevertheless, the BR, among others, voluntarily bargained, in the case of the BR with IBEW, and prevailing wage, i.e. craft, supervisors were included in bargaining units, as the Assistant Secretary found, in Department of Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, Yuma Projects Office, Yuma, Arizona, A/SLMR No. 1151, 8 A/SLMR 1246 (1978), "since the late 1940's". Executive Order 10988 did not define "supervisor"; permitted any employee to be an officer or representative, except where there was a conflict of interest or to do so would otherwise be incompatible with law or official duties (Sec. 1(b)); provided that supervisor organizations may be recognized as "employee organizations" (Secs. 1, 2); and authorized continuation or renewal of lawful agreements between agencies and organizations entered into prior to January 17, 1962 (Sec. 15).

Executive Order 11491, October 29, 1969, made changes with respect to supervisors, including: prohibition by a supervisor of participation in the management or representation of a labor organization except as provided in Section 24 of the Order (Sec. 1(b)); defined supervisor (Sec. 2(c)); Labor organization defined to exclude management officials or supervisors (Sec. 2(e)); separate intra-management communication and consultation with its supervisors or associations of supervisors provided for (Sec. 7(e)); however, the Order continued the same authorization for continuance or renewal of lawful agreements entered into prior to January 17, 1962 (Sec 24(a)(1)) which was stated, > "Continues 'grandfather' provision of Executive Order 10988. Currently applicable to TVA and certain agreements in Interior and Transportation." (Comparative Analysis, Labor-Management Relations In The Federal Service, Report and Recommendations, Executive Order 11491, October 29, 1969).

Executive Order 10988 had provided that except where required by established practice, prior agreement or special circumstances, no unit shall be established for exclusive recognition which includes any managerial executive or both supervisors and the employees whom they supervise (Sec. 6(a)). Executive Order 11491 permitted the continuation of this exception which was stated was intended,

> ". . . for managerial and supervisory representation by labor organizations in maritime industry which represent officers and crews of vessels. Applicable to MEBA, MMP, NMU, SIU, and UTW." (Comparative Analysis, supra).

The two exceptions of Executive Order 11491 provided as follows:

> "Sec. 24. Savings clauses. (a) This Order does not preclude --

> (1) the renewal or continuation of a lawful agreement between an agency and a representative of its employees entered into before the effective date of Executive Order No. 10988 (January 17, 1962); or
> (2) the renewal, continuation, or initial according of recognition for units of management officials or supervisors represented by labor organizations which historically or traditionally represent the management officials or supervisors in private industry and which hold exclusive recognition for units of such officials or supervisors in any agency on the date of this Order." (E.O. 11491, Section 24(a)(1) and (2)).

Although E.O. 11491 was subsequently amended, Section 24, as set forth above, remained unchanged.

In 1972, Congress enacted P.L. 92-392, entitled "Government Employees - Prevailing Rate System" which extensively revised the Prevailing Rate Program, authorized, as noted above, at least as early as 1949; however, Congress specifically provided that agreements negotiated prior thereto were not to be abrogated, modified or affected. Thus, Subchapter IV, Section 9(b) of P.L. 92-392, provided, in part, as follows:

> (1) abrogate, modify, or otherwise affect in any way the provisions of any contract in effect on the date of enactment of this Act [August 19, 1972] pertaining to the wages, the terms and conditions of employment, and other employment benefits, . . . for Government prevailing rate employees and resulting from negotiations between Government agencies and organizations of Government employees;
> (2) nullify, curtail, or otherwise impair in any way the right of any party to such contract to enter into negotiations after the date of enactment of this Act [August 19, 1972] for the renewal, extension, modification, or improvement of . . . such contract or for the replacement of such contract with a new contract; or
> (3) nullify, change, or otherwise affect in any way after such date of enactment [August 19, 1972] any agreement, arrangement, or understanding > in effect on such date with respect to the various items of subject matter of the negotiations on which any such contract in effect on such date is based or prevent the inclusion of such items of subject matter in connection with the renegotiation of any such contract, on the replacement of such contract with a new contract, after such date." (P.L. 92-392, Subchapter IV, Section 9(b); 5 U.S.C.A. §5343, note).

In 1978, as part of the Civil Service Reform Act, P.L. 94-454, 92 Stat. 1111 et seq., Congress enacted Section 704 which provides, in part, as follows:

> "Sec. 704. (a) Those terms and conditions of employment benefits with respect to Government prevailing rate employees to whom section 9(b) of Public Law 92-392 applies which were the subject of negotiations in accordance with prevailing rates and practices prior to August 19, 1972, shall be negotiated on and after the date of the enactment of this Act in accordance with the provisions of section 9(b) of Public Law 92-392 without regard to any provision of Chapter 71 of title 5, United States Code (as amended by this title), to the extent that any such provision is inconsistent with this paragraph.
> (b) The pay and pay practices relating to employees referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be negotiated in accordance with prevailing rates and pay practices without regard to any provision of --
> > "(A) Chapter 71 of title 5, United States Code (as amended by this title), to the extent that any such provision is inconsistent with this paragraph; . . . ." (P.L. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1218)

The Statute (Title VII, Chapter 71) includes the following provisions which are directly of interest:

§12(b) provides, in part, as follows:

> "(b) . . . nor shall a unit be determined to be appropriate if it includes -

> "(1) except as provided under section 7135(a)(2) of this title, any management official or supervisor;
> . . . ." (5 U.S.C. §7112(b); P.L. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1200).

§35 provides, in part, as follows:

> "(a) Nothing contained in this chapter shall preclude--
> "(1) the renewal or continuation of an exclusive recognition, certification of an exclusive representative, or a lawful agreement between an agency and an exclusive representative of its employees, which is entered into before the effective date of this chapter; or
> (2) the renewal, continuation, or initial according of recognition for units of management officials or supervisors represented by labor organizations which historically or traditionally represent management officials or supervisors in private industry and which hold exclusive recognition for units of such officials or supervisors in any agency on the effective date of this chapter.
> . . . ." (5 U.S.C. §7135(a); P.L. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1215)

From the foregoing, it is plain that "prevailing rate employee" has specifically included since 1954, and apparently by implication and practice since at least 1949, "a foreman and a supervisor, in a position having trade, craft, or laboring experience and knowledge as the paramount requirement" (5 U.S.C. §5342(a)(2)(A); P.L. 763, Chapter 1208, 68 Stat. 1106; P.L. 429, Chapter 782, 63 Stat. 954). Both Executive Order 10988 and Executive Order 11491 specifically authorized the continuation or renewal of agreements between agencies and unions entered into prior to January 17, 1962, the date that Executive Order 10988 became effective; and both Executive Order 10988 and Executive Order 11491 had specifically authorized inclusion of supervisors in appropriate units with employees supervised where required by established practice, prior agreement or special circumstances (E.O. 10988) or "for units of management officials or supervisors represented by labor organizations which historically or traditionally represent the management officials or supervisors in private industry. . . ." (E.O. 11491). Not only are both of these exceptions carried over in §35 of the Statute, but §12(b) of the Statute which provides that a unit shall not be determined to be appropriate if it includes "any management official or supervisor, expressly excepts management official or supervisor as provided under §35(a)(2) of the Statute. As noted above, the Assistant Secretary, in Department of Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, Yuma Projects Office, Yuma, Arizona, supra, with respect to the exception of Section 24 of Executive Order 11491, held, in pertinent part, that,

> ". . . noting particularly the history of representation by the IBEW of the employees at issue in a mixed unit, their coverage under a succession of lawful agreements since the late 1940's, and the fact that historically the IBEW has represented similar employees in private industry, I find that the IBEW's unit herein, containing both supervisory and nonsupervisory employees, continues to be viable pursuant to Section 24 of the Order." (8 A/SLMR at 1248).

If there were any doubt as to Congressional intent concerning negotiation as to Government "prevailing rate employees" it was certainly removed by the enactment of Section 704 of P.L. 95-454 which specifically provided that "The pay and pay practices . . . shall be negotiated in accordance with prevailing rates and pay practices without regard to any provisions of - (A) Chapter 71 of title 5 . . . to the extent that any such provision is inconsistent with this paragraph".

The Authority in the representation proceeding in this case stated, in part, as follows:

> ". . . it appears from the record that, prior to the establishment of DOE and WAPA, and dating back to the 1950's the wages of these employees [Foremen] were determined by negotiation on a prevailing wage basis, that is, by wage survey of identical craft positions within the area of jurisdiction of the respective IBEW locals here involved. This scope of bargaining enabled USBR to compete with private industry in attracting employees with the high degree of competence required for the fulfillment of the agency's mission. . . ." (3 FLRA at 80).

Obviously, from the Authority's discussion, the supervisors in question were prevailing rate foremen or supervisors who, by statutory definition, were foremen or supervisors "having trade, craft, or laboring experience and knowledge as the paramount requirement." Although then designated Foreman II and III (Foreman I are not in dispute), the supervisors included by the Authority in the appropriate unit were prevailing rate supervisors and while now designated Supervisory Craftsmen, Supervisory Craftsmen plainly are prevailing rate supervisors "having trade, craft, or laboring experience and knowledge as the paramount requirement" precisely as were Foreman II and III.

The fact that Supervisory Craftsmen have different duties, which has resulted in many having substantially greater supervisory responsibility than possessed by Foreman II's in particular, has not altered in any manner their status as prevailing rate employees. That they are prevailing rate employees, namely supervisors "having trade, craft, or laboring experience and knowledge as the paramount requirement" is shown, inter alia, by their title; by the fact craft duties performed by Supervisory Craftsmen are journeymen's duties of the craft, "An electrician performs electrician duties"; by the fact that they are wage board employees; and by the fact that they continue to perform all the duties previously performed by Foreman II and Foreman III. And that they are prevailing rate employees is firmly shown by WAPA's determination of March 17, 1982, that "The final rate will be established from wage survey data collected from within utilities in the Western Area" as well as by WAPA's initial determination of two pay increments based on percentages "over highest rate supervised" which, in turn were prevailing rates determined on a prevailing wage basis by wage survey as authorized by statute. Indeed, if Supervisory Craftsmen were not prevailing rate employees, their rates of basic pay would be governed by the General Schedule and WAPA would be without authority to vary from the General Schedule.

Nothing in the Statute precludes the inclusion of supervisors in the bargaining unit pursuant to §35(a) where the exclusive recognition or certification preceded the effective date of the Statute; or for the renewal, continuation, or initial according of recognition for units of management officials or supervisors represented by labor organizations which historically or traditionally represent management officials or supervisors in private industry and which hold exclusive recognition for units of such officials or supervisors in any agency on the effective date of the Statute; however, even if the Statute, i.e. Chapter 71 of P.L. 95-454, did preclude the inclusion of supervisors in the bargaining unit, Congress, by Section 704 of P.L. 95-454, expressly qualified the provisions of Chapter 71 so that, notwithstanding any provision of Chapter 71, terms and conditions of Government prevailing rate employees to whom section 9(b) of Public Law 92-392 applied which were the subject of negotiations in accordance with prevailing rates and practices prior to August 19, 1972, shall be negotiated on and after the date of enactment of this Act [October 13, 1978] in accordance with the provision of section 9(b) of Public Law 92-392.

I conclude that the authority's exclusion of "supervisors as defined in the Order" meant supervisors other than prevailing rate supervisors; and that the Authority, by its inclusion of Foreman I, II and III in the bargaining unit, included all prevailing rate supervisors. Supervisory Craftsmen are craft supervisors, are wage board employees, have "trade, craft, or laboring experience and knowledge as the paramount requirement", are prevailing wage employees, and prior to August 19, 1972, craft supervisors, then designated Foreman I, II and III, were covered by collective bargaining agreements and they were subject to negotiations within the meaning of Section 9(b) of Public Law 92-392. As prevailing wage employees, Supervisory Craftsmen are not excluded as "supervisors as defined in the Order" [now the Statute]; and as prevailing wage employees they are included in the bargaining unit as if they were Foreman II and III since their status as prevailing rate employees, namely foremen or supervisors "having trade, craft, or laboring experience and knowledge as the paramount requirement", is precisely the same as it had been when they were designated Foreman II and Foreman III.

Accordingly, having found that Supervisory Craftsmen, previously designated Foreman II and Foreman III, were included by the Authority in the appropriate bargaining unit and, conversely, that the Authority excluded only non-prevailing rate supervisors, WAPA's refusal to bargain concerning Supervisory Craftsmen violated §§16(a)(5) and (1) of the Statute.

IBEW, but not General Counsel, has requested that, as part of the remedy, "any agreement reached . . . be given retroative effect to April 18, 1980, the date of the initial determination by the Authority of the appropriate bargaining unit." (IBEW Brief pp. 20-21). IBEW did not request that bargaining be reopened until March 30, 1981, and WAPA did not refuse to bargain as to Supervisory Craftsmen until April 13, 1981; but, in any event I deem any requirement that any agreement reached be given retroactive effect to be both unnecessary and inappropriate. As part of the remedy, WAPA will be ordered to negotiate, upon request, concerning conditions of employment of Supervisory Craftsmen and retroactivity of any agreement, under the circumstances of this case, should be resolved through the bargaining process.

Having found that the appropriate unit determined by the Authority included prevailing rate supervisory employees, then designated Foreman I, II and III, and that Supervisory Craftsmen are precisely the same class of prevailing rate supervisors included in the appropriate unit as Foreman II and III, and having found that WAPA violated §§16(a)(5) and (1) of the Statute by its failure and refusal to bargain as to Supervisory Craftsmen, I recommend that the Authority adopt the following:

A union filed an application for review pursuant to § 2422.17(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, seeking to set aside the Regional Director's decision and order on a petition for certification. A second union filed a request for a stay in the same matter contending that compelling reasons exist within the meaning of § 2422.17(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations to support the application for review. The Authority concluded that no compelling reason existed for granting the application. Rather, the application expresses mere disagreement with the Regional Director's findings which were based on the Authority's Rules and Regulations and have not been shown to be clearly erroneous or to have prejudicially affected the rights of any party.

A proposal which seeks to eliminate the requirement that teachers be assigned to remain with their classes during art instruction would directly interfere with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). In eliminating the performance by employees of various assigned duties, the proposal seeks to prescribe the duties employees will perform. (proposal 1)

A proposal which provides for an additional planning period per day for certain employees, directly interferes with management's right to assign work by allocating a specific amount of time for the accomplishment of a specific duty. The proposal is inconsistent with § 7106(a)(2)(B). (proposal 2)

A proposal which prescribes the make-up of a committee appointed by management "to study and make recommendations concerning curriculum, pilot programs, selection of textbooks and teaching materials" is inconsistent with management's right to assign work. The Authority found the committee to be an integral part of the process by which management determines the "means" of performing its work, the task associated with carrying out the functions of the committee involves the assignment of work. By mandating the composition of such committees the proposal effectively requires an assignment of specific duties to particular employees in violation of management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B). (proposal 3)

A committee appointed by management "to study and make recommendations concerning curriculum, pilot programs, selection of textbooks and teaching materials" was an integral part of the process by which management determined the "means" of performing its work under § 7106(b)(1). Such matters are negotiable only at the election of management. Management's option not bargain over a § 7106(b)(1) right is equally applicable to bargaining over a committee concerned with deciding and acting on a § 7106(b)(1) right. Negotiation over the composition of a committee established to facilitate decisionmaking on a § 7106(b)(1) matter is equivalent to bargaining over the matter itself. A proposal which prescribes the make-up of the committee, therefore, concerns management's right under § 7106(b)(1) and is negotiable only at the agency's election. (proposal 3)

A proposal is not sufficiently specific and delimited in form and content to permit a negotiability determination where there is nothing in the proposal or the accompanying record to indicate how, or to what extent the proposal would affect employees' conditions of employment. In the absence of information concerning the intent and operative effect of the proposal, the Authority has no basis for determining whether it is consistent with applicable law and regulation. DIGEST NOTES

The agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (6) when the agency head refused to approve provisions directed by the Federal Service Impasse Panel (Panel) for incorporation into the parties' agreement. The provisions provided for the payment of travel and per diem expenses for union negotiators and were fully consistent with applicable law, rule and regulation and thus within the duty to bargain. The agency head's disapproval constituted a failure or refusal to cooperate in impasse decisions.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

A subordinate activity did not violate the Statute by engaging in the ministerial act of forwarding the FSIP-directed language to higher-level management for agency head review and thereafter failing to incorporate the FSIP-directed language into its collective bargaining agreement subsequent to the determination by the agency head to disapprove the language.

The Authority ordered an agency to approve and comply with a FSIP decision and order directing the incorporation of contract language, providing for the payment of travel and per diem expenses for union negotiators, into the parties' agreement. The provision was to have retroactive effect. The Authority also order the agency to (1) make whole the union for the expenses it incurred in paying the travel and per diem expenses of unit employees attending negotiations, which payments otherwise would have been made by the agency; and (2) reimburse employees who either did not receive payments to which they were entitled or were not compensated fully for such expenses. The payments must be consistent with law and regulations including the Federal Travel Regulations.

DIGEST NOTES

The agency failed to fulfill its obligation to consult with the union pursuant to § 7113(b)(1) prior to issuing its Memorandum expanding its Mix-of-the-Force policy --the policy allowed non-bargaining unit Active Guard/Reserve military personnel to fill certain bargaining unit technicians positions formerly occupied solely by civilian technicians-- and thus, violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5). Section 7113(b)(1) requires an agency to inform a labor organization having national consultation rights with the agency of any substantive changes in conditions of employment proposed by the agency. The agency must provide the labor organization with reasonable time to present its views and recommendations regarding the changes and consider such views and a recommendations before taking final action. The Authority concluded that the agency's memorandum was an implementation of a change in personnel policies in that, position classifications previously reserved to civilian technicians were opened to occupancy by active military personnel. The change affected the working conditions of bargaining unit employees inasmuch as (1) such an expansion materially affected the availability of promotional and career development opportunities for bargaining unit employees eligible for those positions; and (2) the change may result in a decrease in the size of the bargaining unit since bargaining unit positions if filled by military personnel, will become military positions which are excluded from coverage under the Statute by § 7103(a)(2)(B)(ii). The policy announcement constituted a substantive change in personnel policy and since the union had national consultation rights the National Guard Bureau was obligated to comply with the provisions of § 7113(b)(1).

DIGEST NOTES

The complaint contained four separate allegations arising out of a meeting held between two management representatives of the agency and the union's local representative. The Authority adopted the Judge's findings, conclusions, and supporting rationale with respect to all four allegations in the complaint.

The meeting was a formal discussion within the meaning of § 7114(a)(2)(A) as it involved discussion of an actual grievance with the employee grievant and was initiated and conducted by two management representatives. Because the local union representative was placed in the position, without prior notification, of representing himself in his own grievance, and as the agency neither notified the union nor provided an opportunity for it to be represented at the formal discussion, the agency failed to comply with § 7114(a)(2)(A) in violation of § 7116(a)(1) and (8).

The agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1) based on a statement made to a grievant by one of the management representatives during a formal discussion. The basis for the intemperate language directed to grievant was the misdirection by the grievant of his request for an extension to pursue the grievance. The statement was focused on the misdirection of the extension request and the resulting consternation up and down the agency chain of command rather than directed at the grievant's filing or processing the grievance.

The agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (2) based on its reassignment of a grievant to another work location. The record does not support the inference that management's decision to make the reassignment was effected in retaliation for the grievant's zeal in pursuing his grievance.

The impact of the agency's reassignment of a grievant did not create a bargaining obligation. Therefore, the agency's failure to give notice to the union of the reassignment and to afford it an opportunity to request bargaining concerning its impact was not violative of § 7116(a)(1) and (5). Finally, although this allegation of the complaint was alleged by the agency to have been untimely filed under § 7118(a)(4)(A), the amended charge, while filed more than six months after the alleged unilateral change, was not not untimely in that it did not raise a new cause of action.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which determines an activity's office hours is nonnegotiable. Part of the mission of the agency is to provide services to the public, management decisions regarding the particular hours when an office is to be open to the public is mission related. The proposal setting office hours therefore, violates management's right, under § 7106(a)(1), to determine its mission. (proposal 1)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would require the agency to refrain from assigning certain duties during specific office hours. The proposal violates management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B) inasmuch as it requires management to refrain from assigning certain duties (work) to employees during a specified time, it is outside the duty to bargain. (proposal 1

A proposal is negotiable that would require the agency to provide written notice to employees of changes in work procedures The proposal is not inconsistent with the agency's right under § 7106(b)(1) to determine the technology, methods, and means of performing work. Further, because nothing in the proposal can be construed as preventing the agency from making changes and requiring compliance with them, the proposal is not inconsistent with the agency's right to assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) or with the agency's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). Rather, the proposal constitutes a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2). (proposal 2)

A proposal is negotiable that would require the agency to provide adequate training during duty time to employees who will be assigned duties in a speciality area in which they previously had received only limited training. The negative impact of this proposal on management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work is not so significant as to outweigh: (1)the disruption to employees caused by being assigned duties outside the area in which they received intensive training; and (2) the benefit of an opportunity for employees to receive adequate training so that they may perform the new duties satisfactorily. Therefore, the proposal constitutes an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's rights within the meaning of § 7106(b)(3). (proposal 3)

The Authority did not sustain the agency's contention that the union's petition for review should be dismissed for failure to timely serve the head of the agency. The Authority found that while the union initially mailed a copy of its petition for revie to local management and the headquarters of the agency, the union subsequently served a copy of its petition and response on the agency head's designee.

ORDER DENYING APPLICATION FOR REVIEW AND REQUEST FOR STAY

On June 5, 1986, the National Federation of Federal Employees (NFFE) filed a timely application for review, pursuant to section 2422.17(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, seeking to set aside the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Petition for Certification of Representative in the above-named case. NFFE also filed a request for a stay of such Decision and Order on Petition for Certification of Representative. Upon consideration of NFFE's application for review, including all arguments in support thereof, the Authority concludes that no compelling reason exists for granting the application. Rather, the application in essence expresses mere disagreement with the Regional Director's findings which are based on the Authority's Rules and Regulations and have not been shown to be clearly erroneous or to have prejudicially affected the rights of any party.

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2422.17(f)(3) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the application for review and request for a stay of the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Petition for Certification of Representative be, and it hereby is, denied.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of four Union proposals.

II. Union Proposal 1

> Unit members will be permitted to use the period during the instruction of Art for (but not limited to) planning time, parent conferences and any other duties as assigned by the building principal.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal would change the current requirement that teachers remain with their classes during art instruction even though they do not participate in the instruction itself. It argues that the proposal therefore interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

The Union contends that the proposal allows teachers to perform other assigned duties during the time they now spend in accompanying students to art instruction. It relies on American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Joint Council of Food Inspection Locals and Department of Agriculture, Food Safety and Quality Service, Washington, D.C., 9 FLRA 663 (1982) to support its view that Union Proposal 1 is within the duty to bargain.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Union Proposal 1 is distinguishable from the proposal found negotiable in Food Safety and Quality Service which only sought to identify the employee or employees who would be assigned overtime work when such work was deemed necessary by management. This proposal, however, seeks to prescribe duties employees will perform. Specifically, it would eliminate the requirement that teachers be assigned to remain with their classes during art instruction. Thus it is to the same effect as Union Proposals 23-28 found nonnegotiable in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3511 and Veterans Administration Hospital, San Antonio, Texas, 12 FLRA 76 (1983). The Authority found those proposals "would directly interfere with the right to assign work" because they sought to eliminate the performance by employees of various assigned duties. Thus, based on the reasoning expressed in Veterans Administration Hospital, San Antonio Union Proposal 1 is inconsistent with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to assign work.

III. Union Proposal 2

> Librarians and Department heads whose Media Center or Department has a Merit Rating shall be given an additional planning period per day.

A. Position of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 2 would interfere with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. In support the Agency cites National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1263 and Defense Language Institute, Foreign Language Center, Presidio of Monterey, California, 7 FLRA 723 (1982).

The Union argues that the proposal does not interfere with management's right to assign work as it only "requests negotiations over additional time to perform these already assigned tasks."

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Union Proposal 2 is to the same effect as the group of proposals found nonnegotiable in Defense Language Institute. In that case, the Authority held the proposals directly interfered with the management right to assign work "by allocating a specific amount of time for the accomplishment of a specific duty." Union Proposal 2, by providing for an additional period to be devoted to planning, also seeks to allocate a specific amount of time to accomplish certain work. Thus, based on the reasons and case cited in Defense Language Institute it is inconsistent with the management right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

IV. Union Proposal 3

> When the district sets up committees to make recommendations on textbook adoptions, grade cards, parent conference forms, and other items or programs to be implemented in the district, the make-up of the committee shall consist of an equal number of representatives from all departments or organizational levels concerned.

A. Position of the Parties

The Agency describes the committees which are the subject of Union Proposal 3 as groups appointed from time to time by the superintendent to study and make recommendations concerning the adoption of textbooks, grade cards, parent conference forms and other items, programs or materials to be used in the school district. The Agency argues that Union representation on such committees concerns the methods and means of performing work and is therefore negotiable only at the discretion of the Agency under section 7106(b)(1). The Agency contends this proposal also conflicts with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to the extent that it specifies that there be an equal number of representatives from all departments or organizational levels.

The Union contends that the proposal sets out a procedure to be used in appointing members to these committees and thus it is negotiable under section 7106(b)(2).

B. Analysis and Conclusion

As set out above, the Agency describes the committees in Union Proposal 3 as groups periodically appointed by the superintendent responsible for studying and recommending adoption of textbooks, various forms, programs and materials used for teaching students in the district. The Union did not dispute that description. As described, the committees have responsibilities similar to those assigned to the committees or groups addressed by Union Proposals 1 and 8, held nonnegotiable in Panama Canal Federation of Teachers, Local 29 and Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Panama Region, 19 FLRA No. 99 (1985). The committees in the cited case were appointed to study and make recommendations concerning curriculum, pilot programs, selection of textbooks and teaching materials. The Authority found that the work of the committees concerned the "means" by which agency work would be carried out within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. Because the committees in Union Proposal 3 are appointed by the superintendent to study and to recommend on similar matters, their work likewise falls within the scope of section 7106(b)(1).

It is by now well established that a proposal seeking union participation in the deliberative process leading to the exercise of rights reserved to management by section 7106 of the Statute is outside the duty to bargain. See, for example, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1431 and Veterans Administration Medical Center, East Orange, New Jersey, 9 FLRA 998 (1982) and the cases cited there. In VA Medical Center, East Orange, the Authority observed that, "when management establishes formal organization structures to undertake such deliberations as an integral part of its substantive decision-making process, a proposal which would require union participation would have the effect of directly interfering with management's statutory right to make the decisions involved."

As with Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Panama Region, the proposal in this case presents issues slightly different from those before the Authority in VA Medical Center, East Orange: (1) the right with which the committees are concerned falls within the scope of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and may be the subject of bargaining at the Agency's election; (2) the proposal does not expressly seek Union representation on the committee but, rather, is concerned with the committee's composition. Those distinctions were examined in Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Panama Region. The Authority held, in effect, that management's option not to bargain over a section 7106(b)(1) right was equally applicable to bargaining over a committee concerned with deciding and acting on a section 7106(b)(1) right. The Authority also stated in that decision, "where the matter concerned is encompassed within section 7106(b)(1), . . . and the committee involved is established to facilitate decision-making related to that matter, negotiation over composition of the committee is equivalent to bargaining over the matter itself." Consequently, based on the reasons and cases cited in VA Medical Center, East Orange and Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Panama Region, Union Proposal 3 concerns a management right under section 7106(b)(1) and is negotiable only at the Agency's election.

Since these committees are an integral part of the process by which management determines the "means" of performing its work, the tasks associated with carrying out the functions of those committees involve the assignment of work. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2787 and Defense Mapping Agency, 20 FLRA No. 26 (1985) (Provision 3). Consequently, by mandating the composition of such committees this proposal effectively requires an assignment of specific duties to particular employees in violation of management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. See, for example, National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 7 FLRA 235, 240 (1981). Since the proposal directly interferes with the exercise of the management rights discussed, it is not a negotiable "procedure" under section 7106(b)(2).

This case may be compared with the Authority's decision in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 2059 and U. S. Department of Justice, U.S. Attorney's Office, Southern District of New York, New York, New York, 22 FLRA No. 13 (1986). In that case, the committee on which the union sought representation was an "uncertified" safety and health committee, established as a "constructive forum" for the expression of concerns over health and safety matters. Unlike the committees in this case, it was not intended to bypass management in its area of interest nor was it authorized to interject itself into management's deliberative decision-making process. It was therefore concluded that participation by union representatives on the committee did not concern assignment of the agency's work.

> Unit members shall receive 1/2 year's credit for pay purposes. For this purpose 1/2 year > shall be defined as any period of 100 days or more of teaching in this or any other school system.

A. Position of the Parties

The Agency contends that the Authority cannot make a determination on the negotiability of Union Proposal 4 because the proposal is not sufficiently specific and delimited in form and content.

The Union maintains that the proposal is sufficiently specific and that the Authority should find it negotiable.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

While this proposal requires that bargaining unit employees receive 1/2 year credit "for pay purposes" there is nothing in the proposal or the accompanying record to indicate how, or to what extent this 1/2 year credit would affect employee pay. In the absence of information concerning the intent and operative effect of this proposal, we have no basis for determining whether it is consistent with applicable law and regulation. Thus, this proposal is not sufficiently specific and delimited in form and content to permit a determination on its negotiability. See Association of Civilian Technicians, ACT and State of Alabama National Guard, 2 FLRA 314, 317 (1979).

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority, in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by the parties, who have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. The complaint alleges that Respondent Department of the Treasury (Treasury) and Respondent Internal Revenue Service (IRS) violated section 7116(a)(1), (5), (6) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute)[1] by refusing to cooperate in impasse procedures and impasse decisions and by failing to negotiate in good faith with the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU), the exclusive bargaining representative of certain IRS employees.

[1] Section 7116(a)(1), (5), (6) and (8) of the Statute provides:

> § 7116. Unfair labor practices
> (a) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency--
> (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter;
> . . . .

II. Facts

As more fully set forth in the stipulated record, the IRS and NTEU failed to reach agreement on proposals that union negotiators would be granted official time, travel and per diem expenses for national and local mid-term contract negotiations. Once the parties reached impasse, the NTEU submitted these proposals to the Federal Service Impasses Panel (the Panel) for resolution. Respondent IRS never declared the Union's proposals to be nonnegotiable or illegal prior to the proceedings before the Panel. On or about December 24, 1980, the Panel issued a Decision and Order in Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C. and National Treasury Employees Union, Case No. 80 FSIP 68 (1980), which directed Respondent IRS to incorporate into its collective bargaining agreement with NTEU the following provisions approved by the Panel:

> Section 3 - Mid-Term Negotiations
> . . . .
> C. If the parties enter into mid-contract negotiations during the life of this agreement, the following ground rules will apply:
> 1. For nationally implemented changes referred to in Section 2A above:

> (5) to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with a labor organization as required by this chapter;
> (6) to fail or refuse to cooperate in impasse procedures and impasse decisions as required by this chapter;

> c. a number of bargaining unit employees equal to the number of management's representatives shall be given administrative time and paid travel and per diem to attend all mid-term bargaining sessions; provided, however, the union shall be allowed no more than four bargaining unit employees.

> b. a number of bargaining unit employees equal to the number of management's representatives shall be given administrative time and paid travel and per diem to attend all mid-term bargaining sessions; provided, however, the union shall be allowed no more than four bargaining unit employees.

Subsequent to its receipt of the Panel's Order, IRS notified its parent agency, Treasury, of the Panel's action and informed NTEU that it would incorporate the contract provisions directed by the Panel once that language had been approved by Treasury in accordance with agency head review under section 7114(c) of the Statute.[2] On February 24, 1981, Treasury notified IRS and NTEU that the provisions directed by to the Panel's Order had been reviewed and were disapproved in accordance with the Agency's previously stated position that travel and per diem expenses for employee union negotiators were illegal and nonnegotiable under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute.[3] On March 5, 1981, IRS advised NTEU that it would not incorporate the language ordered by the Panel because of the agency head's disapproval of those provisions pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute, and that it would not pay employee travel and per diem requests submitted under the disapproved provisions. Following Respondent Treasury's disapproval of the provisions, Respondent IRS has not incorporated the contract provisions as ordered by the Panel and has not reimbursed employees who have claimed travel and per diem expenses pursuant to the contract provisions directed by the Panel.

III. Positions of the Parties

A. Respondents IRS and Treasury

Respondent Treasury contends that the underlying decision and order of the Panel is unlawful and that a Federal agency cannot be ordered or required to implement an unlawful provision. It further argues that the Panel's requirement that provisions be incorporated into the collective bargaining agreement between IRS and NTEU is subject to review by the agency head under its interpretation of section 7114(c) of the Statute, and that the Panel's decision is properly reviewable by the Authority in an unfair labor practice proceeding such as this case. Respondent Treasury further asserts that the Panel's decision was addressed only to IRS and thus may not serve as a basis for a charge or complaint against Treasury. Additionally, Treasury contends that it has committed no violation of section 7116(a)(1), since it has not interfered with, restrained or coerced employees, and since NTEU represents no Treasury employees but represents only IRS employees. Treasury also contends that section 7116(a)(5) has not been violated since it has no duty to negotiate with NTEU because NTEU has exclusive representative status at IRS and not at Treasury; that it did not violate section 7116(a)(6), since it was not a party to the Panel proceeding; and that it did not violate section 7116(a)(8) because Treasury was never a party in the matters alleged within the instant complaint. Finally, Treasury contends that section 7119(c)(5)(C) of the Statute[4] is not applicable to it since Treasury was never a party to any final action of the Panel.

§ 7119. Negotiation impasses; Federal Service Impasses Panel

. . . .

> (c)(5)(C) Notice of any final action of the Panel under this section shall be promptly served upon the parties, and the action shall be binding on such parties during the term of the agreement, unless the parties agree otherwise.

Respondent IRS contends that the Panel should not have asserted jurisdiction over this matter since it was not conclusively shown that an impasse existed,[5] and since the Authority was concurrently reviewing unfair labor practice cases involving identical subject matter. Assuming that the Panel properly asserted jurisdiction, however, IRS argues that the Authority is empowered to review the Panel's action in this unfair labor practice proceeding and should reverse that action. IRS further raises as a defense the argument that it properly submitted the contract provisions to Treasury under section 7114(c) of the Statute and properly relied on the agency head's determination that those provisions were illegal and nonnegotiable.

B. The General Counsel

The General Counsel contends that Respondent IRS violated section 7116(a)(1), (5), (6) and (8) of the Statute when it failed to comply with the final Order of the Panel and incorporate the language directed by the Panel into its agreement with NTEU. The General Counsel argues that since orders of the Panel are not subject to appeal, any failure to comply with such orders constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (6) of the Statute. The General Counsel argues that IRS also violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by its failure to comply with section 7119(c) (5)(C) of the Statute because, under that section, final action of the Panel is binding on the parties during the term of their negotiated agreement, unless the parties agree otherwise. Finally, the General Counsel argues that IRS violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute because its failure to incorporate the provisions into its negotiated agreement as directed by the Panel constituted a unilateral change in a condition of employment established by the Panel.

The General Counsel alleges that Respondent Treasury violated section 7116(a)(1), (5), (6) and (8) of the Statute when it directed Respondent IRS not to abide by the final

[5] Section 7119(c)(1) provides that the function of the Panel is "to provide assistance in resolving negotiation impasses."

Order of the Panel.[6] The General Counsel argues that Respondent Treasury has utilized section 7114(c) of the Statute to review and disapprove a final decision of the Panel, a right, the General Counsel asserts, Respondent Treasury does not have. Moreover, the General Counsel argues that Respondent Treasury's reasons for failing to approve the subject provisions are inappropriate in that Respondent IRS never challenged the negotiability of the Union's proposals prior to the Panel's ruling. Thus, the General Counsel argues that Respondent Treasury violated the above sections of the Statute when it directed Respondent IRS not to comply with the Panel's Order.

C. The Charging Party

The Charging Party argues essentially the same points raised by the General Counsel with the exception of one argument which the Charging Party is alone in raising: that inasmuch as Panel regulations require Respondent IRS to inform the Panel of its acceptance of the Panel's decision within 30 days, the IRS rejection of the Panel's Order was untimely.[7] The Charging Party requests, as part of the remedy, that IRS be required to accept and process all claims for travel and per diem reimbursement from the effective date of the contract.

IV. Analysis

It is well established that section 7114(c) of the Statute authorizes an agency head to review provisions of a collective bargaining agreement, including those imposed on the parties by the Panel, and to disapprove provisions which the agency head determines are not in accordance with the Statute and other applicable law, rule, or regulation. Interpretation and Guidance, 15 FLRA 564 (1984), aff'd., sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO v. FLRA, 778 F.2d 850 (D.C. Cir. 1985). An agency head does not violate the Statute merely by reviewing and disapproving provisions imposed by the Panel. However, an agency head's decision to disapprove a provision imposed by the Panel is subject to review either through a negotiability appeal or, as here, in an unfair labor practice proceeding and, if the Authority finds that the provision is not contrary to the Statute or other applicable law, rule, or regulation, such agency head disapproval would constitute a failure or refusal "to cooperate in . . . impasse decisions" in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (6) of the Statute. See also U.S. Department of Army, Headquarters, and DARCOM HQ, 17 FLRA 84 (1985), affirmed in relevant part sub nom. National Federation of Federal Employees v. FLRA, 789 F.2d 944 (D.C. Cir. 1986).

[6] The complaint fails to allege that Respondent Treasury failed and refused to negotiate in good faith. This allegation is made only against Respondent IRS.

[7] This issue, however, does not appear to be raised by the General Counsel's complaint.

The negotiability of the Panel-imposed provisions requiring payment of a union official's travel and per diem expenses in this case was premised upon the Authority's earlier conclusion that employees on "official time" under section 7131 of the Statute were entitled to travel expenses and per diem allowances. See Interpretation and Guidance, 2 FLRA 265 (1979). This interpretation was rejected by the Supreme Court in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983). In footnote 17 of its decision, however, the Supreme Court stated that "unions may presumably negotiate such payments in collective bargaining as they do in the private sector." 464 U.S. at 107. The Authority thereafter held in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986), that a proposal requiring the employer to pay the travel and per diem expenses incurred by employees while on official time was within the duty to bargain. The Authority concluded that the payment of such expenses involved a "condition of employment" since representation of employees in matters concerning their employment affects the "working conditions" of employees. The Authority concluded that since determinations concerning whether to make such payments are within the discretionary administrative authority of an agency, the agency was obligated under the Statute to exercise that discretion through negotiation.

The Authority concludes, based on this precedent, that consistent with the scope of our review discussed in Interpretation and Guidance, 15 FLRA 564 (1984), the provisions which the Panel directed IRS and NTEU to incorporate into their agreement herein are fully consistent with applicable law, rule and regulation and thus within the duty to bargain. Therefore, the agency head's action in refusing to approve these provisions was unlawful, and Respondent Treasury thereby violated section 7116(a)(1) and (6) of the Statute.[8]

With respect to Respondent IRS, the Authority has also previously addressed whether a subordinate activity should be found to have violated the Statute when it fails to implement a provision disapproved by an agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute. In Departments of the Army and the Air Force, National Guard Bureau and Montana Air National Guard, 10 FLRA 553 (1982), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Montana Air National Guard v. FLRA, 730 F.2d 577 (9th Cir. 1984), the Authority held that the Montana Air National Guard did not violate the Statute by its ministerial actions in implementing the directives of higher level management even though it found that the National Guard Bureau's action in disapproving a contractual provision had violated section 7114(c)(2) and section 7116(a)(1), (5), and (8) of the Statute. The Authority concludes, based on the above precedent, that Respondent IRS did not violate the Statute by engaging in the ministerial act of forwarding the Panel-directed language to Respondent Treasury for agency head review and thereafter failing to incorporate the Panel-directed language into its collective bargaining agreement subsequent to the determination by Respondent Treasury to disapprove such language.

IRS's contentions that the Panel should not have asserted jurisdiction because the evidence before it did not establish an impasse, and because identical issues were concurrently

[8] In finding a violation of the Statute, we recognize that the Respondent Treasury took what it believed to be a justified position that the matter in issue could not legally be included in the collective bargaining agreement. Our finding is to be compared with other recent decisions which also found violations of the Statute, but which were predicated on refusals to pay travel and per diem expenses pursuant to contractually agreed-upon provisions for such payments. See, for example, Office of the General Counsel, National Labor Relations Board, 22 FLRA No. 25 (1986) and Department of Defense Dependents Schools System, 21 FLRA No. 125 (1986). In view of this finding, it is unnecessary for the Authority to pass upon whether the Department of the before the Authority in unfair labor practice proceedings, merely constitute disagreement with the Panel. The Fact-finder's Report, relied upon by the Panel, found that there was an impasse, that the instant case was distinguishable from those concurrently before the Authority; that the Union's proposal was negotiable, and that there was "good reason to adopt the Union's proposal apart from the Authority's ruling in 2 FLRA [No.] 31." Fact-finder Report at 8.

V. Remedy

To remedy the unfair labor practice conduct, the Authority will order the Respondent Treasury to approve and comply with the Panel's Decision and Order, and to give it retroactive effect. See Interpretation and Guidance, 15 FLRA 564 (1984), affirmed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO v. FLRA, 778 F.2d 850 (D.C. Cir. 1985). Consistent with the Authority's decisions in Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Columbia District, Columbia, South Carolina, 22 FLRA No. 28 (1986) and Office of the General Counsel, National Labor Relations Board, 22 FLRA No. 25 (1986), the Authority will further order the Respondent Treasury to make whole the Charging Party for the expenses it incurred in paying the travel and per diem expenses of those bargaining unit employees who attended mid-term bargaining sessions during the period in issue, which payments otherwise would have been made by the Respondent IRS. Additionally, if there are any bargaining unit employees who either did not receive payments to which they were entitled or were not compensated fully for such expenses, the Respondent Treasury also will be ordered to reimburse them for the travel and per diem expenses they incurred upon their submission of properly documented claims for such payments. In ordering such payments, the Authority notes that by not complying with the Panel's decision, the Respondent Treasury assumed a risk that if its position did not prevail, it would be found to have committed an unfair labor practice and be subject to such a remedy[9]. The payments that are here being ordered must be consistent with law and regulations, including the Federal Travel Regulations.

Treasury's conduct also violated section 7116(a)(5) and (8) of the Statute since such a finding would provide no additional remedy. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District, Kansas City, Missouri, 16 FLRA 456 (1984); National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Headquarters, Washington, D.C., 12 FLRA 480 (1983); Florida National Guard, 9 FLRA 347 (1982), remanded on other grounds sub nom. Florida Department of Military Affairs v. FLRA, No. 82-5901 (11th Cir. Oct. 27, 1983), supp. dec. on remand, 15 FLRA 896 (1984); State of California National Guard, 8 FLRA 54 (1982); remanded on other grounds sub nom. California National Guard v. FLRA, No. 82-7187 (9th Cir. Jan. 7, 1983), supp. dec. on remand, 15 FLRA 479 (1984).

VI. Conclusion

Based on the stipulated record, the analysis of the facts and the precedent cited above, the Authority concludes that the Internal Revenue Service did not violate the Statute as alleged in the complaint and therefore those allegations are dismissed. However, the Authority concludes that the Department of the Treasury's disapproval of a Panel-imposed provision which was not in fact contrary to the Statute or any other applicable law, rule, or regulation constituted a failure or refusal to cooperate in impasse decisions in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (6) of the Statute.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Department of the Treasury shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to comply with the Decision and Order of the Federal Service Impasses Panel issued on December 24, 1980, in Case No. 80 FSIP 68 by failing and refusing to approve the provisions directed by the Panel, which are not contrary to the Statute or other applicable law, rule, or regulation.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to carry out the purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute:

[9] If the Respondent Treasury's position ultimately had been sustained, however, it would not have been found in violation of the Statute. See Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 17 FLRA 302 (1985).

(a) Withdraw and rescind its disapproval of the contractual provisions contained in the Decision and Order of the Federal Service Impasses Panel issued on December 24, 1980, in Case No. 80 FSIP 68, which were to be included in the negotiated agreement of the Internal Revenue Service and the National Treasury Employees Union and notify these two parties of such in writing.

(b) Make the National Treasury Employees Union whole for the costs, if any, incurred in paying travel expenses and per diem allowances to all bargaining unit employees who submit or have submitted appropriate claims for such payments under the terms of the contract provisions which the Federal Service Impasses Panel ordered incorporated into the parties' agreement, for which the employees otherwise would have been reimbursed by the Internal Revenue Service.

(c) Pay travel expenses and per diem allowances consistent with law and regulation, including the Federal Travel Regulations to all bargaining unit employees who submit or have submitted appropriate claims for such payments under the terms of the contract provisions which the Federal Service Impasses Panel ordered incorporated into the parties' agreement, to the extent that such expenses have not been reimbursed by the National Treasury Employees Union.

(d) Provide bargaining unit employees official time while they were engaged in representing the National Treasury Employees Union, the employees' exclusive representative, in collective bargaining negotiations, including necessary travel time as occurred during the employees' regular work hours when they would otherwise have been in a work or paid leave status, and make them whole for any annual leave they may have utilized for this purpose.

(e) Post at all Internal Revenue Service facilities wherein there are employees represented by the National Treasury Employees Union, a copy of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, or his designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that said Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint, insofar as it alleges a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by the Department of the Treasury and insofar as it alleges a violation of section 7116(a)(1), (5), (6) and (8) of the Statute by the Internal Revenue Service be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority, in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by the parties, who have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. Briefs for the Authority's consideration were filed by the Respondent and by the General Counsel.

The complaint alleges that the National Guard Bureau (Respondent) violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by instituting a substantive change in conditions of employment without affording the Charging Party, National Association of Government Employees, SEIU (NAGE), prior notice and a reasonable time to present its views and recommendations regarding the change, pursuant to its previously granted national consultation rights, as required by section 7113 of the Statute.[1] Specifically, by memorandum to all Adjutants General dated June 21, 1985, the Respondent implemented an expansion of its Mix-of-the-Force policy to allow non-bargaining unit Active Guard/Reserve military personnel to fill certain bargaining unit technicians positions formerly occupied solely by civilian technicians without prior notice to NAGE.

> § 7113. National consultation rights
> (a)(1) If, in connection with any agency, no labor organization has been accorded exclusive recognition on an agency basis, a labor organization which is the exclusive representative of a substantial number of the employees of the agency, > as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Authority, shall be granted national consultation rights by the agency. National consultation rights shall terminate when the labor organization no longer meets the criteria prescribed by the Authority. Any issue relating to any labor organization's eligibility for, or continuation of, national consultation rights shall be subject to determination by the Authority.

> (b)(1) Any labor organization having national consultation rights in connection with any agency under subsection (a) of this section shall--

under section 7113 of the Statute. By memorandum to the Adjutants General of all States, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam and the District of Columbia dated June 21, 1985, the National Guard Bureau implemented an expansion of its Mix-of-the-Force policy. Paragraph 5(b) of the policy announcement listed twelve (12) job classifications which could now be filled by Active Guard/Reserve military personnel. The twelve (12) job classifications were bargaining unit positions which had previously been reserved exclusively for civilian technicians. At the time of the policy change, approximately 136 civilian technicians, located in nineteen different States, were assigned to the twelve job classifications.

III. The Issue

The issue in this case is whether the National Guard Bureau violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by issuing, without consulting with NAGE under section 7113 of Statute, the June 21, 1985 Memorandum which authorized local State management to fill certain bargaining unit positions with Active Guard/Reserve military personnel.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent's position is that it was not required to consult with NAGE under section 7113 of the Statute because the June 21, 1985 policy letter had no immediate or foreseeable impact on bargaining unit employees. The Respondent argues that paragraph 5(b) of the policy letter merely provides that a vacant position in the twelve (12) listed classifications may be filled by an Active Guard/Reserve or a civilian technician. Thus, the Respondent argues, in any given State, there will be little if any impact on bargaining unit employees, in view of the limited number of positions in each State and the traditionally low or non-existent attrition in the affected positions.

The General Counsel argues that the Respondent's decision to expand its Mix-of-the-Force policy by providing military personnel with the opportunity to fill positions formerly occupied solely by civilian technicians constituted a substantive change in conditions of employment of certain bargaining unit employees. The General Counsel points out that the subject memorandum explicitly stated that the expansion of the Mix-of-the-Force program was intended to afford greater upward mobility and career progression for Active Guard/Reserve officers. This policy change currently impacts upon bargaining unit employees eligible for the affected positions and foreseeably, will limit career progression for certain unit employees. Thus, the General Counsel argues that the Respondent has instituted a substantive change in conditions of employment of certain bargaining unit employees without fulfilling its obligations under section 7113 of the Statute.

V. Analysis

This case involves the application of section 7113 of the Statute. Section 7113(b)(1) of the Statute requires an agency to inform a labor organization having national consultation rights with the agency of any substantive changes in conditions of employment proposed by the agency and to provide the labor organization with reasonable time to present its views and recommendations regarding the changes and to consider such views and recommendations before taking final action.

In order for the consultation obligation set forth in section 7113(b)(1) of the Statute to apply, there must be a substantive change in conditions of employment. See General Services Administration, 6 FLRA 430 (1981) and National Guard Bureau, 18 FLRA No. 62 (1985). Section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute defines conditions of employment as "personnel policies, practices, and matters, whether established by rule, regulation or otherwise, affecting working conditions . . . ."

In terms of this case, it is clear that the Respondent's June 21, 1985 Memorandum, which expanded the Mix-of-the-Force policy to twelve (12) bargaining unit position classifications, was an implementation of a change in personnel policies in that classifications previously reserved to civilian technicians were opened to occupancy by active military personnel. It is also apparent that this personnel policy change affects the working conditions of bargaining unit employees. The Respondent's stated primary objective in instituting the expansion of the Mix-of-the-Force policy was to provide more high level grades and positions for Active Guard/Reserve military personnel. Such an expansion materially affects the availability of promotional and career development opportunities for bargaining unit employees eligible for those positions. Further, the change may result in a decrease in the size of the bargaining unit since bargaining unit positions if filled by military personnel will become military positions which are excluded from coverage under the Statute by section 7103(a)(2)(B)(ii) of the Statute.

Relying on the rationale set forth above, we find no merit to the Respondent's argument that the change had minimal affect on the working conditions of bargaining unit employees. Accordingly, the Authority concludes that the June 21, 1985 policy announcement issued by the National Guard Bureau clearly constituted a substantive change in personnel policy.

Since NAGE had national consultation rights, the National Guard Bureau was obligated to comply with the provisions of section 7113(b)(1) of the Statute prior to finalizing the changes. Thus, the National Guard Bureau was required to notify NAGE and provide NAGE with the opportunity to present its views and recommendations and to consider such views or recommendations before it issued the June 21, 1985 Memorandum. This was not done. Therefore, the Authority concludes that the National Guard Bureau failed to comply with its obligation to consult under 7113(b)(1) of the Statute. See National Guard Bureau, 18 FLRA No. 62 (1985).

VI. Conclusion

The Authority has considered all the facts and circumstances of this case, including the positions of the parties. The Authority concludes that the Respondent failed to fulfill its obligation to consult with NAGE pursuant to section 7113(b)(1) of the Statute prior to issuing its June 21, 1985 Memorandum expanding its Mix-of-the-Force policy and thus, the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice complaint is before the Authority based on exceptions filed both by the General Counsel to certain aspects of the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge and by the Respondent to other aspects of the attached Decision. The complaint contained four separate allegations arising out of a meeting held on May 2, 1984, between two agents of the Respondent and the Charging Party's (the Union's) local representative. The complaint alleged that the meeting was a formal discussion within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and that the Respondent's failure to provide the Union with an opportunity to be represented constituted a failure to comply with that section in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. The complaint also alleged that a statement made to the Union's local representative at the meeting constituted interference with his protected rights in violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute and that the decision to reassign the local representative was based on his having engaged in protected activity in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute. Finally, the complaint alleged that the reassignment of the local representative constituted a unilateral change in conditions of employment in which the exclusive representative was not notified and afforded an opportunity to bargain concerning its impact and implementation in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

II. Background

As more fully set forth by the Judge, Howard Wright is the unit vice-president of the Charging Party and its only representative at the Respondent's facility. On November 6, 1983, Wright complained to an agent of the Respondent regarding what he viewed to be inequitable assignment of details. His complaint eventually resulted in a formal grievance filed on his behalf by the President of the Charging Party, who is located at March Air Force Base. His grievance was denied at the second step by Fire Chief Smith in a letter dated April 9, 1984. Wright then requested an extension of time in which to file his grievance at the third step in a letter incorrectly directed to the Wing Commander. As a result of the misdirection, Fire Chief Smith was then contacted by the Base Commander who told him that the Wing Commander was upset because of the misdirection of Wright's extension request. The Chief of Labor and Employee Relations also called Smith and said he had been called by the Base Commander about the misdirected request. He related that they had a problem with Wright not following the contract requirements. On May 2, 1984, Wright was told to report to Deputy Fire Chief Turner's office. There is nothing in the record to indicate that he was told why he should report. When he arrived, Fire Chief Smith was also there. A statement, alleged to be coercive, was made to Wright by Smith, as set forth in the Judge's Decision, which the Judge found to be in reference to the misdirected request for a grievance extension. Wright was then asked how his grievance could be resolved. A discussion of the grievance and its resolution ensued. Wright was ultimately reassigned to Fire Station 2 based on, among other things, his need to get certain training, which was only offered there. The reassignment was made permanent at a later date.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge concluded, with respect to the first allegation of the complaint, that the May 2, 1984 meeting constituted a formal discussion within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute at which the Respondent failed to provide the exclusive representative an opportunity to be represented thereby failing to comply with that section in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. In response to the Respondent's contention that the meeting was not formal, the Judge noted that it involved the discussion and/or resolution of a grievance, the employee was called to the office by management, the meeting was conducted by two supervisors of the Respondent, one of whom was not merely a first level supervisor, and the meeting was not impromptu or casual. In answer to the question of whether the Union was, in fact, represented by Wright, given his status as an officer of the Union, the Judge noted that Wright was the grievant in this case and should not "be compelled to wear two hats at the same time so as to permit management to avoid its obligation under section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute." Therefore, he concluded that the Union did not receive notification of the meeting in which Wright's grievance was discussed.

With respect to the allegation that the statement made to Wright at the May 2, 1984 meeting was coercive in nature, the Judge found that he was not persuaded that the statement constituted interference with Wright's protected activity. The Judge noted that the statement was specifically related to the misdirected extension request that caused problems within the management chain, and not to Wright's processing of the grievance itself. The Judge did not view the remarks, in these circumstances, as reasonably tending to coerce or intimidate Wright. Therefore, he concluded that the statement was not violative of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

The Judge also was not persuaded that a prima facie case of discrimination had been proven regarding the third allegation of the complaint. Thus, the Judge found that there was no basis in the record testimony to establish that Wright's reassignment was in any way intended to thwart the processing of the grievance by Wright. Rather, the Judge noted, a sufficient basis did exist for management's action, particularly Wright's need for certain training, which in his view dispelled any suspicion caused by the timing of the reassignment. Therefore, he concluded that the reassignment of Wright was not discriminatory and thus was not violative of section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute.

With respect to the final allegation of the complaint, that Wright's reassignment and ultimate transfer to Fire Station 2 constituted a unilateral change in conditions of employment in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, the Judge first discussed the Respondent's contention that this allegation was untimely filed under section 7118(a)(4)(A) of the Statute. He concluded that the amended charge, which was filed more than six months after the alleged unilateral change, was not untimely in that it did not raise a new cause of action. Turning to the merits of the unfair labor practice allegation, the Judge concluded that the reassignment did not give rise to a duty to bargain. Therefore, the Judge dismissed this aspect of the complaint.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent excepted only to the Judge's conclusion regarding the first allegation of the complaint, contending that the meeting was not a formal discussion. Thus, the Respondent argued that the meeting was not formal in nature and that even if the meeting was a formal discussion, the Union was provided with an opportunity to be represented because its vice-president was notified and attended the meeting. The General Counsel, in opposing the Respondent's exceptions, notes that Wright had no idea what the meeting would be about at the time he was summoned. Moreover, the General Counsel argues in support of the Judge's conclusion that a union official would not necessarily have the interests of all unit employees in mind when the meeting involved his own personal grievance.

The General Counsel excepted to the Judge's dismissal of the unfair labor practice allegations concerning the statement made to Wright at the May 2, 1984 meeting and Wright's alleged discriminatory reassignment. The General Counsel contends that the Judge should have concluded that the statement made to Wright would reasonably have caused him to draw a coercive inference. The General Counsel also contends that a prima facie case of discrimination had been proven with respect to the reassignment. Thus, in the view of the General Counsel, given the timing of the reassignment, and the inference that should have been drawn regarding Smith's statement to Wright, a discriminatory basis for the reassignment had been established.

In its opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions, the Respondent noted that Wright was not an average employee. He was the Union vice-president, and he should have reasonably perceived that the statement made to him by Smith related to his misdirection of the extension request and not to his having engaged in protected activity. The Respondent also contends with respect to the reassignment, that its purpose was to provide Wright with needed training and to put him where he would be subject to less details in response to his grievance.

Neither party filed exceptions with respect to the Judge's dismissal of the final allegation of the unfair labor practice complaint.

V. Analysis

The Authority adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and supporting rationale with respect to all four of the allegations set forth in the unfair labor practice complaint. Thus, the Authority concludes, in agreement with the Judge, that the May 2, 1984 meeting was a formal discussion within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute inasmuch as it involved the discussion of an actual grievance with the employee grievant and was initiated and conducted by agents of the Respondent. With respect to the Respondent's contentions that the notification and attendance of Wright, a Union officer, at the meeting satisfied the requirements of the Statute that the Union be provided with an opportunity to be represented, the Authority notes that neither Wright nor the President of the Union, who filed the grievance on Wright's behalf, was informed of the purpose of the meeting prior to Wright's arrival at the meeting. Once he arrived and management began discussing resolution of the grievance, Wright was placed in the position of representing himself in his own grievance. Therefore, we conclude, in agreement with the Judge, and in the unique circumstances of this case, that the rationale contained in Veterans Administration, Veterans Administration Medical Center, Muskogee, Oklahoma, 19 FLRA No. 122 (1985) is distinguishable and, therefore, the Union was neither notified nor provided with an opportunity to be represented at this formal discussion concerning Wright's grievance by the Respondent. Accordingly, the Respondent failed to comply with section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8).

The Authority also adopts the Judge's conclusions, and supporting rationale, that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute based on the statement made to Wright at the May 2, 1984 meeting; nor did it violate section 7116(a)(1) and (2) based on its reassignment of Wright. Thus, the Judge applied appropriate case law to his conclusions and the General Counsel's exceptions constitute mere disagreement with his factual analysis. We find no basis for reversing these conclusions.

Finally, with regard to the final allegation of the unfair labor practice complaint, no exceptions were filed to the Judge's conclusion that the impact of the Respondent's reassignment of Wright did not create a bargaining obligation. We agree with the Judge and conclude that the Respondent's failure to give notice to the Union of the reassignment and afford it an opportunity to request bargaining concerning its impact was not violative of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms these rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommended Order. We therefore conclude that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute when it failed to afford the Union an opportunity to be represented at a formal discussion conducted on May 2, 1984, thereby failing to comply with section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. We also conclude that the General Counsel did not establish that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (2) and (5) of the Statute with respect to other conduct related to the May 2, 1984 meeting. Accordingly, these aspects of the complaint shall be dismissed.

ORDER

Statement of the Case

A hearing in the above-entitled case was held before the undersigned on April 18, 1985 at Los Angeles, California. The Complaint and Notice of Hearing was issued on January 11, 1985 by the Regional Director for the Federal Labor Relations Authority, Los Angeles, California.

This case arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. 7101, et seq. (herein called the Statute). It is based on a first amended charge filed on December 31, 1984 by American Federation of Government Employees, Interdepartmental Local 3854, AFL-CIO (herein called the Union) against Department of the Air Force, 63rd Civil Engineers Squadron, Norton Air Force Base, California (herein called Respondent).

The Complaint alleged, in substance, that (a) on or about May 2, 1984 Respondent, via a management official, conducted a meeting with a unit employee concerning the latter's grievance, without affording the Union, the exclusive representative of Respondent's employees, an opportunity to be present;[1] (b) on or about September 13, 1984 Respondent, via a management official, unilaterally changed working conditions of a unit employee by reassigning said employee to Fire Station 2 without first notifying the Union and affording it an opportunity to negotiate re the implementation of the change and its impact on unit employees; (c) on or about September 13, 1984 Respondent permanently reassigned Howard Wright to Station 2 because he engaged in protected union activity on behalf of the Union; (d) on or about May 2, 1984 Respondent, via a management official, made statements to a unit employee to the effect that he would be disciplined or subject to reprisal because he engaged in protected union activity - all in violation of Section 7116(a)(1), (2), (5) and (8) of the Statute.

Respondent's Answer dated January 23, 1985 denied the aforesaid allegations as well as the commission of any unfair labor practices.

All parties were represented at the hearing. Each was afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, briefs were filed which have been duly considered.[2]

Upon the entire record herein, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings of Fact

1. At all times material herein the Union has been, and is now, the exclusive representative of all civilian employees of the Fire Protection Branch, 63rd Civil Engineers Squadron of Respondent with specified exclusions from said unit.

[1] It is alleged that by this conduct Respondent refused to comply with 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute in that the exclusive representative was not afforded an opportunity to be present at said meeting which constituted a formal discussion.

[2] Subsequent to the hearing several motions were filed with the undersigned. Respondent moved for the consideration by the Administrative Law Judge of additional citations of cases decided by the Authority. The Charging Party moved for the consideration by the Administrative Law Judge of two provisions of the negotiated agreement between Respondent and the Union. No objection having been interposed by either party, the motions are granted. The cited matters have been considered by the undersigned.

2. Both the Union and Respondent are parties to a written collective bargaining agreement entered into in January 18, 1982.[3] The said agreement provides, inter alia, as follows:

> Article 19
> The Employer and Union agree that any discussion or meeting between stewards and supervisors shall generally be with supervisors up to and including the second-level supervisor. Discussions or meetings with the supervisors above the second-level (or management officials) will normally be restricted to officers of the Union. Officers may be accompanied by the appropriate steward at such meeting if determined necessary.
> The employer will notify the steward seven (7) days prior to reassignment to another organization.

3. Since 1974 Howard Wright has been employed by Respondent as a firefighter. He was made steward of the Union in 1981, and on February 15, 1983 Wright was designated as unit vice-president for the Union.

4. Until 1984, and for about six years, Wright worked at Fire Station #1 where he was assigned to the primary rescue crew which was responsible for protecting life and property. As a firefighter in that unit Wright was required to know all rescue procedures, and he underwent continuous training in structural and aircraft emergencies. In order to obtain a layout of buildings he was required to pre-fire plan buildings, to learn where chemicals were stored and what hazards existed therein. Wright also received medical training at that station. He was required to maintain equipment, clean the station and cut the grass.

5. In his capacity as union representative, Wright filed grievances for employees as well as unfair labor practice charges. He became involved in membership drives and negotiations on implementing the Air

[3] Although the agreement was entered into by AFGE, Local 1953, AFL-CIO, the Union herein, which succeeded to Local 1953 as the representative of the unit employees, is admittedly bound by its terms.

Force Regulations. Wright was the only representative at Norton Air Force Base for the local union.[4]

6. On November 6, 1983 Wright spoke to Chief Arnold, a management official, and complained that details of employees were not being distributed or assigned in an equal manner.

7. A series of communications between the Union and Respondent ensued as to whether Wright's complaint was in fact a grievance and properly brought to management's attention. The Union felt that Wright had "grieved" about the inequity of detail assignment, and that Respondent was avoiding its obligation to negotiate the matter. Respondent did not deem the oral complaint or subsequent correspondence to constitute a grievance as required under the collective bargaining agreement.[5]

8. In a letter dated January 27, 1984 the Union filed a grievance with Respondent concerning the allegation that details were being assigned in an inequitable manner.

9. A reply letter dated February 27, 1984[6] was written by Commander George W. Hillyer III to Union President Callaway. It was stated therein that management attempted to assign details in an equitable manner; that Respondent could not take Wright off all details and extra duties as he requested; that it could not expunge the records of any action taken against him by chiefs Arnold or Smith; that disciplinary action would not be taken against the management officials.

10. In an attempt to resolve the grievance Wright met with Smith on April 4, in accord with Step II of the grievance procedure. Thereafter, by letter dated April 9, Smith denied Wright's grievance. The Fire Chief termed this his final decision, and he deemed the matter to be resolved.

11. By letter dated April 22, addressed to the Wing Commander and hand delivered, Wright requested 10 days extension to move his grievance to the next step of the grievance procedure.

[4] The President of the Union, Del Mar Callaway, is located at March Air Force Base, near Edgemont, California.

[5] Section 10 of the collective bargaining agreement is entitled GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE (Resp. Exhibit 1). It provides for the submission of a grievance by a concerned employee to the first-level supervisor either orally or in writing as Step 1. The grievance must be submitted within 15 days of the incident or the date on which the employee or Union became aware thereof.

12. Record facts show that shortly thereafter the Base Commander called Smith re the extension request made by Wright. The Base Commander was disturbed because the request had mistakenly been addressed to the Wing Commander, and he told Smith that the Wing Commander was upset because of its misdirection. Further, Donald Larsen, Chief of Labor and Employee Management Relations for Respondent, testified that the Base Commander also called him and stated that the Wing Commander was upset due to the misdirected request. Larsen then phoned Smith and related the fact that the extension request was sent to the Wing Commander in error, and he said they had a problem with Wright not following the requirements of the contract.

13. On May 2 Wright called Larsen to ascertain whether his extension request had been granted. He was told it was rejected. Later that morning Wright was told to report to Deputy Fire Chief Turner's office. He did so and was informed Smith wanted to speak with him. A meeting then took place in Smith's office which was attended by Turner, Wright and Fire Chief Smith.

14. At the outset of the meeting on May 2 Smith told Wright he didn't appreciate the latter calling him a liar. The employee denied doing so. Smith then referred to the request for a grievance extension made by Wright; that how the Wing Commander "chewed out" the Base Commander who "chewed out" Larsen, and that the latter "chewed out" Smith. The Fire Chief then stated that Wright was at the bottom of the ladder and if he's going to "stir shit", plan on getting some on himself.[7/]

Smith asked Wright what he could do to resolve the grievance. The employee replied that there should be an equal distribution of details. The Fire Chief then inquired as to the vehicles Wright was trained to drive at Station 2 and whether he was trained on P2D and P-13. The employee acknowledged that both were on his license. When asked as to P-15, Wright replied that such vehicle was not on his license. Smith said he would be sending Wright to Fire Station 2 for P-15 training and have it put on his license. The employee did not respond. Then Smith asked Wright how much

[7/] Smith admits to making the statement that if Wright "stirred up shit" some would get on that employee. He testified that this referred to Wright's misdirecting correspondence and sending it to the wrong people; that there was no intent to stop the employee from processing his grievance. Wright's testimony confirms the fact that Smith's comment re "stirring up shit" was in reference to the misdirected request for grievance extension.

notice must be given before transferring the latter to Station 2, and the employee said "two weeks."[8]

15. Turner sent a memo dated May 3 to Assistant Chief Arnold which recited that effective May 13 Wright would be assigned to Fire Station 2 for duties.

16. Wright reported to Fire Station 2 on May 13. He worked a few days but was involved in a motorcycle accident on May 18. After being off for several months due to the accident, Wright was released for work. Upon directions from Smith, the employee reported to Station 1 on August 20 where he worked for several days as a driver on the primary rescue crew, his usual position. Wright reported to Station 2 on August 26 as directed by Arnold. On September 13 Sgt. Ebert informed Wright that after the latter completes his P-15 training he would be permanently assigned to Station 2 as primary driver on that vehicle. The transfer was made permanent on September 13.

17. Both parties stipulated that Respondent did not notify the Union's president, Del Mar Callaway, of the permanent assignment of Wright to Fire Station 2 on September 13.

18. By letter dated September 17 the Union requested that Respondent meet and bargain re the change in Wright's condition of employment, i.e. the transfer from Fire Station 1 to Fire Station 2.

19. In a reply letter dated September 21 Respondent notified the Union that Wright's transfer was not considered a change in condition of employment since he still performed duties of a GS-081-05 Fire Fighter. Further, it was stated the transfer was effected on May 13 as an employer right, and that the transfer did not affect Wright's representational duties.

20. Record facts show both fire stations are located about three-fourths of a mile from each other. Employees are rotated between stations on a daily basis, although only about six permanent transfers are made per year. Of the 19 bargaining unit employees there are more located at Station 2. The rescue mission at Station 1 requires that the employees be skilled in various aspects of fire service and a self-development program was in effect to that end. More knowledge of aircraft is required of employees at Station 2.

[8] There is a disparity between the testimonies of Wright and Smith in regard to whether certain other statements were made at this May 2 meeting. Thus, Smith testified that all participants, including Wright, agreed to the transfer of the employee to Station 2; that he asked Wright how the transfer suited him and the employee stated "it would be fine." Wright denies that he accepted the transfer. Turner, who was present at the meeting, did not testify. The version as recited by Wright is credited. Apart from the fact that Turner did not testify at the hearing, Smith's testimony reflects that Turner made the decision and that Wright did not seek or request a transfer. Moreover, Smith's recollection, as he acknowledged, was somewhat deficient.

21. There are about 12-13 vehicles in the fleet at the fire stations and two shifts are in operation thereat. The rescue truck (P-10) has three people per shift assigned thereto. The P-15 is a million dollar fire truck, which is big and bulky, and is strictly a crash-rescue vehicle. All drivers are required to be qualified on all vehicles. Wright was the only driver not qualified to drive the P-15. Inspections in regard to proficiency are made by outside agency personnel on a routine basis.

22. Fire Station 1 acts as a delivery service for the fire department since it is on the main base and has access to most areas needing attention. Fire Station 2 is a more restricted area. It is on the flight line and the noise level is quite high. The record indicates Wright could come and go while at Station 1 with relative ease so as to visit the base and expand his knowledge of what happened thereat. At Station 2 he was quite confined although it appears he could leave if official time was requested.[9] On at least two days of each week, Monday and Wednesday, Station 1 employees come over to Station 2 for training. All of the fire station employees eat meals at the same location.

Conclusions

The principal issues for determination herein are as follows:

1. Whether Respondent conducted a formal discussion on May 2, 1984 and failed to provide the Union with an opportunity to by represented thereat - all in violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

2. Whether statements made by Respondent's representative to Wright on May 2 constituted a violation of Section 7116(a) of the Statute.

3. Whether Respondent transferred or reassigned Wright from Station 1 to Station 2 because of his protected activity in violation of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute.

[9] Wright was not denied official time to represent unit employees. However, Wright testified he could not communicate with employees who did not have clearance to visit Station 2; that he was therefore unaware of a campaign by a rival union to take over the units represented by the Union herein.

> 4(a). Whether the allegation of a violation of 7116(a)(5), based on a unilateral change in Wright's employment conditions, due to Respondent's transferring him from Station 1 to 2, was untimely under Section 7118(a)(4) of the Statute.
> (b). If not untimely, whether the transfer or reassignment of Wright was a unilateral change effected without notifying the Union and affording it an opportunity to bargain thereon - all in violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

(1) Respondent takes the position that its meeting with Howard Wright on May 2 was not "formal" within the meaning of Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. It contends that said discussion was an informal attempt to discuss resolution of a grievance already denied.

The aforesaid section of the Statute provides for representation by an exclusive representative of unit employees at any formal discussion concerning any grievance or any personnel policy or practices or other general condition of employment. The obvious purport of the term "formal" is to preclude requiring union representation at casual meetings or discussions. In the case at bar the employee was called to the office by management, the discussion was held with two of the chief supervisors of Respondent, and it was admittedly for the purpose of discussing and/or resolving the employee's grievance. Thus, as the record reflects, Chief Smith initiated the discussion by asking Wright what could be done to resolve the grievance. Further, the subsequent remarks centered around the manner in which the grievance extension had been filed.

It seems quite clear that discussions which center around a grievance already filed, which are initiated by management, are "formal" within the aforesaid statutory language. While distinguishing such provision from 7114(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, the Authority has recognized that discussions re a grievance, which has been filed under the negotiated grievance procedure, comes within the purview of 7114(a)(2)(A). In such instances the discussions are deemed formal in nature and mandate that an agency provide for union representation thereat. See Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 18 FLRA No. 7; Office of Program Operations, Field Operations, Social Security Administration, San Francisco Region. 10 FLRA No. 36.

In asserting that no formal discussion occurred on May 2, Respondent lays stress upon the Authority's decision in Department of the Air Force, Ogden Air Logistics Center, Hill Air Force Base, Utah, 17 FLRA No. 124. Although adhering to the standards for determining when a union's rights attach under 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute, the Authority held in the cited case that a meeting with an employee was not "formal" as contemplated by the statutory language. It emphasized the fact that the meeting with the employee concerning his grievance was held with a first-level supervisor, with no other management officials present; that the meeting was called informally and not scheduled in advance.

There are, however, notable distinctions between the facts present herein and those involved in the cited case. Firstly, the meeting with Wright was held with two management officials: the Base Fire Chief and the Deputy Chief. Thus the discussion was not one merely with a first-level supervisor. Moreover, the discussion concerning Wright's grievance was not called informally. Record facts show it was pre-arranged and not an impromptu or casual meeting.[10] Thus, Smith testified as follows in response to a query as to what transpired thereat:

> "Well, primarily I wanted to talk to Howard about a particular grievance that's been going on for some time. I wanted to find out what we had to do to resolve it to everyone's satisfaction so that we could get about other things, basically.
> "Howard's problem was with the details. Chief Turner had another problem. In between the two we made a basic resolution that Mr. Wright, to get out from under the pressure of the details, go to Station 2. . . ." (Tr. 108, 109) (Emphasis supplied).

The foregoing testimony, in addition to the content and manner of the discussion, convinces me that the discussion re Wright's grievance is distinguishable, at least, from the Ogden Air Logistics Center, Hill Air Force Base, Utah case, supra. Further, that the discussion which the management officials had with Wright concerning his grievance on May 2 was formal within the meaning of 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute.

In view of certain recent decisions by the Authority, consideration has been given by the undersigned as to whether the Union was in fact represented at the May 2 discussion re Wright's grievance. Thus, the Authority has held that it is not always necessary for an agency to notify union representatives in advance of a formal discussion. It is only necessary that an exclusive representative "be given the opportunity to be present." Accordingly, if union representatives do in fact attend such discussions, no inquiry will be made as to how they were notified or happened to be in attendance. No notice need be given to a union qua union. Where, in such instances, a shop steward or vice-president of a union attended such discussions, no violation existed even though notice was not sent to the union itself. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, Miami, Florida, 19 FLRA No. 126; Veterans Administration, Veterans Administration Medical Center, Muskogee, Oklahoma.

[10] Note is taken of the decision by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, No. 84-1493, October 11, 1985 (renewing 15 FLRA No. 87). The Court stated therein that lack of notice and formal agenda, as relied upon by the Authority, do not always correlate with spontaneity and thus mere absence of notice or an agenda will not necessarily indicate that a meeting is not "formal."

Despite the fact, however, that Wright was the vice-president of the Union herein, it would defy the bounds of logic to conclude that the Union was represented during the discussion with the employee concerning his grievance. Such a conclusion would be equatable with determining that a defendant has received legal representation because he is also a lawyer; that therefore his attorney cannot represent him.

In the case at bar the Union did not receive notification of the meeting or discussion which concerned Wright's grievance. As the exclusive representative of the unit employees its concerns, as well as any presentation to Respondent at the said discussion, might well differ from those advanced by the employee on his own behalf. In this respect Wright cannot be compelled to wear two hats at the same time so as to permit management to avoid its obligation under 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. Thus, reason compels the conclusion by the undersigned that Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) by failing to afford the Union an opportunity to be represented at the formal discussion on May 2 concerning employee Wright's grievance.

(2) Under section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute it is specifically stated that it is an unfair labor practice for an agency "to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise of any right under this chapter." General Counsel insists that the remarks made by Fire Chief Smith to Wright on May 2, at the meeting in the former's office, were coercive in nature and hence violative of the said statutory proscription. It is argued that the statement to Wright regarding his being at the bottom of the ladder and "if you're going to stir up shit, plan on getting some on you" referred to the grievance filed by the employee and the attendant request by Wright for a grievance extension.

Employees are afforded the right to engage in protected activity without infringement thereon by an agency. They are entitled to engage in such activity freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal therefor. It is also well established that such protected activity includes the processing of a grievance. Federal Election Commission, 6 FLRA No. 59; Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Chicago, Illinois, 3 FLRA No. 116.

Turning to the case at bar, I am not persuaded that Smith's statements to Wright constituted an interference with the latter's protected activity or were coercive in nature. While it is true that Smith initiated the discussion by inquiring how to resolve the grievance, his subsequent comments re "stirring up shit" were not referable to Wright's filing or processing the grievance. The basis for Smith's intemperate use of language and remarks to Wright stemmed from the misdirection of the request of extension for pursuing the grievance, and this was admitted by Wright at the hearing. The Wing Commander's irateness was due to the fact that the request was made to him, and he "chewed out" the Base Commander. Thereafter each subordinate supervisor was the recipient of some censure until it reached Wright who was at the bottom of the ladder. There is no indication that management sought to interfere with, or forestall, the processing of the grievance. The record supports the conclusion that Smith, who had been "chewed out" also, was likewise upset because the grievance extension had been sent to the wrong person. Thus I conclude that the statements made by Smith to Wright on May 2 were not intimidating in nature. They neither suggested any reprisal for requesting a grievance extension nor implied that Wright would suffer consequences for continuing to process same.[11/] I conclude said statements by Smith did not violate 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

(3) It is well established that the burden is on the General Counsel to make a prima facie showing that an employee became engaged in protected activity, which was known to management, and that such conduct was a motivating factor in any action taken against said individual. Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C., 6 FLRA No. 23. In the case at bar, General Counsel contends that the filing of a grievance by Wright, and his continued attempt to process it further, motivated Respondent in transferring the employee from Station 1 to Station 2.

While the transfer of Wright may give rise to suspicion in respect to the basis therefor, I am not persuaded that a prima facie case of discrimination has been proven. The record reflects that Wright was not prevented or hindered in the filing of the grievance re the assignment of details. Although the grievance had been rejected through Step 2, it had been processed in the normal manner and in accordance with Section 10 of the collective bargaining agreement. Moreover, it also appears that Wright had, in his capacity as a union representative, filed grievances and unfair labor practice charges in the past without interference, or intimidatory conduct, on the part of management.

[11/] The undersigned is mindful of the adopted standard to determine whether a statement by management constitutes interference, restraint and coercion, as set forth in Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, 9 FLRA No. 31. However, I am of the opinion that Smith's remarks would not reasonably tend to coerce or intimidate Wright; that the latter was made aware that the statements were not related to his pursuing the grievance or engaging in protected activity; and that the circumstances negate any inference which might be drawn as to a coercive intent.

It is urged that Smith's remarks to Wright on May 2 demonstrate that the exercise of protected activity by the union vice-president was the motivating factor in his transfer. Thus, General Counsel adverts to the statement by the Fire Chief to Wright: "if you're going to stir up shit, plan on getting some on you." However, the record supports the finding that this comment referred to the fact that the request for an extension to pursue the grievance was misdirected. The Wing Commander was upset because he felt the request should have been made elsewhere. His "chewing out" of the Base Commander resulted in the latter doing the same to his subordinate until, as Smith commented, it reached Wright who was at the bottom of the ladder. The testimonies of both Smith and Wright lend credence to the conclusion that the aforesaid comment did not refer to the processing of the grievance by Wright. There is no indication that the statement by Smith on May 2 was an attempt to thwart processing of the grievance which the employee filed. It was, as Wright conceded at the hearing, referable to the disturbance caused by sending the requested extension to the wrong person. As such, I do not conclude that it evinces discriminatory intent on the part of management.

General Counsel also points to the fact that no mention of transferring Wright had been broached prior to May 2; that the employee did not request the transfer; and that it developed only after the discussion re the grievance on that date. While the timing of the decision to make the reassignment might be deemed suspect, sufficient basis did exist for management's actions to dispel such suspicion. Wright had been trained on almost all vehicles except the P-15 truck, and this training was a necessary part of a firefighter's job. His reassignment to Station 2 for such training was not a unique action since others had been assigned or detailed in the past to said station for a similar purpose. While the permanency of Wright's assignment may not have been in accord with the employee's wishes, the decision of management to take such action does not warrant an inference that it was effected in retaliation for Wright's zeal in pursuing his grievance. Although contacts with fellow employees in respect to grievances or union matters may have been somewhat more difficult due to his new location, it does not appear that Wright was prevented or thwarted from such activities by Respondent. Accordingly, I conclude the reassignment of Wright to Station 2 was not discriminatory and violative of 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute.

(4) (a). It is contended by Respondent that the alleged violation of 7116(a)(5) by Respondent, as set forth in the amended charge filed on December 31, 1984, was untimely. This contention is posited on the assertion that the reassignment of Wright to Fire Station 2 took place on May 13, 1984. Thus, Respondent insists, the amended charge raised a new cause of action which was filed more than six months after the conduct alleged, i.e., the reassignment of Wright as a unilateral act and refusal to bargain.

Section 7118(a)(4)(A) states that ". . . no complaint shall be issued based on any alleged unfair labor practice which occurred more than six months before the filing of the charge with the Authority." This statutory proscription was clearly structured in line with Section 10(b) of the NLRA. Its intent was to prevent the litigation of stale charges wherein the recollection of witnesses may be clouded, witnesses not readily available, and documents not at hand. See Lower Colorado Dams Project, Water and Power Resources Services, 14 FLRA No. 81. Moreover, it is well settled that the purpose of the charge is merely to set in motion the machinery of an inquiry. NLRB v. Faut Milting Co., 360 U.S. 301 (1959).

In the case at bar I am not convinced that the amended charge, filed on December 31, 1984, raised a new cause of action as averred by Respondent. Both the original charge, filed on September 18, 1984, and the amended charge alleged that Wright was reassigned on September 13, 1984; that such reassignment changed his working conditions and had an adverse impact on the employee; and isolated him from bargaining unit employees in respect to his representational duties. Thus, there is reference to the reassignment of Wright and to the change in his working conditions in the charges. The addition of an (a)(5) in the amended charge did not change the cause of action. Moreover, the Authority recognized that the General Counsel's authority in issuing a complaint need not be limited to the strict confines of the charge; that the charge merely sets in motion the machinery of an investigation. U.S. Geological Survey, Conservation Division, Gulf of Mexico Region, 9 FLRA No. 65.[12]

(4) (b). It is contended by General Counsel that the transfer of Wright to Fire Station 2 required notification be given to the Union, and that the latter be afforded an opportunity to bargain re the implementation of the change and its foreseeable impact on unit employees. Having failed to do so, it is urged that Respondent violated 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Respondent, conceding that prior notice was not given the Union of the assignment, insists that the transfer resulted in no more than a de minimis impact; that, under such circumstances, it was not obligated to notify the Union and bargain as to the change.

12/ The statute of limitations would not apply, in my opinion, even if the alleged refusal to bargain were raised for the first time in the amended charge filed on December 31, 1984. I agree with General Counsel that the transfer of Wright to Station 2 occurred on September 13, 1984 and not on May 13, 1984, and therefore the allegation of (a)(5) was timely under both charges. The record reflects the assignment of Wright in May was to train on the P-15 vehicle; that the transfer of Wright to Station 2 as a permanent employee occurred on September 13. Accordingly, the conduct complained about in the amended charge as well as the original charge - (a)(5) - took place within six months of the filings thereof.

In its latest rationale concerning the issue of whether the impact of a unilateral change in working conditions warrants bargaining, the Authority has concluded that certain factors should be considered. In Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Region V, Chicago, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 101 it looked to: the nature of the change (e.g. the extent of the change in work duties, location, office space, hours, loss of benefits or wages and the like); the temporary, recurring or permanent nature of the change (i.e., duration and frequency of the change affecting unit employees); the number of employees affected or foreseeably affected by the change; the size of the bargaining unit; and the extent to which the parties may have established through negotiation or past practice procedures and appropriate arrangements concerning analogous changes in the past, in determining that the impact, or reasonably foreseeable impact, of the change was not more than de minimis and thus did not give rise to a duty to bargain re procedure and appropriate arrangements.

Subsequent to the cited case the Authority has found certain unilateral action taken by management to have a de minimis impact on employees in light of the new standards promulgated. Thus, in Department of Housing and Urban Development, Columbia Area Office, Columbia, South Carolina, 20 FLRA No. 31 it held that although the work positions and duties of two employees had been altered, the impact was de minimis. It predicated that conclusion on the fact that said employees remained in Columbia, South Carolina, their pay and grade were not affected, and the change by management only affected two employees. Further, where the change in working conditions resulted in assigning extra duties to employees, ordinarily performed by others, the Authority concluded the impact was nevertheless de minimis. Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Washington, D.C., 20 FLRA No. 53. The Authority was influenced by the fact that the nature of the duties was substantially the same as performed by the affected employees previously; that no change occurred to any measurable degree in the time required by the employees to complete their duties; that no different skill or experience was needed to handle such added work; and the employees were part of a nationwide unit of 8000 employees.[13]

Applying those standards to the case at bar, I am constrained to conclude that the foreseeable impact of the change effected herein must be termed de minimis. The transfer of Wright to Fire Station 2 from Fire Station 1 caused a change in location of less than one mile. While he drove a P-15 fire truck which was larger than the rescue vehicle driven by Wright at Station 1, the nature of his duties at both stations involved driving fire-fighting vehicles. Neither his pay nor grade was changed by virtue of the transfer, and there is no showing his hours were modified or altered. Although General Counsel adverts to the difficulty imposed upon Wright in communicating with employees due to the fact that Station 2 was not easily accessible to personnel, it appears that the union vice-president could have left that area and represented employees on official time. The record also reflects that since 1980 Respondent has made transfers of personnel and issued copies of memos directing such action to each individual, but it does not appear that notification was given to the Union in respect thereto. Based on the foregoing, including the fact that the reassignment involved only one employee - with no apparent impact on other unit employees - I conclude the change was de minimis. Accordingly, I find Respondent was under no obligation to notify the Union and afford it an opportunity to request bargaining, and its failure to do so did not violate 7116(a)(1) & (5) of the Statute.

[13] See also U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Washington, D.C. Area Office, 20 FLRA No. 38 where the Authority held the transfer of three employees to be de minimis, relying on the fact that it was for a temporary, albeit extended, period; that the duties remained the same, and the change involved only a few employees.

Having concluded that: (a) Respondent did not interfere with, restrain, or coerce Howard Wright in violation of 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by virtue of the statements made to the employees on May 2, 1984 by Fire Chief Smith; (b) Respondent did not permanently transfer or reassign Howard Wright from Fire Station 1 to Fire Station 2 on September 13, 1984 because of his exercise of protected activity in violation of 7116(a)(2) of the Statute; (c) the failure by Respondent to notify the Union of the said transfer or reassignment, and afford it an opportunity to bargain re the impact and implementation thereof, did not constitute a violation of 7116(a)(5) of the Statute - it is recommended that such allegations in the complaint (paragraph 9, 10, and 11) be dismissed.

Having concluded that Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by conducting a formal discussion with employee Howard Wright concerning his grievance without affording the Union an opportunity to be present as required by Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute, and thus violated Section 7116(a)(1) & (8) of the Statute, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following:

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Agency

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). The petition concerns the negotiability of three proposals submitted during the course of impact and implementation bargaining on the merger of the Bridgeport, Ohio Branch Office and the Wheeling, West Virginia District Office of the Social Security Administration.

II. Procedural Issues

The Union's petition for review originally contained six proposals. In its Response to the Agency's Statement of Position the Union withdrew its request for review as to three of these proposals and a portion of Proposal 1. Accordingly, the three proposals and the portion of Proposal 1 are no longer in dispute and will not be considered further. In addition, since the Agency withdrew its allegation of nonnegotiability as to a portion of Proposal 3, the Union's appeal as to that portion of the proposal is now moot. Finally, the Agency's contention that the Union's petition for review should be dismissed for failure to timely serve the head of the Agency cannot be sustained. While the Union initially mailed a copy of its petition for review to local management and the headquarters of the Social Security Administration, the Union subsequently served a copy of its petition and response on the Agency head's designee.

III. Union Proposal 1 (Portions remaining in dispute)

> Hours- Office hours are from 8:00 AM to 4:30 PM.
> Employees may use the first hour of the day, 8:00-9:00 AM, for training and manual maintenance.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that because the first portion of this proposal prescribes specific office hours, it involves the technology, methods and means of performing work under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. The Agency contends that the second portion of the proposal, permitting employees to use the first hour of the day for training and manual maintenance, interferes with management's right to direct employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. The Agency also contends that by prescribing certain assignments at specific times of day, the second portion of the proposal interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

The Union argues that the Agency has not made a showing that the first portion of Proposal 1 violates the Statute. The Union contends that the second portion of the proposal does not interfere with management's right to assign work.

B. Analysis

In Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado, 16 FLRA 1104 (1984), the Authority held that an agency had no obligation to bargain over a change in hours that a Commissary store would be open. The Authority reasoned that since a part of the agency's mission was to provide commissary services for various personnel, the decision about the store's hours was mission-related and thus nonnegotiable pursuant to section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. Since a part of the mission of the Agency in this case is to provide services to the public, a decision regarding the particular hours when a Social Security field office is to be open to the public is mission-related. Thus, based on Lowry Air Force Base the first portion of this proposal which would establish the specific hours the Social Security Office will be open to the public is also outside the duty to bargain.

The Union claims that while the second portion of the proposal is intended to continue the historic practice in Social Security field offices of employees using the first hour of the work day for reading assigned materials, it does not contemplate employees being able to refuse other work assignments during this hour. This statement of intent is inconsistent with the express language of this portion of the proposal which permits employees, at their option, to spend the first hour of the work day performing training and manual maintenance to the exclusion of any other tasks. Thus, this portion of the proposal is to the same effect as Proposal 1 found outside the duty to bargain in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2094, AFL-CIO and Veterans Administration Medical Center, New York, New York, 19 FLRA 1027 (1985). The Authority held that as Proposal 1 in that decision required management to refrain from assigning employees normal duties during specified time periods, it precluded the assignment of other work at those hours and thus violated management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. Based on the reasons and cases cited in Veterans Administration Medical Center, since the second portion of Proposal 1 in this case also requires management to refrain from assigning employees certain duties during a specified time period it is outside the duty to bargain.

As to the Agency's assertion that this portion interferes with its right to direct employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute, we note that the Agency has not provided any support for its claim. We need not reach this issue in view of our finding above that this portion of the proposal interferes with the Agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) and is accordingly nonnegotiable for that reason.

C. Conclusion

The first portion of Proposal 1 violates management's right to determine its mission under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute and the second portion of Proposal 1 violates management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

IV. Union Proposal 2

> The attached pages are workflow procedures for the Wheeling District. Changes will be made in writing and management will make any appropriate notifications.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that because this proposal concerns workflow, or the means used to perform the work, it involves the technology, methods, and means of performing work under 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. In addition, the Agency contends that the proposal interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

The Union contends that the proposal requires management to give the union written notice of change in the manner work is accomplished within the office, and that the proposal does not concern the substance or content of office work procedures. As such, the Union argues that the proposal is a procedure negotiable under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute.

B. Analysis

The term "workflow procedures" refers to a written document prepared by management which sets out workflow or work procedures within the office. The Agency has not in any manner indicated how requiring written notice of a change in work procedures interferes with the technology, methods and means used by the Agency for accomplishing or furthering its work under section 7106(b)(1). Nor has the Agency established how providing written notice to employees of changes in work procedures would prevent it from assigning employees or assigning work especially since nothing in the proposal can be construed to prevent the Agency from making changes and requiring compliance with them. Thus, this proposal constitutes a procedure by which the Agency exercises its management rights and is negotiable under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1999 and Army-Air Force Exchange Service, Dix-McGuire Exchange, Fort Dix, New Jersey, 2 FLRA 152, 155 (1979), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945, (1982).

C. Conclusion

This proposal is not inconsistent with the Agency's right to determine the technology, methods, and means of performing work, under section 7106(b)(1) or inconsistent with the Agency's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) or with the Agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B). Rather, the proposal constitutes a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(1).

V. Union Proposal 3 (Portion remaining in dispute)

Reassignment Procedures

> Adequate training needed for satisfactory performance in the new speciality will be provided on duty time.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that by requiring management to provide specific training during duty time, Proposal 3 interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The Union argues that this proposal represents an "appropriate arrangement" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute for employees who are adversely affected by management's exercise of its authority.

B. Analysis

The employees subject to this proposal are claims representatives. There are two specializations within the claims representatives position, namely, Title II (T-2) involving the processing of claims concerning retirement, survivors and disability claims and Title XVI (T-16) involving the processing of claims for Supplemental Security Income. According to the Agency, employees are trained "intensively" in one of these specialties with only limited training in the other specialty. Employees are then assigned to perform duties in the area in which they received more intensive training. The proposal concerns employees who because of the office merger will be assigned duties in the specialty area in which they previously received only limited training.

This proposal is to the same effect as the portion of a proposal requiring management to assign formal training to employees to enable them to perform in a position "of equivalent significance and grade value" in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1923 and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 9 FLRA 899 (1982). The Authority found that portion of the proposal to be inconsistent with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to assign work. Thus, based on the reasons and cases cited in Social Security Administration, this proposal, which also requires the Agency to provide certain specified training, conflicts with management's right to assign work. See also National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 108 and U.S. Department of Agriculture, Arkansas State Office of the Farmers Home Administration, 14 FLRA 19 (1984).

We turn now to the question of whether the proposal constitutes an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. We assume that the proposal was intended to ameliorate an adverse effect perceived by claims representatives who, because of the office merger, are assigned duties outside the area in which they previously received intensive training.

Although the proposal would obligate the Agency to provide adequate training it does not specify the time or manner in which training will be provided. Management can determine the type of training to provide, that is, formal classes or on-the-job training, and further, when such training is to be provided. Nor does the proposal condition the Agency's right to assign duties or evaluate employees' performance of the duties on the Agency's first having trained the employees. Rather, the proposal merely provides that at some point the Agency should provide such training as is necessary for employees to satisfactorily perform their assigned duties. The Agency specifically acknowledges that "[i]n practice, employees do not cross over from [one specialty to the other] without training." Agency Statement of Position at second page.

The negative impact of this proposal on management's right to assign work is not so significant as to outweigh the disruption to an employee caused by being assigned duties outside the area in which he or she received intensive training and the benefit conferred by the proposal of an opportunity for employees to receive adequate training so that they may perform the new duties satisfactorily. See National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986). Therefore, we find that this proposal does not excessively interfere with management's right, under section 7016(a)(2)(B) to assign work.

C. Conclusion

The Authority finds that Proposal 3 would not excessively interfere with management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(B) and thus, that the proposal constitutes an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's rights within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review as to Proposal 1 be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposals 2 and 3.[*/]

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator A. Lee Belcher filed by the Activity under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Activity has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Activity's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority for the first time found that organizational entities of the same agency which are not in the same "chain of command" as the entity at the level of exclusive recognition may commit violations of § 7116(a)(1) by interfering with the exclusive bargaining relationship between the entity at the level of exclusive recognition and the union. The Authority concluded that "an agency should not be able to escape liability for conduct which has unlawfully interfered with, restrained or coerced employees in the exercise of their rights, simply because it is not the chain of command with the 'employer' at the level of exclusive recognition."

This case involved the: (1) union, which is the exclusive representative for a unit of Defense Logistics Agency (DLA) employees located at Cameron Station; (2) DLA, which is a primary national subdivision of the Department of Defense (DOD) and a tenant of Cameron Station; (3) DOD; (4) Department of the Army (DOA), which is a wholly distinct primary national subdivision of DOD; (5) U.S. Army Military District of Washington (MDW), which is a subordinate command within DOA; and (6) Cameron Station, which is an activity within, and subordinate to MDW.

The Authority found in agreement with the Judge that DLA violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) by failing to bargain in good faith with the union concerning the impact and implementation of a paid parking program at Cameron Station pursuant to a Government-wide policy to charge for employee parking. The Authority has held that the impact and implementation of a paid parking program concerns conditions of employment and falls within the duty to bargain. Thus, DLA failed to meet its bargaining obligation under the Statute by refusing to negotiate, alleging lack of authority, and by further failing to obtain duly authorized representatives of DOD to negotiate on its behalf at the level of exclusive recognition concerning matters within the scope of bargaining.

The Authority found, in agreement with the Judge, that DOD did not violate the Statute by refusing to bargain with the exclusive representative of employees of a subordinate activity (DLA) before issuing internal directives to subordinate elements concerning its paid parking program. Further, there was no showing that DOD prevented DLA from fulfilling its duty to bargain with the union at the level of exclusive recognition. The Authority noted, however, that if DLA had requested DOD's assistance in meeting its bargaining obligation and the latter had refused, DOD's conduct would have violated the Statute.

The Authority found in agreement with the Judge that certain subordinate components of DOD (DOA, MDW, and Cameron Station) did not violate § 7116(a)(5) in implementing DOD's paid parking program. The components did not have a collective bargaining relationship with the union and therefore could not have violated a nonexistent duty to bargain.

The Authority agreed with the Judge's conclusion that neither DOA nor MDW engaged in conduct which was violative of § 7116(a)(1) when they impelmented DOD's paid parking program. The Authority also found, contrary to the Judge, that Cameron Station, as a host activity, did not violate § 7116(a)(1). Cameron Station's conduct in implementing the paid parking program was a proper exercise of its managerial prerogative. There was no showing, for example, that implementation of the program by Cameron Station prevented DLA from meeting its bargaining obligations, and no showing that Cameron Station in any way instructed DLA not to meet those obligations.

Subordinate components of DOD (DOA, MDW and Cameron Station) did not violate § 7116(a)(1)(5) by the assessment of parking fees for two parking spaces contractually reserved for the union. The Authority found in agreement with the Judge that these components owed no bargaining obligation to the union.

Subordinate elements of DOD (DOA and Cameron Station) violated § 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by requiring the payment of parking fees for two spaces which were reserved for the union, free of charge, by the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Authority, however, found, contrary to the Judge, that MDW did not violate the Statute. Thus, Cameron Station together with DOA denied requests for reconsideration of Cameron Station's decision that fees would have to be imposed for the spaces in question and thereafter imposed such fees contrary to both the contractual commitment between DLA and the union and the terms of OMB Circular A-118 (providing for the continuation of valid negotiated agreements covering employee parking). MDW, on the other hand, by merely transmitting communications between Cameron Station and DOA was not involved in the deliberative process.

In view of the provisions of OMB Circular A-118 permitting the continuation of valid negotiated agreements until their expiration, and the provisions of the agreement between a subordinate element of an agency (DLA)and the union, allowing for two free parking spaces, the Authority ordered that the union be reimbursed for fees paid for reserved parking spaces pursuant to the implementation of a paid parking program at the agency level, to the extent that such monies had not already been refunded. The union was unlawfully assessed fees for the parking space, which were reserved for the union pursuant to the parties collective bargining agreement.

DIGEST NOTES

The agency's refusal to comply with the parties' collective bargaining agreement and ground rules agreements providing for the payment of travel and per diem was violative of § 7116(a)(1) and (5). The provisions authorizing travel and per diem expenses had been incorporated into the terms of the parties collective bargaining agreement and the record does not support a conclusion that the parties intended the provisions to apply only under the condition which the agency asserts, i.e., in accordance with Interpretation and Guidance, 2 FLRA 265 (1979). The provisions do not violate law or government-wide regulation.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

The Authority found that the agency did not violate the Statute when it refused to negotiate on changes in the sites of negotiations. The sites of the negotiations were established in the respective agreements of the parties. While those agreements presupposed that the agency would be paying travel and per diem expenses, the refusal to pay did not create an agency obligation to bargain on a change in the agreement.

DIGEST NOTES

The agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (8) by refusing to comply with an arbitration award involving a § 7121(f) subject matter -- termination of the grievant. Although, the Authority does not have jurisdiction, under § 7122, to review the substance of the award, it may, once such an award has become final and binding, review matters of compliance with the award in an unfair labor practice proceeding. The Authority found that the clarified award of the arbitrator became final and binding when no timely action was taken by the Director of OPM under 5 U.S.C. § 7703(d).

An unfair labor practice charge was timely filed, within the six-month period required by § 7118(a)(4), and the agency's exceptions as to: (1) the lack of proper service of the union's request for clarification of the award and the resulting lack of an opportunity to be heard by the arbitrator; and (2) the award's alleged interference with management's rights under § 7106(a)(2)(A) to assign employees; were not litigable issues in an unfair labor practice proceeding seeking compliance with an arbitration award involving a § 7121(f) subject matter. Those matters go to the merits of the award and may only be timely raised within the appeals procedures established by the Congress.

The Authority found that the agency failed to comply with an arbitration award which obligated it to reinstate a grievant to his former position and the agency, instead, ordered him to a position at another facility. The arbitrator's clarification of his award clearly showed that the agency's reassignment of the grievant was inconsistent with the award. The record supported the Judge's finding that the agency's failure to comply with the award caused the grievant to resign from Federal service, the Authority found that but for the agency's refusal to comply with the award, the grievant would not have resigned. Accordingly, the Authority adopted the Judge's recommended remedy that the grievant be made whole and that the agency offer to reinstate the grievant to his former position without prejudice to his seniority or other rights or privileges.

The Judge denied the General Counsel's post-hearing motion to amend the complaint by adding the agency's failure to comply with § 7121(b)(3)(C) and § 7121(f) to the original § 7122(b) assertion as the statutory basis for the agency's violation of § 7116(a)(8). The denial was based on lack of notice to the agency. While affirming the Judge's ruling that the General Counsel's motion to amend the complaint be denied, the Authority agreed that the Judge's finding upon which he fashioned his recommended remedy is within the scope of the unamended complaint.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that the agency violated the terms of the parties' collective bargaining agreement by assigning the grievant, a union steward, to another department several miles away from his previous work area assignment without first consulting with the union. As a remedy, the arbitrator directed that the grievant be returned to his former position in his former work area under the direction of his former supervisor. It was further directed that if the former position is not available because of substantial job redesign, the grievant would be trained to undertake a suitable job in the original work area.

In its exception, the agency contended that the arbitrator's award violates management's rights to: (1) assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) because the award directs assignment of the grievant to a particular position; and (2) assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B) because the award directs training be provided to the grievant. The Authority concluded that the award interferes with management's right to assign employees and to assign work as it pertains to training. Because the award directly interferes with management's rights, the award does not constitute merely a proper enforcement of an applicable procedure or appropriate arrangement within the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

The Authority found that the arbitrator's particular remedy was not founded on any specific negotiated agreement of the parties and was solely the creation of the arbitrator. Accordingly, the award was modified by striking the remedy of returning the grievant to his original position or to a suitably equivalent position in his original work area.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the General Counsel; the Charging Party (Union); Respondents Headquarters, U.S. Army Military District of Washington (MDW) and Cameron Station; and the Intervenor, Office of Personnel Management. The consolidated complaint, as amended, alleged that Respondent Defense Logistics Agency (DLA) violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by failing to bargain in good faith with the Union concerning the impact and implementation of a paid parking program at Cameron Station pursuant to a Government-wide policy to charge for employee parking. It further alleged that the other named Respondents violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by their interference with the bargaining relationship between the Union and DLA which resulted in the Union being denied the opportunity to negotiate concerning the impact and implementation of the paid parking program prior to implementation at Cameron Station; and that Cameron Station, MDW and Department of the Army (DOA) additionally interfered with the bargaining relationship between the Union and DLA by their acts and conduct in connection with the assessment of parking fees for two reserved parking spaces assigned to the Union pursuant to its contract with DLA.

II. Background

The facts are fully set forth in the Judge's Decision. The Authority notes here, however, that the Union is the exclusive representative for a unit of DLA employees located at Cameron Station. DLA is a primary national subdivision of the Department of Defense (DOD), and it is a tenant of Cameron Station. DOA is a wholly distinct primary national sub-division of DOD, MDW is a subordinate command within DOA, and Cameron Station is an activity within, and subordinate to, MDW. Thus, there is no command relationship between DOA, MDW, and Cameron Station on the one hand and DLA on the other. Cameron Station, the host Activity, provides office and warehouse space and support services to DLA, but has no collective bargaining relationship with the Union. Similarly, no bargaining relationship exists between the Union and DOD, DOA or MDW.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge found that Respondent DLA violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by refusing to bargain with the Union concerning the impact and implementation of the paid parking program at Cameron Station. The Judge further found that Respondent DOD had not violated the Statute and recommended dismissal of this portion of the complaint. As to Respondents DOA, MDW and Cameron Station, who were charged with violating the Statute by denying the Union an opportunity to negotiate prior to implementation of the paid parking program and by assessing parking fees for two reserved spaces assigned to the Union pursuant to an existing contract with DLA, the Judge found that they had not violated section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute. However, the Judge concluded that Cameron Station had violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by denying the Union an opportunity to negotiate, and that Cameron Station, MDW and DOA had all violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute for assessing fees.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The parties excepted to various legal conclusions made by the Judge. In their jointly filed exceptions, MDW and Cameron Station excepted to the Judge's findings that each had violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. The Intervenor, Office of Personnel Management, excepted to the finding of a violation against DLA.

As to the above findings, the General Counsel excepted to the Judge's failure to find that Cameron Station had violated section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute by interfering with the bargaining relationship between DLA and the Union, and to the Judge's failure to conclude that DOD, DOA and MDW violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute based on their involvement in denying the Union an opportunity to bargain over the impact and implementation of the paid parking program.

The only exception filed by the Charging Party was to the Judge's remedy. The Charging Party urged the Authority to order that all employees who were charged fees for parking be reimbursed for such payments.

V. Analysis

The Authority will address the responsibility of each of the Respondents in turn. First, as to DLA, it is well established that the duty of an agency under the Statute is to negotiate with an exclusive representative of an appropriate unit of its employees concerning conditions of employment affecting them, except as provided otherwise by Federal law or Government-wide rule or regulation or agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. The Authority has concluded that the impact and implementation of a paid parking program concerns unit employees' "conditions of employment" and falls within the duty to bargain.[1] In this case, when the Union learned of the proposed parking requirements to be implemented at Cameron Station, it requested negotiations with DLA to resolve the alleged conflict with the parties' existing collective bargaining agreement and requested to bargain over matters left to agency discretion under the "Government-wide regulation" directing the implementation of paid parking programs. In its response to the Union, DLA refused to negotiate on the ground that it lacked any authority with respect to the implementation of the paid parking program at Cameron Station and noted that the MDW Post Commander located at Cameron Station had the responsibility for implementing the program. However, the Authority has held that "the Statute clearly requires the parties to provide representatives who are empowered to negotiate and enter into agreements on all matters within the scope of negotiations in the bargaining unit."[2] Thus, DLA failed to meet its bargaining obligation under the Statute by refusing to negotiate or to obtain duly authorized representatives of the Agency to negotiate on its behalf with the Union at the level of exclusive recognition as to matters within the scope of bargaining.[3]

As for the allegations against Respondent DOD, the Union is not the exclusive representative of a unit of employees at the DOD level, but rather is the exclusive representative of units of employees at a subordinate level within the Agency. Thus, the Authority notes that DOD had no duty to bargain with the Union prior to issuing internal directives to subordinate elements concerning the paid parking program. See Boston District Recruiting Command, Boston, Massachusetts, 15 FLRA 720 (1984), and cases cited therein. Also, in the absence of any showing that DOD prevented DLA from fulfilling its duty to bargain with the Union at the level of exclusive recognition, the Authority finds that DOD has not violated the Statute as alleged. It should be noted, however, that if DLA had requested DOD's assistance in resolving the matter and the latter had refused, DOD's conduct would have violated the Statute. As indicated by the Judge, however, that is not the case here.

We turn next to the allegation that DOA, MDW and Cameron Station violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by their actions in implementing the paid parking program. The Judge found that the only violation committed was by Cameron Station which interfered with the rights of DLA employees to exercise their statutory collective bargaining rights. This conduct was found to be violative of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. The Judge found that neither DOA nor MDW had violated section 7116(a)(1) in this regard and, further, that no violation of section 7116(a)(5) had been committed by either DOA, MDW or Cameron Station.

> § 7114. Representation rights and duties
> . . . . . .
> (b) The duty of an agency and an exclusive representative to negotiate in good faith . . . shall include the obligation--
> . . . .
> (2) to be represented at the negotiations by duly authorized representatives prepared to discuss and negotiate on any condition of employment[.]

We agree with the Judge's conclusions that none of these Respondents violated section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute. We note that these Respondents do not have a collective bargaining relationship with the Union and therefore could not have violated a nonexistent duty to bargain. We also agree with the Judge's conclusion that neither DOA nor MDW engaged in conduct which was violative of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. However, we disagree with the Judge's finding that Cameron Station violated section 7116(a)(1). We view Cameron Station's conduct in implementing the paid parking program as a proper exercise of its managerial prerogative and find that it has not been established how the act of implementing the program interfered with any protected rights under the Statute. There is no showing, for example, that implementation of the program by Cameron Station prevented DLA from meeting its bargaining obligations and no showing that Cameron Station in any way instructed DLA not to meet those obligations.

Finally, we address the allegation that Respondents DOA, MDW and Cameron Station violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by assessing parking fees for two spaces used by the Union. As the Judge noted in his decision, DLA and the Union had a contractual arrangement whereby the Union was provided two reserved spaces which it had used free of charge. Although the contract did not specify that the spaces were to be used without charge, at the time the agreement was negotiated there was no question that the spaces were free of charge. Also, OMB Circular A-118, one of the Government-wide parking regulations giving rise to the paid parking program, expressly provided that it was not to be interpreted as rendering null and void any valid negotiated agreements covering employee parking which were in effect on the effective date of the Circular, until such time as the agreements expired. At some point, Cameron Station indicated that parking fees would have to be assessed for the two parking spaces. The commander of DLA requested reconsideration of this decision, relying in part upon a proposed internal DOD directive on parking which provided that valid agreements were to remain in effect until their expiration, and further relying upon the agreement between DLA and the Union that the two reserved Union spaces were to be provided free of charge.[4] Cameron Station responded that the Union could retain the use of the two reserved spaces but that essentially it would have to pay the fees. DLA repeated its request that Cameron Station reconsider its decision. Cameron Station then forwarded DLA's two requests to MDW which forwarded the requests to DOA. In its response, DOA stated as follows:

> Any valid, negotiated agreement between installation/activity commanders and unions in effect on 13 August 1979, that specifically state[s] free parking will be provided will remain in effect until the expiration of the agreement . . . . If free parking is not specifically provided for in the agreement, then it should not be provided. Commanders may provide reserved parking spaces or passes that facilitate parking for union representatives; however, fees should be collected for their use when the union representative is an official visitor parking over three hours.

In the meantime, the Union had purchased permits for its two reserved spaces.

The Judge found that neither DOA, MDW nor Cameron Station had violated section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute concerning the assessment of fees for the two spaces. We agree for the reasons set forth in his decision. We also agree with the Judge's conclusion that DOA and Cameron Station committed independent violations of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by interfering with the relationship between DLA and the Union but disagree with his finding as to Respondent MDW. DLA and the Union had a collective bargaining agreement providing the Union with two free parking spaces, which agreement was made known to DOA and Cameron Station by DLA. OMB Circular A-118 itself provided for the continuation of valid negotiated agreements covering employee parking. Although aware of these facts,

[4] The Judge found it unnecessary to interpret the parties' agreement because DLA and the Union agreed that the two spaces were to be provided free of charge. In view of the parties' agreed interpretation, we also find it unnecessary to interpret the contract provision.

Cameron Station made the determination that fees would have to be imposed for the spaces in question. Together with DOA, it subsequently denied requests for reconsideration of that decision and thereafter imposed such fees contrary to both the contractual commitment between DLA and the Union and the terms of the OMB Circular. In our view, such conduct interfered with the Union's right to the use of two free parking spaces, as contractually agreed upon, thereby unlawfully interfering with the exclusive bargaining relationship between DLA and the Union in violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. MDW, on the other hand, merely transmitted communications between Cameron Station and DOA. There is no evidence that MDW itself was involved in the deliberative process. Therefore, it did not engage in conduct which interfered with the relationship between DLA and the Union, and this allegation of the complaint shall be dismissed as to Respondent MDW.

In concluding that DOA and Cameron Station violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by interfering with protected rights of DLA employees, the Authority has the opportunity for the first time under the Statute to decide that organizational entities of the same agency not in the same "chain of command" as the entity at the level of exclusive recognition may commit violations of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute if they are found to have unlawfully interfered with the protected rights of employees other than their own by taking action which conflicts with the bargaining relationship between the parties at the level of exclusive recognition. While this is a case of first impression under the Statute, such findings are supported by private sector precedent. Thus, the National Labor Relations Board has decided with court approval that an employer as defined in the National Labor Relations Act may be found to have violated certain unfair labor practice sections of the NLRA with respect to employees other than its own.[5] There is nothing in the Statute or its legislative history which would preclude a similar finding when a component of an agency has interfered with the protected rights of employees employed by an entity within a different primary national subdivision of the same agency.

Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute makes it an unfair labor practice "for an agency . . . to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter[.]" (Emphasis added.) The term "agency" is defined in section 7103(a)(3) of the Statute as "an Executive agency" (with various inclusions and exclusions not here relevant) and, as relevant here, the term "employee" is defined in section 7103(a)(2) of the Statute as "an individual . . . employed in an agency[.]" A literal reading of these provisions supplies clear support for the conclusion that "an agency" which interferes with, restrains or coerces "any employee" in the exercise of that employee's protected rights commits a violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute, even if the agency's actions are not directed at an employee for which it is the employer at the level of exclusive recognition, as in this case.

Underlying our holding here is the policy consideration that in our judgment an agency should not be able to escape liability for conduct which has unlawfully interfered with, restrained or coerced employees in the exercise of their rights simply because it is not in the chain of command with the "employer" at the level of exclusive recognition. Particularly in this instance, where Cameron Station was responsible for providing and maintaining a variety of services to DLA and its employees, including parking facilities, Cameron Station's actions in assessing parking fees for the two spaces directly interfered with the contractually agreed upon provision between DLA and the Union, thereby unlawfully interfering with the rights of DLA employees. The conduct of DOA similarly interfered with the rights of DLA employees because DOA was directly involved in the process of causing the fees to be assessed even though it knew that the collective bargaining agreement between DLA and the Union provided two free parking spaces to the Union.

We wish to caution, however, that our decision should not be construed as implying that agencies--even those with Government-wide responsibilities--automatically run the risk of violating the Statute when regulations relating to conditions of employment of unit employees are simply promulgated. Rather, our finding here is that when a component of an agency engages in conduct which unlawfully interferes with the protected rights of employees of another component, a violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute will be found to have occurred.

It should also be noted that the reasons leading to the finding of a violation of section 7116(a)(1) by Cameron Station and DOA would not apply to a section 7116(a)(5) allegation. Thus, while a party outside of the chain of command could--and in this case did--interfere with employees' rights by disrupting an agreement between the employees' exclusive representative and the agency component at the level of exclusive recognition, that outside party cannot be found to have failed or refused to negotiate in good faith because, in the absence of a collective bargaining relationship, no duty to bargain exists and thus there can be no violation of section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute. This is consistent with our findings above concerning all the named Respondents not party to the collective bargaining relationship with the Union.

VI. Remedy

With regard to an appropriate remedy, the Authority concludes that, inasmuch as there is no regulation in effect at this time requiring the collection of parking fees,6/ it is unnecessary to order DLA to negotiate regarding this matter at the present time. Moreover, the Union's request that employees be reimbursed for all parking fees collected pursuant to the regulation cannot be granted. The mechanism for determining the amount of fees to be collected and the conditions for exemptions from such fees were specifically addressed in the regulation. The regulation did not, therefore, leave the amount of the fees open to "implementation" negotiations and the fees would have been collected regardless of the results of negotiations over implementation of the program. However, as to the fees paid by the Union for the two reserved spaces, OMB Circular A-118 essentially permitted the continuation of valid negotiated agreements, until their expiration, and, as noted, the agreement between DLA and the Union allowed for two free spaces. Therefore we find that it will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute to order that the Union be reimbursed for such fees paid, to the extent that such monies have not already been refunded.

6/ During the pendency of the instant case before the Authority, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia ruled that the paid parking plan, as embodied in OMB Circular A-118, was invalid, and ordered that the GSA regulation be set aside and its enforcement permanently enjoined. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, et al. v. Freeman, 510 F.Supp. 596 (D.D.C. 1981). Thereafter, GSA revised the regulation to suspend the collection of parking fees in accordance with the injunction (46 F.R. 40191 (1981)). The District Court's decision was subsequently reversed. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, et al. v. Carmen, 669 F.2d 815 (D.C. Cir. 1981). However, President Reagan has stated that the collection of parking fees will not be reinstated. Statement by the President on Parking Fees for Federal Employees, Public Papers of the Presidents (Ronald Reagan) 1981, 1161.

VII. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision and the entire record in this case, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order, as modified.

We find in agreement with the Judge's conclusion, that Respondent DLA violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.[7] We also agree with the Judge's conclusion that Respondent DOD did not violate the Statute. As to the Judge's findings regarding DOA, MDW and Cameron Station, and their actions in implementing the paid parking program, we agree that none of these Respondents violated section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute and that neither DOA nor MDW violated section 7116(a)(1). However, we find, contrary to the Judge, that Cameron Station did not commit a violation of section 7116(a)(1) in this regard.

As to the assessment of parking fees for two contractually reserved spaces, we agree that no violation of section 7116(a)(5) was committed by DOA, MDW or Cameron Station. We further adopt the Judge's findings that DOA and Cameron Station violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by requiring the payment of parking fees for those two spaces, but disagree with his finding that MDW also violated the Statute in this regard.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Labor Relations Statute (the Statute), 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. §7101 et seq. It was instituted by the filing of a Complaint and Notice of Hearing, and Order Consolidating Case Nos. 3-CA-664, 3-CA-1044, and 3-CA-1089 on April 30, 1980. A Complaint and Notice of Hearing, and Order Consolidating Cases 3-CA-1090 and 1091 was issued on June 18, 1980. As more specifically detailed in the Index and Description of Formal Documents to General Counsel Exhibits 7(a) to 7(bb), the Complaints were based on separate charges filed against each Respondent. An Order Consolidating all the above mentioned cases and Rescheduling the Hearing was issued on June 19, 1980.

The General Counsel alleges that the Respondents, during the course of their implementation of President Carter's paid parking program, violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) as follows:

1. Respondent Defense Logistics Agency refused to negotiate with Local 2449 over the impact and implementation of paid parking at Cameron Station.

2. Respondent Cameron Station implemented a paid parking program without giving due consideration to Local 2449's right to negotiate over its impact and implementation.

3. Respondents Department of Defense, Department of the Army, and Military District of Washington curtailed Local 2449's statutory right to negotiate fully over the impact and implementation of the paid parking program at Cameron Station.

4. Respondents Department of the Army, Military District of Washington, and Cameron Station unilaterally assessed parking fees to Local 2449 for two parking spaces assigned to it.

Respondents deny committing any unfair labor practices; their specific defenses will be discussed later in this decision.

It would also point that this is the sixth and last in a series of "parking" cases litigated by the General Counsel. Decisions in the other cases have already been issued by the two Administrative Law Judges and are pending review by the Authority. Those decisions rendered by Judge Salvatore Arrigo are as follows: Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Boston, Massachusetts; Commander, Fort Devens, Fort Devens, Massachusetts; Defense Logistics Agency, Washington, D.C.; Department of Defense, Washington, D.C. and National Association of Government Employees, Local R1-210, Case Nos. 1-CA-212, 1-CA-298, 1-CA-299, and 1-CA-300 (December 22, 1980) (hereinafter referred to as "DCASR"); Boston District Recruiting Command, Boston, Massachusetts; 96th U.S. Army Reserve Command, Hanscom Air Force Base, Massachusetts; Department of the Army, Washington, D.C.; Department of Defense, Washington, D.C. and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1900, Case Nos. 1-CA-206, 1-CA-207, 1-CA-208, 1-CA-209, 1-CA-303, 1-CA-304 (December 22, 1980) (hereinafter referred to as "Boston District"); and Department of the Army and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Case No. 3-CA-766 (December 22, 1980) (hereinafter referred to as "Department of the Army"). Those decisions issued by Judge William Devaney are as follows: Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Public Affairs and Washington Headquarters Services and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2, Case Nos. 3-CA-718 and 1026 (May 18, 1981) (hereinafter referred to as "PA"); and Harry Diamond Laboratories, Department of the Army, and Department of Defense, and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2, Case Nos. 3-CA-719, 819, and 970 (May 18, 1981) (hereinafter referred to as "HDL").

At the hearing in Washington, D.C. all parties were afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and argue orally. Thereafter, Respondents, the Intervenor,1/ and the General Counsel filed briefs which have been duly considered.

1/ The Charging Party objected to intervention by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) on the ground that OPM was not a party to the rule making involved herein. The motion was denied at the hearing.

Upon consideration of the entire record[2] in this case, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence presented at the hearing, I make the following findings of fact,[3] conclusions or law, and recommended order.

Findings of Fact

1. Respondent Department of Defense ("DOD") is an agency within the meaning of Section 7103(a)(3) of the Statute. Respondents Department of the Army ("DA or DOA") and Headquarters, Defense Logistics Agency ("DLA") each are separate primary national subdivisions of the Department of Defense within the meaning of Section 2421.5 of the Rules and Regulations of the Authority. Respondents Headquarters, U.S. Army Military District of Washington ("MDW") and Cameron Station are subordinate activites of the Department of the Army within the meaning of Section 2421.4 of the Rules and Regulations of the Authority.

2. Respondent Cameron Station is under the jurisdiction of MDW; that is, the Commanding Officer of Cameron Station reports directly to the Commander of MDW. There is an organizational "chain of command" that exists from DOD at the top of the chain, to DA, then to MDW, and finally to Cameron Station. Each "link" reports directly to the organizational entity immediately above it in the chain.

[3] There being no serious factual disputes, I have adopted, to the maximum extent possible, the findings of fact proposed by Counsel for the General Counsel, with appropriate deletions and additions of my own.

3. Respondent DLA's Director reports directly to DOD. Respondents DLA and DA appear on the same level in an organizational chart. DLA is located on the premises of Cameron Station in Alexandria, Virginia and can be described as a "tenant" of Cameron Station. As the "landlord" of DLA, Cameron Station provides office and warehouse space to DLA and customary support services that are normally provided by a landlord to a tenant.

4. The Charging Party/Union is the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2449, AFL-CIO (hereinafter "Local 2449"), a labor organization within the meaning of Section 7103(a)(4). At all times material herein, the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO has been certified as the exclusive representative of two separate consolidated units of professional and non-professional employees of DLA nationwide. Local 2449 at all times material herein has been designated by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO to act as the exclusive representative for those DLA bargaining unit employees located at Cameron Station. Official notification of the delegation of authority authorizing local bargaining unit officials to act as the exclusive representative for employees in matters of local concern was transmitted to the Director of DLA on or about May 30, 1979.

5. The organizational relationship of the parties to this proceeding, as described above, may be summarized and perhaps better understood by the following chart:

Department of Defense
(an "agency")

Defense Logistics Agency* — Department of Army
("primary national subdivisions")

Military District of Washington
(an "activity")

Cameron Station (an "activity" and herein the "landlord")

*A "tenant" facility at Cameron Station, Alexandria, VA. whose employees are represented by Local 2449.

6. The allegations in this case arise from the implementation of a paid parking program at Cameron Station in the Fall of 1979. The implementation of the program was the result of government-wide regulations issued by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) and the General Services Administration (GSA) on August 17, 1979 and September 13, 1979, respectively, directing Federal agencies to implement paid parking at non-exempt facilities (where free parking existed before), as a means of promoting certain policy goals, e.g., energy conservation and cleaner air.

7. As a result of orders received on or about October 29, 1979 from MDW, the Command Officer of Cameron Station proceeded to devise and implement a paid parking program at that facility. All employees who worked on the premises of Cameron Station (regardless of the employer) and who were not exempted were required to pay a $10.00 parking fee for the month of November to park on the facility. Those non-exempt employees who had not purchased parking permits by November 10, 1979 were subject to penalties.

8. By letter dated October 9, 1979, DLA forwarded a copy of the GSA government-wide parking regulation to Local 2449. Subsequent to the receipt of this letter, the President of Local 2449, Mr. Gus Apostalakis, sent a letter dated October 16, 1979 to Captain W. I. Starrett, Jr., Commander of the DLA Administrative Support Unit, requesting negotiations concerning the paid parking program to be implemented at Cameron Station. After receiving the letter from Local 2449 dated October 16, 1979, Captain Starrett spoke with Mr. Apostalakis over the telephone and informed him of his position that he (DLA) did not have authority to enter into negotiations over the matter. Captain Starrett then put this position in writing to Mr. Apostalakis in a letter dated October 18, 1979.

9. After Mr. Apostalakis received this letter, Mr. Apostalakis and Captain Starrett had another discussion, and it was agreed that the parties would meet to discuss the matter. Officials of Local 2449 thereafter met with Captain Starrett and another DLA official on October 19, 1979. At this meeting, Local 2449 officials again requested to negotiate, but Captain Starrett refused, reiterating his position that he had no authority to negotiate the matter. Captain Starrett explained that he wasn't in a position to negotiate because DLA was a tenant on a MDW post. Throughout this meeting, Captain Starrett took the position that the purpose of the meeting was a consultation session rather than a negotiating session.

10. After this meeting, Captain Starrett sent a memo to the Post Commander of Cameron Station dated October 19, 1979 requesting a meeting and information regarding the paid parking program. In his memo, Captain Starrett made reference to the contract between DLA and Local 2449 and to "our obligations to our work force and the Union." Captain Starrett was uncertain as to whether he ever specifically communicated Local 2449's desire to negotiate to Cameron Station, but he was sure he had at least expressed the Union's concern during informal discussions. Accordingly, I find that Cameron Station was never presented with a specific request to bargain.

11. On November 11, 1979, Local 2449 filed an unfair labor practice charge against DLA alleging a refusal to bargain, copies of which were served on General Post, Captain Starrett and Mr. Frank Scutch.

12. On November 1, 1979, a meeting was held between Cameron Station and DLA officials at which time Cameron Station requested that DLA assist in the collection of parking fees from DLA employees. DLA officials agreed to assist in collecting the fees for the month of November. A memo was then issued by Captain Starrett to all DLA personnel at Cameron Station on or about November 2, 1979, detailing the DLA parking fee collection system for the month of November. Actually, DLA had devised this plan prior to the meeting with Cameron Station officials on November 1, 1979. Captain Starrett correctly had anticipated Cameron Station's request for assistance, and therefore asked the DLA Resource Management Officer to develop a fee collection system a few days prior to November 1, 1979. DLA did not meet with Local 2449, however, prior to developing the fee collection procedures for November. The fee collection method was determined without allowing Local 2449 to provide any input.

12. Captain Starrett did call Peter Morgus, (who was acting president of Local 2449 at the time) shortly after November 1 to inform Mr. Morgus that DLA would collect parking fees from employees for the month of November.[4/] Mr. Morgus voiced his objection to Captain Starrett, noting that Local 2449 had attempted to negotiate the impact and implementation of paid parking at Cameron Station. Captain Starrett responded by stating only that DLA had to do it; he did not inform Mr. Morgus of the collection procedures that were to be used or provide an opportunity for Mr. Morgus to submit comments. Mr. Morgus subsequently received the memo concerning the parking fee collection system on or about November 5, 1979 through the normal employee distribution system.

14. On or about November 8, 1979, Mr. Morgus, who was still acting as President of Local 2449, sent a letter to Captain Starrett regarding two parking spaces assigned to Local 2449 in accordance with Article XXXIX of the contract between DLA and Local 2449. The letter expressed the opinion that the two spaces should not be subject to a parking fee and warned that imposition of a fee would be regarded as abrogation of the contract. Captain Starrett agreed with Mr. Morgus that the two spaces assigned to Local 2449 pursuant to the contract were not to be charged a fee, and informed Mr. Morgus of his concurrence with this position by letter dated November 26, 1979. In his deposition, Captain Starrett stated that he was only expressing his personal opinion.

15. Captain Starrett then wrote to Colonel Briggs, the Post Commander of Cameron Station, on or about November 26, 1979, requesting that Colonel Briggs reconsider his decision to assess parking fees to Local 2449 for these two spaces.[5] Captain Starrett's letter indicated that the bargaining history and intent of both Local 2449 and DLA was that these spaces were to be free spaces, and that OMB Circular A-118 stated that any contract provision covering employee parking in effect as of August 13, 1979 shall remain in effect until the expiration of the agreement (G.C. Exh. No. 5). The Deputy Post Commander responded to Captain Starrett's letter, informing Captain Starrett that the two spaces assigned to Local 2449 were subject to the parking fees (G.C. Exh. No. 17). Colonel Briggs made the determination of his own at this time that the spaces were not to be free spaces (Tr. 80). Subsequently, on December 11, 1979 and again on December 12, 1979, Cameron Station Security Police issued a parking citation to an official of Local 2449 who had parked in one of the two assigned spaces without a valid permit (G.C. Exh. No. 12). Local 2449 officials thereafter purchased permits for the two assigned spaces.

16. Captain Starrett subsequently wrote another letter to Colonel Briggs on or about January 25, 1980, attempting once again to have Colonel Briggs reconsider his decision to assess fees for the two spaces assigned to Local 2449. Sometime after receipt of this letter, Colonel Briggs transmitted both letters from Captin Starrett concerning the two spaces to MDW for a legal interpretation. The request for a legal interpretation was then forwarded to the Department of the Army, who, in turn, responded on March 28 that the two spaces assigned to Local 2449 pursuant to the collective-bargaining agreement were not to be exempt from the parking fees (TR. 81, 82; Resp. Cameron Station Exh. No. 1). Local 2449 has continued to purchase permits for the two spaces since receiving the parking tickets in December 1979.

[5] It is not clear from the record precisely when that decision was made and communicated to DLA and Local 2449.

the implementation of the paid parking program dates back several months prior to October 29, 1979, when Cameron Station was directed to begin collecting parking fees. Mr. Francis B. Roche of the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower, Reserve Affairs and Logistics chaired a DOD working group charged with the responsibility of working out the details of the program within DOD. The Department of the Army had various individuals on this committee as representatives.

18. As early as April 1979, Mr. Roche sent a draft OMB circular to DOD components for comment. Mr. Roche then consolidated the comments received from DOD components and forwarded them to OMB in June 1979. By mid-July 1979, it was known to DOD (and to the Department of the Army through its representatives on the DOD working group) what direction the final parameters of the OMB circular would take.

19. Based on this knowledge, and its previous involvement, DOD approached OMB and reached an agreement with OMB whereby DOD real estate units would appraise the parking facilities at DOD component activities to arrive at a figure for parking charges at each facility. Having reached this agreement to conduct its own appraisals, DOD then met with officials from OMB and GSA in late July 1979, at which time DOD was given four general guidelines to use in conducting the appraisals. Neither OMB nor GSA, however, gave DOD instructions on specific appraisal techniques to be used.

20. After receiving permission to conduct its own appraisals, DOD directed its real estate appraisers on or about August 3, 1979 to take immediate steps to determine the rates to be charged for Government-furnished employee parking at military installations (G.C. Exh. No. 28). An appraiser from the Army Corps of Engineers then conducted an appraisal survey and, using his subjective judgment, based on nothing more definitive than "commonly accepted appraisal techniques", determined a value for parking at Cameron Station (G.C. Exh. No. 29). The completed survey form indicates that the appraiser went outside the area surrounding Cameron Station as there are no known commerical parking facilities nearby. At no time did DOD notify the Unions that it was carrying out the appraisal.

21. DOD (through the efforts of Mr. Roche) then developed draft parking regulations of its own which were sent to component activities for comment, including the Department of the Army, on or about September 18, 1979 (G.C. Exh. No. 26). Subsequently, on or about October 11, a DOD parking directive was issued to component activities (including the Department of the Army) which contained DOD procedures for implementing the Government-wide parking regulations (G.C. Exh. No. 27). No substantive changes were made in the October 11, 1979 document from the September 18, 1979 draft.

22. The October 11, 1979, DOD parking directive did, however, go beyond the Government-wide regulations in certain significant respects. Beyond the paramount consideration of the fee, which was not contained in the OMB or GSA regulations, DOD made an administrative determination to limit free visitor parking to 3 hours which was then binding on subordinate activities. Further, in a series of questions and answers which were attached to the DOD directive, a policy limiting rebates was outlined (G.C. Exh. No. 27).

23. The DOD parking directive was a regulation that directed, among others, the Department of the Army to implement the paid parking program at its installations. In implementing the program, the Department of the Army, through Lt. Colonel Paul T. Gerard, Jr., devised its own set of implementing instructions to guide its subordinate activities. These implementing instructions took the form of a revision to already existing Army Carpooling and Parking Regulations (G.C. Exh. Nos. 23, 24, 25).

24. Colonel Gerard began working on the Department of the Army's revised parking regulations in September 1979. Prior to this, however, Colonel Gerard was a Department of the Army representative on the DOD working group concerned with the paid parking program. His involvement with the program included a review of the draft DOD directive sometime in August or the first part of September 1979 and a subsequent submission of comments upon the completion of this review.

25. Upon receipt of the DOD directive on October 12, 1979, a message was drafted and sent to affected Army installations on October 15, 1979. This message directed affected installations (including Cameron Station) to implement a paid parking program by November 1, 1979 and included the fee to be charged (G.C. Exh. No. 13).

26. Colonel Gerard then finalized the draft of the revised Department of the Army parking regulations he had been working on and sent a copy of the draft to MDW and Cameron Station on October 17, 1979 (G.C. Exh. No. 21). Two days later an advance copy of the revised parking regulation was forwarded to MDW and Cameron Station (G.C. Exh. 22). The Department of the Army's parking regulation contained provisions of the DOD directive which went beyond the contents of the Government-wide regulations, including the limitations on visitor parking and parking fee rebates. There is no evidence, however, that the Department of the Army ever sent its parking regulation to Local 2449 for review and/or discussion.

27. MDW thereafter drafted a Letter of Instruction (LOI) to guide installations within its jurisdiction in implementing the paid parking program (G.C. Exh. No. 19). These instructions were developed pursuant to the DOD directive and the Department of the Army regulations and were then sent to Colonel Briggs at Cameron Station. The MDW Letter of Instruction, like the DOD and Department of the Army regulations, was never submitted to Local 2449, nor did MDW conduct negotiations with Local 2449 concerning MDW's implementing instructions. It should be noted, however, that MDW did provide copies of the LOI to Union representatives with which MDW holds exclusive recognition at a meeting on October 26, 1979.

Discussion and Conclusions of Law

A. The Effect of Government-wide and Agency Regulations

In my judgment, no useful purpose would be served in exploring ab initio this particular subject which has already been treated fully by Judge Arrigo in DCASR Boston, supra., and adopted by Judge Devaney in HDL, supra. Judge Arrigo's conclusions and reasoning, which I adopt, are as follows:

> "There is no contention that the OMB and GSA regulations on paid parking are negotiable matters. Indeed, it is clear that these regulations are Government-wide regulations within the meaning of Section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute, and, as such, no duty to bargain is required regarding the subject matter contained therein. However, the OMB parking regulation, while setting forth various specific instructions on paid parking, required GSA and all agencies to issue instructions relative to the implementation of the OMB regulation. DOD was, therefore, obligated to adopt the specific requirements of OMB and GSA but, nevertheless, was left discretion as to various practices and procedures relating to the implementation of the OMB and GSA regulations.
> "Sections 7117(a)(2) and (3) of the Statute govern an agency's duty to bargain with a union with regard to matters encompassed by agency wide regulations. Thus, under the Statute, an agency or a primary national subdivision of an agency is obligated to bargain with a union regarding matters encompassed by their regulations only where the union represents the majority of employees in the agency or primary national subdivision, or when the Authority has determined under 7117(b) of the Statute that no compelling need exists for the regulation ...
> "In the case herein DOD's parking regulation of October 11, 1979 and DOA's regulation of October 19, 1979 were applicable to all their subordinate bodies and I conclude the DOD regulation was an 'agency' regulation and the DOA regulation was a regulation issued by a 'primary national subdivision of such agency' within the meaning of Section 7117(a)(3) of the Statute. Further, the Union herein does not represent a majority of the employees in DOD or DOA nor has the Authority determined that no compelling need exists > for the DOD or DOA regulations in effect, the issue having never been presented to the Authority for such a determination. Accordingly, I conclude tht prior to their issuance, neither DOD nor DA was obligated to bargain ... regarding the matters which were the subject of the parking regulations referred to herein.

> "However, the DOD and DOA regulations were not self implementing. Rather, in order to be effectuated, components subordinate to DOD and DOA were required to implement them as they would affect employees within their jurisdiction. The regulations did not provide for all possible contingencies and, therefore, various area of discretion were left to the judgement of management at the level of actual employee location and union representation.
> "The Authority has held in National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA No. 119, that 'to the extent that an agency has discretion with respect to a matter affecting conditions of employment of its employees, that matter is within the duty to bargain of the agency.' Clearly, the paid parking program at the Facility is a condition of employment. Accordingly, I conclude that management was obligated under the Statute to negotiate ... to whatever extent management had discretion under applicable Government-wide and agency regulations in the implementation of the paid parking at the Facility." (DCASR, supra, pp. 12-14) (footnotes omitted) To like effect, see, also, Boston District, supra; Department of the Army, supra.)

The effect of the foregoing, as applied to the instant case, is that the regulations issued by DOD and DA were agency regulations, and that MDW and Cameron Station had discretion in their implementation.

B. Whether the Compelling Need for an Agency Regulation May be Litigated in a Section 7116 Proceeding.

The General Counsel asserts that Local 2449 may challenge the validity of agency regulations as a bar to negotiations in an unfair labor practice proceeding and it is not limited to raising such challenge in a negotiability proceeding. I disagree. This contention previously was rejected by Judge Arrigo in Boston District, supra, and by Judge Devaney in HDL, supra. I also rejected this contention recently in Defense Logistics Agency et al, 1-CA-213, OALJ-81-131 (July 7, 1981). In reaching this conclusion I adopted Judge Arrigo's views and supplemented them with additional reasoning of my own. Since these views are applicable herein, and are dispositive of General Counsel's contentions, I shall quote them as follows:

Section 7117 of the Statute has the effect of removing from the ambit of collective bargaining those matters which are the subject of a government-wide or agency-wide rule or regulation under certain circumstances. Thus, Section 7117 states as follows:

> "§7117. Duty to bargain in good faith; compelling need; duty to consult
> "(a)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, the duty to bargain in good faith shall, to the extent not inconsistent with any Federal law or any Government-wide rule or regulation only if the rule or regulation is not a Government-wide rule or regulation.
> "(2) The duty to bargain in good faith shall, to the extent not inconsistent with Federal law or any Government-wide rule or regulation, extend to matters which are the subject of any agency rule or regulation referred to in paragraph (3) of this subsection only if the Authority has determined under subsection (b) of this section that no compelling need (as determined under regulations prescribed by the Authority) exists for the rule or regulation.
> "(3) Paragraph (2) of the subsection applies to any rule or regulation issued by any agency or issued by any primary national subdivision of such agency, unless an exclusive representative represents an appropriate unit including not less than a majority of the employees in the issuing agency or primary national subdivision, as the case may be, to whom the rule or regulation is applicable.

The regulations prescribed by the Authority are set forth in Part 2424 of the Rules and Regulations. There is no dispute that the Unions herein failed to utilize the procedures established by the Board to resolve issues concerning "compelling need."

Respondent contends that Section 7117 of the Statute is a bar to negotiations because DLAR 5500.1 is an agency-wide regulation and the Authority has not made a determination that "no compelling need" exists for the regulation. I find merit to this defense. Indeed, I specifically find and conclude that Part 2424 of the Rules and Regulations is the exclusive procedure wherein the Authority may determine whether compelling need exists for an agency-wide regulation.

To begin with, a literal reading of the statutory language makes clear that it is "only if the Authority has determined" (past tense) that no compelling need exists for an agency-wide regulation that the duty to bargain even arises. Thus, an initial determination by the Authority pursuant to its prescribed procedures is a condition precedent which must be satisfied before a determination can be made that a duty to bargain in fact exists. The Authority's function under Section 7117 is to determine whether the agency-wide regulation is a bar to negotiations. Stated differently, the Authority's role is to resolve a "negotiability" issue; its role is not to resolve the underlying "obligation to bargain" in the same proceeding.

The General Counsel contends, however, that the issue of "compelling need" may be resolved in an unfair labor practice proceeding. I reject this contention for the same reasons stated by Judge Arrigo in Boston District Recruiting Command, Boston, Massachusetts, Case No. 1-CA-206 et. al, OALJ-81-023, at pp. 13-15, (December 22, 1980). In that case, Judge Arrigo concluded as follows:

> Counsel for the General Counsel also suggests ... that if the agency regulation stands as a bar to negotiations, then the proceeding herein served to put the issue of compelling need before the Authority for determination. In my view neither the Statute nor the Authority's regulations appear to envision this approach. Indeed, section 7117(b)(3) of the Statute provides that where a hearing is held to make a determination of compelling need, it, '... shall not include the General Counsel as a party.' Accordingly, to combine a compelling need determination with an unfair labor practice proceeding, where the General Counsel has the responsibility of presenting the evidence in support of the complaint and carries the burden of proving the allegations of the complaint, would run contrary to Statutory prohibition. Therefore, Counsel for General Counsel's contention is rejected." (footnote omitted).

Therefore, based upon the foregoing reasoning, I conclude that the Authority does not even have the option of litigating the compelling need issue in a Section 7116 proceeding where the General Counsel is a party.

When the Union first learned of the issuance of this agency-wide regulation, it could have sought a determination by the Authority on the compelling need issue. Regardless of which way the Authority decided the case, it is my opinion that its decision would have removed an impediment to meaningful negotiations and may have assisted in paving the way to voluntary settlement of the unfair labor practice issues. Even if a Section 7116 proceeding could not be avoided altogether, the issues to be litigated might well be narrowed and simplified. In short, the Statutory scheme of providing an expedited forum before the Authority, without the presence of the General Counsel, makes sense.

In an excellent brief filed by Counsel for the General Counsel, the contention is made that the compelling need aspects of Section 7116(a)(2) are only applicable in cases where an agency invokes an existing rule or regulation as a bar to negotiations. It is argued that the present case should be viewed as a unilateral change (or revision) of an existing regulation. Accordingly, it is argued that this issue may be litigated in a Section 7116 proceeding and that "the compelling need provisions of the Statute are in reality not applicable to the facts of this case." I disagree. The problem with this theory is that its practical effect is to prevent an agency "from acting at all", that is, issuing a regulation containing a change in conditions of employment. Moreover, under this theory, even if an agency informed a Union and proposed putting into effect an agency-wide regulation, and the Union failed to seek a compelling need determination from the Authority, the agency still would be required to act at its peril and risk the allegation that it violated the Act, if it decided to make the regulation effective nothwithstanding the Union's inaction. While it is true that the legislative history does not envision that an agency may unilaterally remove issues from the bargaining table merely by issuing regulations, it does not follow that an agency is prohibited from acting at all. Section 7117(b)(1) and (2) clearly contemplate that agencies may issue regulations prior to their being put to a compelling need challenge. Thus, Section 7117(b)(1) refers to an exclusive representative challenging a regulation "which is then in effect" and Section 7117(b)(2)(A) refers in the past tense to an agency "which issued" the rule or regulation. It follows, therefore, that the Authority is not deprived of jurisdiction in a Part 2424 proceeding simply because the agency regulation involves a "unilateral" change.

Furthermore, if a union were permitted to litigate compelling need issues in an unfair labor practice proceeding with the aid of the General Counsel, it would mean the union had a choice of forums and could choose to by-pass the expedited forum designated by the Authority in Part 2424 of the Rules and Regulations. I concede that Sections 2423.5 and 2426.5 of the Rules and Regulations may raise some doubt as to my interpretation. However, I believe that the last sentence in those sections is intended to reserve to the Authority exclusive jurisdiction of (1) all compelling need issues and (2) those negotiability issues which, because no action has been taken, may not form the basis for a possible unfair labor practice and therefore may not be litigated in a Section 7116 proceeding. I further note that even in cases where a party elects to file a negotiability petition and is referred by the Authority to a Section 7116 proceeding it is because (1) the Respondent denies any changes occurred or (2) resolution of the dispute is dependent upon the resolution of factual issues related to the parties' conduct, both of which are more related to the underlying obligation to bargain. National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 66, 6 FLRA No. 16. Since neither of these situations obtains here, I believe the Authority could have made a "compelling need" determination had the Union only invoked the expedited procedures of Part 2424.

Finally, I would observe that, in the absence of a clear delegation from the Authority, I am reluctant to assume that I have the authority to make compelling need determinations in an unfair labor practice proceeding. And, unless I have that authority, an agency will be foreclosed from ever obtaining such a determination since, as noted above, it cannot initiate a petition for review under Section 2424.2 of the Rules and Regulations. The net result of this discussion is that the agency regulation is a bar to negotiations.

C. Respondent DLA's Obligation to Negotiate the Impact and Implementation of Paid Parking

1. As noted above, the DOD and DA regulations were not self implementing. In order to be effectuated, components subordinate to DOD and DA were required to implement these as they would affect employees within their jurisdiction. DLA had a duty to notify Local 2449 and bargain upon request concerning the impact and implementation of the paid parking program because DLA is the Activity with which Local 2449 had a contract and for whose employees Local 2449 was the exclusive representative.

2. Local 2449, through its President, made a timely request to bargain which was refused by DLA through its agent, Captain Starrett. By such conduct, DLA violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

3. Respondent DLA's principal defense is that it was only a tenant at Cameron Station and therefore lacked the authority to bargain about this particular subject matter. There is a significant difference, however, between an agent lacking authority and an agent not having an obligation to bargain. In a recent negotiability decision,[7] the Authority rejected an Agency argument that it had no duty to bargain because it was inappropriate for negotiations to proceed at the local level since it intended to retain authority over such matters at the Agency level. The Authority held that the Agency's allegation "does not relate to the bases for finding that a proposal is not within the duty to bargain under Section 7117" and, further, that Section 7114(b)(2) includes the obligation for an agency to be represented at negotiations "by representatives who ae empowered to negotiate and enter into agreements on all matters within the scope of negotiations" in the bargaining unit. In other words, the Authority correctly pointed out to the Agency that the obligation to bargain encompassed the obligation to appoint representatives who are empowered to negotiate. Respondent's defense is accordingly rejected. It was incumbent upon DLA to obtain the requisite authority for itself or arrange for bargaining between Local 2449 and an agent empowered to negotiate. While it is not my responsibility to suggest how this could be accomplished I feel compelled to observe that a chain of command is a two-way street. It can be utilized from top to bottom for issuance of circulars, regulations, directives, and LOI; it can be used in reverse order for transmitting input to higher echelon and for obtaining advisory opinions, as was done in this case by Colonel Briggs who sought advice as to whether Local 2449's revised parking spaces were "free." In like manner, why couldn't DLA request its immediately higher level organization DOD to ensure that DOD instructs its agent DA, to instruct its agent MDW, to instruct its agent Cameron Station, to make appropriate arrangements whereby another DOD agent (DLA) is not left holding the bag with no authority to negotiate on the subject of paid parking? If the facts were different and it were shown that DOD refused a request from DLA to intervene for the purpose of resolving this conflict, I would agree that DOD should share liability for DLA's violation either as a joint tortfeasor or on a principal-agent theory. However, that does not appear to be the case.

D. Respondent Cameron Station's Implementation of the Paid Parking Program was a Violation of Section 7116(a)(1) but not Section 7116(a)(5).

Respondent Cameron Station implemented the paid parking program at its facility through the issuance of formal memoranda to employees located at Cameron Station (G.C. Exh. Nos. 14, 15). It is undisputed that these memoranda were issued without prior notice to the Union, but a legal issue which must be resolved is whether or not Cameron Station had any legal obligation to provide Local 2449 with such notice. While the desire on the part of Local 2449 to bargain was not specifically made known to Cameron Station, the Post Commander was nevertheless aware of the fact that a labor orgnization represented a group of DLA employees located on his post that would be affected by paid parking. A letter was sent to Colonel Briggs, the Post Commander, dated October 19, 1979, which noted that paid parking would have implications for the contract between DLA and Local 2449 (G.C. Exh. No. 4). Notwithstanding such knowledge, Cameron Station implemented the paid parking program which immediately affected DLA and its employees.

The General Counsel contends that Cameron Station inhibited the collective bargaining process by acting without giving due consideration to Local 2449's right to negotiate over the impact and implementation of the paid parking program. On the factual situation presented herein, I am constrained to find that Cameron Station violated Section 7116(a)(1) because its conduct did in fact, interfere with the rights of DLA employees to exercise their collective bargaining rights set forth in the Statute. However, I am not persuaded that this same conduct constitutes a violation of Section 7116(a)(5) which makes it an unfair labor practice for an agency "to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with a labor organization as required by this chapter." The principal reason for my reaching this conclusion is that Cameron Station does not owe any duty to bargain to Local 2449 since it does not have an exclusive representative relationship with Local 2449. It is only when an agency has an obligation to bargain that it also has the concomitant obligation to provide a Union with adequate advance notice of a change in conditions of employment so that the Union has a reasonable opportunity to request negotiations.

I agree with the position taken by Intervenor in its excellent brief in the HDL case that Naval Air Rework, as Executive Order case, is of doubtful validity by virtue of the enactment of the Statute. In any event, it is not applicable herein because Cameron Station is not in the same chain of command and therefore is not a higher level part of "agency management" vis-a-vis DLA. Nor can Naval Air Rework be relied upon as a defense to my finding of a Section 7116(a)(1) violation for even though it is a subordinate activity of DOD and therefore an agent of DOD, its conduct was not "ministerial" when it implemented the paid parking program. Thus, close analysis discloses that Cameron Station simply does not occupy a position similar to either the agency or activity in Naval Air Rework. In fact, Cameron Station is a third party vis-a-vis its relationship to DLA and Local 2449 who have a contractual relationship. Essentially what I am deciding is that a third party cannot stand in the shoes of a contractual party and be said to have violated Section 7116(a)(5) but this does not mean that its conduct cannot independently constitute interference with a contractual relationship in violation of Section 7116(a)(1).

E. Whether DOD, DA and/or MDW Share in Cameron Station's Liability for Violating Section 7116(a)(1).

In my opinion, DOD and DA clearly are free of any liability. Their agency regulations were a bar to negotiations. The responsibility for implementing these regulations was with subordinate activities like MDW and Cameron Station and it is their conduct which was at issue. I agree with the General Counsel that MDW's regulation does not fall within the purview of an agency regulation within the meaning of Section 7117. But I fail to see why MDW should be saddled with an unfair labor practice by virtue of Cameron Station's conduct simply because it is a higher level activity in that chain of command, unless the Authority decides to use the single employer theory. I am not persuaded by the evidence that MDW required Cameron Station to act as it did in precipitously implementing the paid parking program. In my view, Cameron Station had considerable discretion in implementing the program; it was a free agent and is solely responsible for its conduct. Indeed, the arguments in General Counsel's brief (at p. 15) explaining why Cameron Station's actions were not "ministerial" is precisely the reason why it alone is responsible and why MDW cannot be held to share liability.

In concluding that DOD, DA, and MDW are free from liability, I would be remiss if I did not point out that a different conclusion was reached by Judge Arrigo in DCASR Boston, supra, a similar situation involving a landlord (Ft. Devens) and a tenant (DCASR), each in a different chain of command, but with each having DOD at the top of the chain. Judge Arrigo concluded that "DOD, as the parent organization of all these subordinate activities and a moving party through the issuance of its parking regulations, was inextricably involved in the situation" and further, that only DOD "has the authority to resolve the predicament in which it was enmeshed" with its subordinate components which Judge Arrigo characterized as a "joint enterprise".

While I do not disagree with Judge Arrigo's approach in DCASR, I reach a different conclusion because I feel compelled to do so by the Authority's continued adherence to the doctrine enumciated by the Federal Labor Relations Council's in Naval Air Rework which (1) did not consider utilizing a single employer concept and (2) did not treat the lower level activity as an agent/accomplice to the unfair labor practice committed by the parent agency at a higher organizational level. Instead, Naval Air Rework viewed the conduct of each activity in isolation from the other when the Council stated that the "acts and conduct of agency management at a higher level of an agency's organization may provide the basis for finding a violation of any part of Section 19(a) of the Order by 'agency management,' but may not, standing alone, provide the basis for finding a separate violation by 'agency management' at a lower organizational level of the agency where a unit of exclusive recognition exist." (Emphasis in original). In reaching my conclusions in the instant case concerning the respective liability of the named Respondents I have, in effect, followed the Council's "standing alone" test.

These paid parking cases of Judges Arrigo, Devaney, and myself present novel legal issues and are significant in that they aptly illustrate what has been described as "the problem of identifying the proper respondent."[8]

F. Respondent Cameron Station Violated Section 7116(a)(1) By Unilaterally Assessing Parking Fees To Local 2449 For The Two Spaces Assigned To It

Local 2449 had been assigned two parking spaces at Cameron Station pursuant to Article XXXIX of the contract between Local 2449 and DLA. Upon implementation of the paid parking program, and prior to November 26, Colonel Briggs of Cameron Station assessed parking fees for these two spaces and officials of Local 2249 received parking tickets for parking in the spaces without having purchased a parking permit. Officials of Local 2449 have purchased monthly permits since receiving these tickets. The General Counsel contends that assessment of these fees ignored the valid contractual agreement in effect between Local 2449 and DLA and therefore violates the Statute.

OMB Circular No. A-118 expressly states that the policy to institute parking fees was not to be interpreted to render null and void any valid negotiated agreement covering any provision of employee parking in effect on the effective date of the Circular (G.C. Exh. No. 8). Article XXXIX of the contract thus remained in full force and effect upon the implementation of the paid parking program and Cameron Station could not change it anymore than DLA could. Moreover, the contracting parties themselves - DLA and Local 2449 - both regarded Article XXXIX as providing two free spaces, (I need not decide whether their interpretation was correct). This mutual interpretation of the agreement was communicated to Colonel Briggs by Captain Starrett in two different letters. Notwithstanding the position of the two parties to the contract, Colonel Briggs unilaterally determined that Local 2449 should pay for these spaces. This action by Colonel Briggs is a blatant abrogation by an outside third party of a term and condition of employment agreed to between the two parties to a valid collective bargaining agreement.

In my opinion, it would effectuate the purposes of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute to protect this collective bargaining relationship from interference by a third-party government agency. Accordingly, I concluded that Cameron Station violated Section 7116(a)(1) by interfering with the collective bargaining relationship of DLA and Local 2449. However, I do not find this conduct also violated Section 7116(a)(5) for the same reasons discussed earlier.

The foregoing unfair labor practice took place prior to the November 26 letter from Captain Starrett requesting reconsideration by Colonel Briggs of his decision. Thereafter, in January, Captain Starrett again wrote a letter requesting reconsideration. At the hearing, the General Counsel learned for the first time[9] that Colonel Briggs - after receiving Captain Starrett's second letter - sent both of Captain Starrett's letters to MDW for a legal interpretation. This request was in turn forwarded to DA which responded in March that the Union's reserved parking spaces were not free. Thus, we have a situation where an unfair labor practice in November 1979 continued in effect through March 1980 at which time it could very well have ceased at the direction of higher authority had DA concluded that Cameron Station had acted improperly in the first instance. Such a conclusion by DA surely would have permitted it to escape liability (1) by not joining in the unfair labor practice and (2) by ordering Cameron Station to cease requiring the Union to pay for the parking spaces. Instead, DA (the principal) chose to place its stamp of approval on the conduct of Cameron Station (its agent) and by allowing the unlawful interference to continue, DA thereby condoned Cameron Station's unlawful conduct. It follows from this that DA also violated Section 7116(a)(1) by interfering with the contractual relationship of DLA and Local 2449, by requiring Local 2449 to continue paying for the reserved parking spaces. Finally, turning now to MDW, I think it would ill behoove MDW to defend its role in this incident by asserting that it was merely a middleman or conduit between Cameron Station and DA. It played a part in this process - as principal or agent or both - and should not be permitted to escape liability. I find that MDW also violated Section 7116(a)(1).

G. Summary

Having found that Department of Defense did not violate the Statute I recommend that the Complaint be dismissed as to it. Having found no violations of Section 7116(a)(5) against any Respondent, except DLA, I recommend dismissal of the allegations against all other Respondents.

Having found that Headquarters, Defense Logistics Agency violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) by refusing to bargain with Local 2449 of AFGE, about implementation of the paid parking program I recommend the Authority issue a separate Order applicable to this Respondent, as set forth below.

Having found that Department of the Army, Headquarters, U.S. Army Military District of Washington, and Cameron Station each violated

[9] At this juncture in the hearing, the General Counsel moved to amend the Complaint to add DA and MDW as Respondents for this additional alleged violation relating to the two parking spaces. Since this evidence was not made available to the General Counsel during the investigation, and since it is related to the basic allegations in the charges, and since there appears to be no basis for claiming surprise, unfairness, or prejudice, the motion is hereby granted.

Section 7116(a)(1) by interfering with the contractual relationship between Headquarters Defense Logistics Agency and AFGE Local 2449, and in the interest of not unduly complicated this decision with individually tailored orders and notices, I recommend that these Respondents only be required to sign one Notice to Employees, as set forth below.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by the parties. The issue is whether the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) when it (1) refused to authorize payments for travel and per diem for negotiators of the Charging Party (the Union) as required by the terms of the parties' negotiated agreements and (2) when it refused to negotiate over a change in the site of negotiations being held pursuant to certain of those agreements.

II. Background Facts

The Respondent and the Charging Party were parties to a collective bargaining agreement effective from August 29, 1981, to August 29, 1984, the mandatory provisions of which have continued in full force and effect, and to ground rules agreements pertaining to the implementation of a field reorganization, mid-term negotiations regarding certain specified matters and implementation of EEOC Order 131, each of which provided for the payment of travel and per diem expenses for Union representatives at negotiations held pursuant to the provisions of those agreements. Since December 1983, the Respondent has refused to authorize payments for travel and per diem expenses as provided for by those agreements. Since January 1984, the Respondent refused to bargain with the Charging Party over a change in the site of negotiations held pursuant to the ground rules agreements applied to the negotiations at issue.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent contends that the provisions in the parties' agreements authorizing the payment of travel and per diem were "for informational purposes only" pursuant to the Authority's Interpretation and Guidance, 2 FLRA 265 (1979), rather than a result of negotiations. Respondent further argues that its subsequent refusal to authorize payments was a result of the United States Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), wherein the Court found that section 7131(a) of the Statute does not entitle employees on official time to the payment of travel and per diem expenses. Moreover, Respondent contends that the payment of travel and per diem is not a negotiable condition of employment and was not appropriate under applicable law and regulation (Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5702 and implementing regulations of the Office of Personnel Management).

As to its refusal to negotiate on changes in the sites of negotiations, Respondent contends that the sites were mutually agreed to by the parties and that there was no obligation to negotiate changes in those agreements.

The General Counsel contends that travel and per diem is a mandatory subject of bargaining which when in an agreement may not be lawfully rejected or unilaterally altered, and that Respondent made the determination required by applicable law and regulation when it included the provisions in the agreement.

As to the refusal to negotiate a change in the site of negotiations, the General Counsel argues that changed circumstances, i.e., the Supreme Court's decision in BATF, obligates the Respondent to negotiate, notwithstanding the existence of an agreement, on where the negotiations would occur. The General Counsel seeks as a remedy, reimbursement to Union representatives for their travel and per diem expenses.

IV. Analysis

As to the Respondent's reliance on the United States Supreme Court's decision in BATF, following that decision the Authority decided in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), slip op. at pp. 6-7, petition for review filed sub nom., Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 85-1198, (D. C. Cir., March 27, 1986), that a union's proposal which would require an agency to pay travel and per diem expenses incurred by employees using official time, while not an entitlement under the Statute, is within the duty to bargain as it is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. To refuse to give effect to such provisions in a collective bargaining agreement is violative of section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute. See Department of Defense Dependents School System, 21 FLRA No. 125 (1986). The Respondent's contention that the provisions were in the agreement "for informational purposes" is not a basis for a different conclusion. The provisions authorizing travel and per diem expenses had been incorporated into the terms of the parties' collective bargaining agreement and the record in this case does not support a conclusion that the parties intended the provisions to encompass the payment of the expenses only as long as the Respondent was required to pay them under the Authority's Interpretation and Guidance. Since the provisions negotiated by the parties do not violate law or government-wide regulation, the parties were therefore obligated to adhere to those provisions during the term of their agreement which the parties stipulated continued in full force and effect. Accordingly, the Respondent's unilateral refusal to comply with agreed-upon provisions for the payment of travel and per diem was inconsistent with the good faith bargaining obligation and constitutes a violation of the Statute.

We do not however, believe that the Respondent's refusal to negotiate on changes in the sites of the negotiations was violative of the Statute. As the parties describe in their briefs, the sites of the negotiations were established in the respective agreements of the parties. While those agreements presupposed that the Respondent would be paying travel and per diem expenses, the refusal to pay such expenses does not create a circumstance where the Respondent was obligated to bargain on a change in the agreement.

V. Conclusion

The Authority finds that the Respondent's refusal to comply with the parties' collective bargaining agreement and ground rules agreements providing for the payment of travel and per diem is violative of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. To remedy this unfair labor practice, we shall order the Respondent to abide by the terms of the agreements at issue and to pay travel and per diem to all bargaining unit employees who previously submitted or who submit appropriate claims for such payments under the terms of the agreement. Such payments must be consistent, not only with the terms of the parties' agreements, but also with law and regulation, including the Federal Travel Regulations.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is ordered that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to comply with the terms of collective bargaining agreements negotiated with the National Council of EEOC, Locals No. 216, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, the exclusive representative of its employees, which provide for the payment of travel and per diem expenses, thereby failing and refusing to bargain in good faith.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Comply with collective bargaining agreements negotiated with the National Council of EEOC Locals, No. 216, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, which provide for the payment of travel and per diem expenses to its representatives.

(b) Pay travel and per diem expenses to all bargaining unit employees who previously submitted or who submit appropriate claims for such payments under the terms of collective bargaining agreements, to the extent that such payments are consistent with the terms of the collective bargaining agreement and law and regulation, including the Federal Travel Regulations.

(c) Post at its facilities where bargaining unit employees represented by the National Council of EEOC Locals, No. 216, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, are located, copies of the attached

Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed by the Respondent and the General Counsel to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The Respondent filed an opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions and cross-exceptions and the General Counsel filed an opposition to the Respondent's exceptions. The complaint alleged that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) when it failed to comply with the provisions of section 7122(b) of the Statute by refusing to implement an arbitration award clarifying an earlier award dealing with an employee's termination from employment.

II. Facts

A grievance over the termination of Richard Frontera, an employee at the Respondent's Ray Brook, New York facility (FCI, Ray Brook), was filed pursuant to the parties' negotiated grievance procedure and the matter was submitted to arbitration. On December 16, 1983, Arbitrator Dale S. Beach found that there was not just and sufficient cause for the adverse action taken. He issued an award that reduced the penalty to a 60 calendar day suspension and ordered that "[w]ithin 10 calendar days of receipt of this Award Mr. Frontera shall be reinstated to his regular job without the loss of any employee benefits." The award also provided for backpay to June 10, 1982, the date of discharge, less pay for the 60-day suspension, and less any possible unemployment compensation or wages received from other employment during the period of discharge. Upon receipt of the December 16th award, the Respondent determined that an appeal should not be filed. It also decided that Frontera would be returned to work in a location other than FCI, Ray Brook. The Respondent did not request the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) to take the necessary steps to perfect an appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit in accordance with the provisions of section 7121(f) of the Statute and 5 U.S.C. § 7703(d).

The Respondent decided not to return Frontera to FCI, Ray Brook. Rather, the Respondent reassigned him to the United States Penitentiary, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania (USP, Lewisburg). This was done despite vigorous objection by the Charging Party (the Union) that this would not satisfy the arbitrator's award. The Union contacted Arbitrator Beach on February 7, 1984, and sought an interpretation of his order that the Respondent "reinstate Frontera to his regular job without the loss of any employee benefits." The Respondent did not receive proper notice of the request for clarification.

On March 1, 1984, without providing the Respondent an opportunity to be heard, Arbitrator Beach issued a Clarification of Award, holding that Frontera should be reinstated to his regular job as Cook-Foreman at FCI, Ray Brook, without the loss of any employee benefits. In his clarification, Arbitrator Beach explained that "[t]he use of the term 'regular job' in my award means regular job at the Federal Correctional Institution at Ray Brook, New York. Normally when arbitrators say 'regular job' they mean the same job at the same location held by the grievant before his discharge."

The Respondent did not request OPM to take the necessary steps to perfect an appeal of the clarified award to the Federal Circuit. Instead, the Respondent refused compliance and filed exceptions to the clarified award with the Authority. The Respondent admits that the award as clarified has not been implemented.

On June 29, 1984, the Authority in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3882 and Federal Prison System, Ray Brook, New York, 15 FLRA 204 (1984), dismissed the Respondent's exceptions, noting that it had no jurisdiction to review the case, as the arbitration award involved a section 7121(f) matter, and referred the Respondent to its right to seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 7703. The Respondent's motion for reconsideration was denied by the Authority on December 11, 1984, on the same grounds.

The assignment of Frontera to USP, Lewisburg, represented an economic and personal burden for him. He did begin working at Lewisburg in early 1984, but resigned on March 2, 1985, due to such hardship.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge, contrary to the Respondent's contentions, concluded that the Authority had jurisdiction to order compliance with section 7121(f) arbitration awards. The Judge found that the sentence in section 7122 mandating that agencies "shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award" refers to arbitration awards reviewed by the Authority, and to adverse action arbitration awards reviewable by the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

The Judge further found that the charge in this case was timely filed, finding that the record, at a minimum, establishes that OPM received notice of the clarified award through the Respondent, and that OPM thereafter took no action to intervene in the arbitration proceeding for the purpose of requesting reconsideration as a step toward appeal to the Federal Circuit. Since more than 30 days passed after OPM's receipt of notice, OPM's right to proceed further was extinguished. Therefore, the clarified award became final and binding. He concluded that the charge in this case was filed well within six months of the date on which the clarified award became final and binding, and within the six-month period prescribed by section 7118(a)(4) of the Statute.

The Judge concluded that because the record clearly showed that the Respondent did not comply with the March 1, 1984 clarified award after it became final and binding, the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. The Judge found it unnecessary to pass upon whether such conduct was also violative of section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute. The Judge ordered that the Respondent comply with the clarified award and make Frontera whole, consistent with applicable law and regulation, for any loss of pay he may have suffered by reason of his separation (resignation) from Federal service brought about by the Respondent's unlawful conduct, and pay to him a sum equal to the amount he would have earned or received from the date of his separation to the effective date of the offer of reinstatement, less any amount earned through other employment during this period of time. The Judge also ordered the Respondent to make Frontera whole, consistent with law and regulation, for any monetary losses incurred as a result of the Respondent's assignment of Frontera to USP, Lewisburg, for which he has not otherwise been reimbursed.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent asserts in its exceptions that: (1) the Authority does not have jurisdiction under section 7122(b) of the Statute to enforce the award of an arbitrator issued pursuant to section 7121(e) and (f) of the Statute; (2) the charge in this case was filed more than six months after the alleged unfair labor practice occurred; (3) the March 1, 1984 clarified award did not constitute in itself an enforceable award because proper service of the request for clarification by the Union was never received by the Respondent and because it had no opportunity to be heard prior to its issuance; (4) the award violated management's reserved right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. The Respondent also excepted to the Judge's remedy, questioning whether the complaint should have been found to include the matter of Frontera's resignation, and whether the remedy exceeds the Authority's powers. The Respondent also objected to several of the Judge's evidentiary rulings and findings of fact.

The General Counsel excepted to the Judge's finding that it was unnecessary to pass upon whether the conduct found to be violative of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the the Statute also violated section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute. The General Counsel also excepted to the Judge's ruling denying its motion to amend the complaint to include the allegation that the Respondent's action was also contrary to section 7121 of the Statute. Finally, the General Counsel renewed its arguments in support of the Judge's rationale as to the timeliness of the unfair labor practice charge.

V. Analysis

In agreement with the Judge, the Authority finds that it does have jurisdiction to order compliance with section 7121(f) arbitration awards. In a recent case, issued subsequent to the Judge's Decision, United States Army Adjutant General Publications Center, St. Louis, Missouri, 22 FLRA No. 20 (1986), the Authority resolved this very issue. It held that, while the Authority does not have jurisdiction to review exceptions to the merits of an arbitrator's award falling within section 7121(f) of the Statute, once such an award has become final and binding, the Authority has jurisdiction over matters of compliance with the award in an unfair labor practice proceeding.

We agree with the Judge that the clarified award in this case became final and binding at the expiration of 30 days after OPM's receipt of notice of the award, and that the unfair labor practice charge in this case was filed within the six-month period required by section 7118(a)(4) of the Statute.

The Respondent's exceptions also raise issues as to: (1) the lack of proper service of the request for clarification and the resulting lack of an opportunity to be heard by the Arbitrator, and (2) the alleged interference with management's reserved rights under section 7106 of the Statute. We find, as did the Judge, that these issues are not litigable in this unfair labor practice proceeding, but are matters that go to the merits of the award that may only be raised within the appeals procedures established by Congress. See United States Army Adjutant General Publications Center, cited above.

There is no dispute that the Respondent has not complied with the March 1, 1984 clarified award of Arbitrator Beach, which as we have found became final and binding when no timely action was taken by the Director of OPM under section 7703(d) of Title 5, United States Code. Recognizing that the Authority has jurisdiction to order compliance with the Arbitrator's award in this unfair labor practice proceeding, the Authority finds that the Respondent's noncompliance is in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.[1]

VI. Remedy

The Authority finds that the Judge's recommended remedy is appropriate in the circumstances of this case. In this regard, while we affirm the Judge's ruling that the General Counsel's motion to amend the complaint be denied, we agree that the Judge's finding upon which he fashioned his recommended remedy fell within the scope of the complaint.

The Arbitrator's award obligated the Respondent to reinstate employee Frontera to his former position at FCI, Ray Brook, New York. The Respondent ordered him to report to USP, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania. The record shows that Frontera and the Charging Party on his behalf went to great lengths in an attempt to persuade the Respondent that the reassignment would be a hardship. While the Respondent gave the reason that in cases such as Frontera's it was Bureau policy to reassign the employee, it also insisted that in its opinion the reassignment was not precluded by the Arbitrator's award. The Arbitrator's clarification clearly showed that the reassignment was inconsistent with the award.

The Judge's finding that the Respondent's failure to comply with the award caused Frontera's resignation is supported by the record. Accordingly, we find that, but for the Respondent's refusal to comply with the Arbitrator's award, Frontera would not have resigned from Federal service. We shall adopt the Judge's recommended Order. See Department of the Treasury, United States Customs Service, New York Region, New York, New York, 21 FLRA No. 119 (1986).

[1] In view of this conclusion, the Authority finds it unnecessary to pass upon whether the Respondent also violated section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute and denies the General Counsel's exception to the Judge's Decision in this regard.

VII. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions and cross-exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties, and the entire record,[2] and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommended Order. We conclude that the Respondent's refusal to reinstate Frontera to his regular job at FCI, Ray Brook, New York, without the loss of any employee benefits, as required by Arbitrator Beach's award, which had become final and binding, constituted a failure to comply with the Arbitrator's award and a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the United States Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons, Washington, D.C., and Bureau of Prisons, Federal Correctional Institution, Ray Brook, New York, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to implement the March 1, 1984 Clarification of Award issued in FMCS Case No. 82K/24082 by Arbitrator Dale S. Beach, by failing and refusing to reinstate Richard Frontera to his regular job as a Cook-Foreman at the Federal Correctional Institution, Ray Brook, New York.

[2] The Respondent, subsequent to the filing of its exceptions, filed several requests that the Authority take notice of various decisions of the Merit Systems Protection Board and the Federal Courts. These requests have in each instance been vigorously opposed by the General Counsel. While the Authority does not wish to discourage parties from bringing to our attention relevant case law, citations to authority which are cumulative or which seek only to supplement arguments already made do not enhance the record. To the extent that the Respondent's requests raise anything new, they have been considered.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and polices of the Statute:

(a) Comply with the March 1, 1984 Clarification of Award issued in FMCS Case No. 82K/24082 by Arbitrator Dale S. Beach, by offering to reinstate Richard Frontera to his regular job as a Cook-Foreman at the Federal Correctional Institution, Ray Brook, New York, without prejudice to his seniority or other rights or privileges.

(b) Make Richard Frontera whole, consistent with applicable laws and regulations, for any loss of pay he may have suffered by reason of his separation from Federal service brought about by Respondent's unlawful conduct, and pay to him a sum equal to the amount he would have earned or received from the date of his separation (resignation) on March 2, 1985, to the effective date of the offer of reinstatement, less any amount earned through other employment during this period of time.

(c) Consistent with law and regulation, make Richard Frontera whole for any monetary losses incurred as a result of Respondent's assignment of Richard Frontera to the United States Penitentiary, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, and for which he has not otherwise been reimbursed.

(d) Post at its Washington, D.C. and Ray Brook, New York facilities, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Director, Bureau of Prisons, Washington, D.C., or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director of Region I, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with the Order.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 30, 1986.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This case arose as an unfair labor practice proceeding under the provisions of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq. (hereinafter referred to as "the Statute"), and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

The complaint alleged that since on or about March 1, 1984, and continuing to March 12, 1985, the date on which the complaint was issued, the United States Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons, Washington, D.C.; and Bureau of Prisons, Federal Correctional Institution, Ray Brook, New York (Respondent), failed to comply with the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 7122(b) of the Statute, by refusing to implement a clarified arbitration award issued by Arbitrator Dale S. Beach on March 1, 1984 for the purpose of clarifying an earlier arbitration award issued by Arbitrator Beach on December 16, 1983, in Case No. 82K/24082. The complaint further alleged that the conduct outlined violated Section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute.[1]

[1] Counsel representing the General Counsel based the Section 7116(a)(8) violation upon alleged failure to comply with the provisions of Section 7122(b) of the Statute. However, in a post-hearing motion counsel representing the General Counsel moved to amend paragraph 17 of the complaint so as to include alleged failure to comply with the provisions of "5 U.S.C. 7121(f) and/or 5 U.S.C. 7121(b)(3)(C)," as a basis for the Section 7116(a)(8) violation. The motion also requested minor inconsequential amendments relating to Section 17(a) of the complaint. In this regard, it was requested that the phrase, "Since on or about March 1, 1984, and continuing to date, Respondent by its agent and representatives have failed and continue to fail to reinstate Richard Frontera . . . ." be modified to allege, "Since on or about March 1, 1984, and continuing to date Respondent by its agents and representatives has failed and continues to fail to reinstate Richard Frontera . . . ."

Section 2423.12(d) of the Regulations, 5 C.F.R. 2423.12(d), provides in part: "A complaint may be amended upon such terms as may be deemed just . . . at the hearing and until the case has been transmitted to the Authority pursuant to § 2423.26, upon motion by the Administrative Law Judge designated to conduct the hearing . . . ."

Counsel representing the Respondent interposed objection to the motion to amend the complaint. Since the record does not indicate that Respondent was given specific notice in the complaint or at the hearing, that the General Counsel was relying upon Section 7121(f) or Section 7121(b)(3)(C) as basis for a Section 7116(a)(8) violation, and since the parties did not otherwise litigate issues relating to this prosecutive theory, it is determined that the motion to include these statutory provisions in Paragraph 17 of the Complaint must be denied. Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, 9 FLRA No. 31 (1982), 9 FLRA 199; Social Security Administration, 16 FLRA No. 148 (1984), 16 FLRA 1135. However, the minor changes in terminology proposed in the quoted portion of Section 17(a) of the complaint do not alter the substantive meaning of the complaint. The motion is granted insofar as it relates to these changes.

The parties were represented by counsel during the hearing and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, and examine and cross-examine witnesses. Based upon the entire record, including a stipulation of facts, exhibits, relevant evidence adduced at the hearing,[2] and briefs filed by the parties, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Richard Frontera, a Cook-Foreman at Respondent's Federal Correctional Institution, Ray Brook, New York (FCI, Ray Brook), was terminated on June 10, 1982, for intimidating and physically abusing a prisoner, and for failing to report a possible breach of prison security. The American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3882 (Union), grieved Frontera's termination to arbitration, and on December 16, 1983, Arbitrator Dale S. Beach issued an award wherein he held that there was not just and sufficient cause for the adverse action taken. He reduced the penalty to a 60 calendar day suspension and ordered that "[w]ithin 10 calendar days of the receipt of this Award Mr. Frontera shall be reinstated to his regular job without the loss of any employee benefits." The award also provided for backpay to June 10, 1982, the date of discharge, less pay for the 60-day suspension, and less any possible unemployment compensation or wages received from other employment during the period of discharge.

Upon receipt of the December 16th award, the Respondent determined that an appeal should not be filed. It was also decided that Mr. Frontera would be returned to work in a location other than FCI, Ray Brook. Respondent took no action to persuade the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) to perfect an appeal in accordance with the provisions of 5 U.S.C. §§ 7121(f) and 7703(d) (G.C. Exh. No. 1(H), at page 3; Tr. 212, 213, 216).[3] If OPM became aware of the existence of the December 16th award for appeal purposes, the specific nature and date of such awareness was not made a part of the record. There was no showing that OPM received a copy of the December 16th award, or that OPM was ever otherwise put on notice of its existence.

[2] Counsel representing the General Counsel moved to correct errors in the hearing transcript. Under Authority reflected in 5 C.F.R. § 2423.19(r), the proposed corrections are approved.

[3] Section 7121(f) provides: "In matters covered under sections 4303 and 7512 of this title which have been raised under the negotiated grievance procedure in accordance with this section, section 7703 of this title pertaining to judicial review shall apply to the award of an arbitrator in the same manner and under the same conditions as if the matter had been decided by the [Merit Systems Protection] Board . . . ."

Respondent surveyed available openings in Mr. Frontera's work classification and grade and determined initially that he should be assigned to work at the Federal Prison Camp (FPC), Big Spring, Texas.[4] The Respondent's position was based upon the fact that a literal interpretation of the December 16th award did not preclude an immediate reassignment to another institution if the new position matched his prior job classification and pay level (Tr. 117-118).[5]

Mr. Frontera communicated with a representative of the Union who advised him to fight the transfer through the Union, and to communicate with his Congressman concerning the matter (Tr. 157-158). A letter dated January 10, 1984 addressed to Mr. Frontera by Congressman David O'B. Martin disclosed the results of an unsuccessful effort to resolve the issue (G.C. Exh. No. 5).

Since October 1, 1982, the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has had, under the provisions of the Federal Courts Improvement Act of 1982, 96 Stat. 25, exclusive jurisdiction to hear appeals from final orders or final decisions of the Merit Systems Protection Board. Section 7703 was amended by the Act to reflect this jurisdictional change.

Section 7703(d) provides: "The Director of the Office of Personnel Management may obtain review of any final order or decision of the Board by filing a petition for judicial review in the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit if the Director determines, in his discretion, that the Board erred in interpreting a civil service law, rule, or regulation affecting personnel management and that the Board's decision will have a substantial impact on a civil service law, rule, regulation, or policy directive. If the Director did not intervene in a matter before the Board, the Director may not petition for review of a Board decision under this section unless the Director first petitions the Board for a reconsideration of its decision, and such petition is denied . . . The granting of the petition for judicial review shall be at the discretion of the Court of Appeals." Section 7703 makes no provision for direct agency appeal to the Federal Circuit.

[4] On January 9, 1984, 24 days after the award, Mr. Frontera learned of Respondent's intent to relocate him and determined that he would oppose a transfer (Tr. 156-158). The fact that the parties faced elements of uncertainty in the meaning to be accorded the December 16, 1982 award was acknowledged by counsel representing the General Counsel (Tr. 36-37, 143-144).

[5] The record reflects no issue concerning the job classification or grade level assigned in connection with his reinstatement to federal employment (Tr. 190-192).

At a meeting with Respondent's representative on January 16, 1984, Mr. Frontera was advised that he was being reassigned to the FPC, Big Spring, Texas as of February 5, 1984, and that he should report there no later than 12:00 noon, on February 14, 1984 (Jt. Exh. Nos. 3 and 4).

On January 27, 1984, Congressman David O'B. Martin again questioned the Respondent's refusal to put Mr. Frontera back to work at FCI, Ray Brook (Jt. Exh. No. 6). In a letter dated February 1, 1984, the Respondent, through Norman Carlson, Director, Bureau of Prisons advised that in cases involving serious misconduct and mistreatment of inmates, it was Bureau policy "to reassign the employee to another facility in order to give him an opportunity for a fresh start among new co-workers and to lessen the possibility for reprisal against him by the inmate population." It was further noted that the reassignment of Mr. Frontera was not a disciplinary action, but merely an attempt to insure that Mr. Frontera would not be returned to a situation which would endanger him or the security of an institution (Jt. Exh. No. 7).

On February 1, 1984, the Respondent informed Frontera that a decision had been made to cancel his transfer to FPC, Big Spring, Texas, and that instead he would be reassigned to the United States Penitentiary (USP), Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, effective February 5, 1984 (Jt. Exh. Nos. 8 and 9). He was ordered to report on February 7, 1984.[6]

In response to a Union request for an opportunity to discuss Respondent's refusal to return Frontera to his job at FCI, Ray Brook, a meeting was held on February 6, 1984. Respondent took the position that it had a right to reassign Frontera under the circumstances, and further that there was nothing in the December 16th award which mandated his return to FCI, Ray Brook (Tr. 146-148). At the meeting Ronald N. Cloutier, President of the Union was handed a copy of a letter dated February 6, 1984, signed by J.T. Hadden, Warden, FCI, Ray Brook. The letter repeated the Respondent's position that reassignment was necessary to give Frontera a fresh start and "to lessen the possibility of any reprisal against him by the inmate population." He noted that the Respondent was "trying to insure that Mr. Frontera is not returned to a situation which would endanger him or jeopardize the orderly running and security of the institution." (G.C. Exh. No. 4).

At this point in the case history Mr. Cloutier contacted Mr. George Girlando in the AFGE's Second District Office, New Brunswick, New Jersey to ascertain if the Union might petition for a clarification of Arbitrator Beach's December 16, 1982 award (Tr. 15). As a result of this contact Mr. Girlando addressed a mailgram dated February 7, 1984 to Arbitrator Beach, and sought an interpretation of paragraph (3) of the award which ordered the Respondent to reinstate Mr. Frontera to his regular job without the loss of any employee benefits. (Jt. Exh. Nos. 11, 12 and R. Exh. No. 1).

[6] Frontera did report for duty at Lewisburg as ordered (Tr. 160, Jt. Exh. No. 10).

The Respondent's representative in the arbitration proceeding was clearly identified as Ronald Brown; however, the mailgram was misdirected to one Raymond Brown at FCI, Ray Brook (Tr. 55). Ronald Brown's testimony, and other testimony in the record reflects that the Respondent did not receive notice of the request for clarification (Tr. 81-84, 109-111, 172-173).7/

On February 15, 1984, the Respondent processed a number of documents or personnel actions concerning Mr. Frontera's reinstatement and return to duty (Jt. Exh. No. 17). His separation of June 10, 1982 was cancelled. He was suspended for a 60-day period in accordance with the December 16th 7/ On July 26, 1985, after the close of the hearing, and prior to the filing of post-hearing briefs, counsel representing the Respondent requested that official notice be taken of portions of the "U.S. Postal Service Handbook M-79, Mailgram Operating Procedures." The request was designed to provide additional support for a factual finding that the Union's request for clarification was not in fact received by Respondent's representatives.

During the hearing the Respondent had ample opportunity to develop the record relating to this factual issue, but did not introduce evidence relating to provisions of the Handbook. The record reflects no explanation concerning the specific origin or date of this publication, nor any showing that the provisions of the Handbook were applicable to the mailgram sent to the arbitrator by the Union. Furthermore, the record reflects no reason to justify the Respondent's failure to introduce this material at the hearing. Admission at this late date would necessarily operate to deprive the General Counsel and the Charging Party of an opportunity to object or to interpose rebuttal. For the reasons outlined the request is denied.

Counsel representing the Respondent also requested that official notice be taken of the Regional Director's dismissal letter, and the General Counsel's affirmance of dismissal in Case No. 3-CA-40249. Also included was a request that an arbitrator's clarification issued in Case No. 3-CA-40249, be officially noted in conjunction with the dismissal letters issued in Case No. 3-CA-40249. These requests are granted inasmuch as the documents may be received for appropriate consideration in resolving questions of law, as distinguished from questions of fact. However, it is noted that principles expressed in these documents have no precedential value with respect to legal issues posed in this case.

award. He was characterized on a personnel action as having been "returned to duty" at FCI, Ray Brook as of August 10, 1982, although he was never actually allowed to return to work at the Ray Brook facility. As of February 26, 1984, he was reassigned from FCI, Ray Brook to the United States Penitentiary, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania for payroll purposes (Jt. Exh. No. 17). Between February 5, 1984 and February 26, 1984 he was carried as an employee of FCI, Ray Brook, although actually reassigned to his new post in Lewisburg during this period (Tr. 176-177).

On March 1, 1984, in response to the request for clarification, and without providing Respondent an opportunity to be heard, Arbitrator Beach issued a Clarification of Award, holding that Richard Frontera should be reinstated to his regular job as Cook-Foreman at FCI, Ray Brook without the loss of any employee benefits (Jt. Exh. No. 13).

The Respondent did not request OPM to take the necessary steps to perfect an appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit in accordance with the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 7703(d) (G.C. Exh. No. 1(H) at page 3). Instead, Respondent's representatives decided to refuse compliance, and to file exceptions to the award with the Authority (Tr. 118-119, 76-77).[8]

The clarified award was the subject of discussion between Mr. Owen, Respondent's Counsel, and an OPM staff representative. Mr. Owen apprised OPM that he had two theories on which to attack the clarified award (Tr. 213), and inquired whether it would be wise to appeal to the Authority (Tr. 215). He related that he received an affirmative reply from OPM (Tr. 215). This telephone call would necessarily have had to occur between March 1, 1984, the date of issuance of the clarified award, and March 27, 1984, the date on which the Respondent filed exceptions wich the Authority (Jt. Exh. No. 18).

FPM Letter 711-160 dated July 13, 1981 requires federal agencies to supply OPM with two copies of all Section 7121(f) arbitration awards within five days of an agency's receipt of the award so as to enable OPM to exercise its statutory right to appeal in such cases. It further requires agencies to notify OPM by telephone "as early as possible if [an] agency believes that OPM should seek court review . . . ." FPM Bulletin 711-91(3) dated November 13, 1984, advises agencies to "promptly serve OPM a copy of arbitral awards in these cases to allow maximum time to assess their impact and to determine whether reconsideration and judicial review are warranted." This Bulletin notes that OPM "must rely on agencies for prompt service of troublesome decisions subject to judicial review within prescribed time limits."

[8] The Respondent admits that the award as clarified has not been implemented by the Respondent (Jt. Exh. No. 26; Tr. 75-76, 80-81).

The telephone call to OPM acknowledged by Respondent's counsel was consistent with Respondent's obligation to phone OPM in cases wherein an agency has an interest in appealing a Section 7121(f) arbitration award. (FPM Letter 711-160 dated July 13, 1981). Presumably, neither Respondent nor OPM was interested in taking the necessary steps to perfect an appeal to the Federal Circuit, as both the Respondent and OPM elected to take their chances with an appeal to the Authority, the wrong forum in this instance. The reason for the OPM decision on this issue does not appear in the record; however, the record does reflect that the Respondent's representatives labored or appeared to labor, under the erroneous assumption that the filing of exceptions was governed by Section 7122 of the Statute (Jt. Exh. Nos. 18 and 20).

On June 29, 1984, the Authority dismissed the exceptions,[9/] clearly noted that it had no jurisdiction to review the case, and referred the Respondent to review procedures set out in 5 U.S.C. § 7703. In so doing the Authority stated:

> The matters described in Section 7121(f) of the Statute include those covered under 5 U.S.C. § 7512 which applies to specified adverse actions, including removals and suspensions for more than 14 days. Pursuant to Section 7121(f), review of an arbitration award relating to such matters must be obtained in accordance with 5 U.S.C. § 7703, i.e., in the same manner and under the same conditions as judicial review of a final decision of the Merit Systems Protection Board.[10/]

On July 11, 1984, the Respondent moved for reconsideration, and requested a stay of the Authority's June 29, 1984 order dismissing the Respondent's exceptions (Jt. Exh. No. 20).[11/] On August 27, 1984, while the motion for reconsideration was pending before the Authority, the charge initiating this case was filed. On December 11, 1984, the Respondent's motion for reconsideration was denied, thus upholding the Authority's earlier ruling that it had no jurisdiction in the matter (Jt. Exh. No. 23).

[9/] The Respondent argued that the March 1, 1984 clarified award interfered with management's right to assign employees, that it interfered with management's right to establish and carry out internal security practices, and that the arbitrator exceeded his authority in issuing the clarified award.

[11/] The motion for reconsideration was amended on July 16, 1984 (Jt. Exh. No. 21).

Following the denial of the Respondent's motion for reconsideration, the Union again made a request that Mr. Frontera be reassigned to FCI, Ray Brook. However, the Respondent declined on the ground that the Federal Bureau of Prisons had appropriately exercised its discretion to assign him to the USP, Lewisburg (Jt. Exh. No. 24, and G.C. Exh. No. 6).

The assignment of Mr. Frontera to the USP in Lewisburg, Pennsylvania represented an economic burden for Mr. Frontera. The record revealed that he and his adopted family had lived in Tupper Lake, New York, in the Ray Brook area since 1976, and that Lewisburg was nearly 400 miles away from his established home. After commencing work in Lewisburg early in 1984, he had to return home approximately once a month to attend to family business. Circumstances precluded his adopted family from relocating. As a result he had to contribute to the support of his home in Tupper Lake, New York, while at the same time renting a room in Lewisburg. These adverse circumstances ultimately led to economic and personal hardship, and to Mr. Frontera's resignation on March 2, 1985, due to such hardship (Jt. Exh. No. 25).

Discussion and Conclusions

Prior to the hearing counsel representing the Respondent moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that conduct alleged in the complaint as a basis for violation of Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute, occurred more than six months before the filing of the charge. It was argued that any unfair labor practices which might have occurred are time-barred by the provisions of Section 7118(a)(4) of the Statute (G.C. Exh. No. 1(N). This motion was referred to the Office of Administrative Law Judges for disposition in accordance with the provisions of 5 C.F.R. § 2423.22(b). At the opening of the hearing record, counsel representing the Respondent also moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the arbitration award herein falls within the purview of Section 7121(f) of the Statute. It was argued that the Authority has no jurisdiction to order compliance with such awards (R. Exh. No. 1). Decisions on these motions were reserved.12/

12/ A third motion to dismiss made by Respondent's counsel at the opening of the hearing rested on the theory that the complaint failed to allege an unfair labor practice within the meaning of the Statute. The rationale underlying this motion rests on the premise that Mr. Frontera could not, in the Respondent's judgment, be entitled to reinstatement to the position he formerly held at FCI, Ray Brook in the absence of a new unfair labor practice charge alleging that his resignation from USP, Lewisburg was coerced (Tr. 9-10). Inasmuch as this motion is vague and unclear at best, it is denied. Moreover, the issue of whether or not a particular remedy would be appropriate in this case would have no bearing on the question of whether the complaint reflects compliance with the provisions of 5 C.F.R. § 2423.12(b).

The motion to dismiss based upon the absence of Authority jurisdiction rests on the theory that Section 7122(b) relates entirely to arbitration awards which could have been, but were not, appealed to the Authority in accordance with the provisions of Section 7122(a) of the Statute.[13] Accordingly, it is argued that as a matter of law Section 7122(b) is inapplicable and that there can be no violation of 7122(b) for refusing to take action required by an adverse action arbitration award appealable to the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit under the provisions of Section 7121(f).[14]

The argument rests on the premise that the Authority may enforce only those arbitration awards which it has been given express jurisdiction to review, and further that failure to comply with arbitration awards falling within the purview of Sections 7121(f) of the Statute may not be the subject of an unfair labor practice proceeding. It is also contended that enforcement of adverse action arbitration awards may occur only through utilization of a compliance proceeding initiated under the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 1205 pertaining to the enforcement of Merit Systems Protection Board orders.

Respondent's argument on this issue is not persuasive. Section 7121(f) of the Statute merely outlines the appeal route that must be pursued with respect to an arbitration award relating to matters covered under 5 U.S.C. §§ 4303 and 7512. Section 7121(f) provisions placing the arbitrator in the place of the Merit Systems Protection Board are specifically limited to 5 U.S.C. § 7703 (judicial review of decisions of the Merit Systems Protection Board). Section 7121(f) does not include enforcement procedures under 5 U.S.C. § 1205. Moreover, there is no indication that the latter section extends to arbitral awards.

Although Section 7122(b) provides finality for arbitration decisions appealable to the Authority if timely exceptions are not filed with the Authority, it also specifically provides that "An agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award." There would be no logical reason for limiting the mandate reflected in this sentence to arbitration awards falling within Authority appellate jurisdiction, in light of the fact that Section 7121(f) provides a procedure for finalizing Section 7121(f) arbitration awards.

[13] Section 7122(b) requires that "[a]n agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award . . . ."

[14] The post-hearing brief filed on behalf of the General Counsel notes that this issue is currently before the Authority in U.S. Army, Adjutant General Publications Center, St. Louis, Missouri, Case No. 7-CA-40064, a case stipulated directly to the Authority (G.C. Brief at page 6). See "Judicial Review of Adverse Action Arbitration Awards," Federal Labor Relations Reporter (Highlights), December, 1983, 83 FLRR No. 22; and [illegible]verse Action Arbitration in the Federal Sector: A Streamlining of the Appellate Procedures?", Federal Labor Relations Reporter (Highlights), January 1984, 83 FLRR No. 24, for discussion of procedural problems posed by Section 7121(f) arbitration awards.

Section 7122 provides a procedure for judicial review of arbitration awards falling within the purview of Authority jurisdiction and, by reason of the provisions of Section 7121(f), it also incorporates by reference a procedure (5 U.S.C. § 7703) for review of adverse action arbitration awards by the United States Court of appeals for the Federal Circuit. The quoted sentence mandating that agencies "shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award" refers to arbitration awards reviewed by the Authority, and to adverse action arbitration awards reviewable by the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. This interpretation operates to provide a consistent procedural approach designed to compel compliance with arbitration awards. In either case, a failure to comply with the provisions of Section 7122(b), constitutes an unfair labor practice within the meaning of Section 7116(a)(8) of the Statute, and thus brings to bear upon such non-compliance, the full power of the Statute's enforcement mechanisms relating to unfair labor practices.[15]

[15] Respondent argues that should the Authority seek enforcement of an order to comply with an arbitral award, it would have to petition a Court of Appeals other than the Federal Circuit. However, there is no statutory or other inconsistency merely because the Federal Circuit has appellate jurisdiction under Section 7703, while enforcement under Section 7123 of the Statute would involve another Court. The Federal Circuit would have jurisdiction to review the arbitrator's findings. Neither the Authority nor Courts of Appeal reviewing Authority unfair labor practice decisions would be reviewing or relitigating underlying arbitration awards involved in unfair labor practice proceedings designed to enforce such awards. United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 15 FLRA No. 27 (1984), 15 FLRA 151, aff'd sub nom. Dept. of the Air Force, et al. v. FLRA, No. 84-3695 (6th Cir., Oct. 25, 1985); Department of Defense, Department of the Navy, United States Marine Corps, United States Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, North Carolina, 15 FLRA No. 137 (1984), 15 FLRA 686; Veterans Administration Medical Center, Phoenix, Arizona, 15 FLRA No. 138 (1984), 15 FLRA 706; Department of Health and Human Services, Region II, 15 FLRA No. 139 (1984), 15 FLRA 710; Department of Justice, U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, Washington, D.C., 16 FLRA No. 118 (1984), 16 FLRA 840; Department of the Navy, Naval Submarine Base, New London, Connecticut, 19 FLRA No. 31 (1985), 19 FLRA 250.

Given the different functions of the Federal Circuit under Section 7703 and other Circuits under Section 7123 of the Statute, Respondent's concern with conformity of court decisions is misplaced.

The interpretation of the Statute set out is reflected in summary form in a memorandum dated October 18, 1984, addressed to the General Counsels of Executive Departments, Agencies, and Independent Establishments by Joseph Morris, General Counsel, Office of Personnel Management (G.C. Exh. No. 2). Mr. Morris notes that in cases involving adverse action arbitration awards which are not reviewable by the Authority, the arbitrator cannot enforce the award, and "[r]efusal to comply provides grounds for an unfair labor practice charge."[16] For the reasons outlined the motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction is denied.

The Respondent's motion to dismiss based upon an untimely filing of the charge depends upon an initial determination of the finality of the March 1, 1984 clarified award as the Authority has held that where there has been no compliance the timeliness of a charge based upon a failure to implement an arbitration award is determined from the date that the award becomes final and binding. United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, supra, at note 15.[17] The Authority has also made it clear that the language of Section 7122(b) requires an agency to take actions required by an arbitrator's award only after the award has become final and binding. In the absence of a clear showing of finality there is no statutory obligation (under Section 7122(b)) to comply with the award. U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home, Washington, D.C., 15 FLRA No. 26 (1984), 15 FLRA 139; United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, supra.

Because the removal action brought against Mr. Frontera arose as a disciplinary action under 5 U.S.C. § 7512, Mr. Frontera had a choice, under Section 7121(e) of the Statute, to resolve his claims through utilization of the negotiated grievance procedure or the statutorily established Merit Systems Protection Board procedure set out in 5 U.S.C. § 7701. He elected to utilize the grievance procedure and pursued the matter through the arbitration phase. As noted Section 7121(f) and Section 7703 do not provide for direct agency appeal of an arbitrator's decision in such cases. Only the Director of OPM may initiate an appeal.

The fact that Mr. Frontera theoretically might conceivably have other possible enforcement procedures available to him would not necessarily operate to divest the Authority of unfair labor practice jurisdiction. The possible existence of an alternative procedure, without more, does not mean that the unfair labor practice procedure is unavailable to compel compliance with final and binding Section 7121(f) arbitration awards.

[16] The memorandum was designed for use by agencies "for informational and instructional purposes."

[17] There is no reason for drawing the conclusion that a refusal to comply with an arbitration award constitutes a continuing unfair labor practice so as to extend the six month period of limitation for an indefinite period in the event of continuing non-compliance.

Section 7703(b)(1) of the Statute provides:

> (b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, a petition to review a final decision of the Board shall be filed in the the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any petition for review must be filed within 30 days after the date the petitioner receives notice of the final order or decision of the Board.

The 30-day period referred to in Section 7703(b)(1) has been considered by the Federal Circuit, and it has been held that Section 7703(d) first conditions OPM's appeal right upon OPM's prior intervention in the arbitration proceeding. If OPM was not made a party to the arbitration, OPM must first intervene and request reconsideration of the arbitration award. Devine v Nutt, 718 F.2d 1048 (1983), rev'd sub nom. on other grounds Cornelius v. Nutt, 105 S. Ct. 2882 (1985); Divine v. Sutermeister, 724 F.2d 1558 (1983). Devine v. Pastore, 732 F.2d 213 (1984); Devine v. Levin, 739 F.2d 1567 (1984).

Section 7703 does not provide a specific time for OPM to intervene and request reconsideration of an arbitration award covered by Section 7121(f) and Section 7703. However, the Federal Circuit has held that the time for filing a request for reconsideration "runs from the date OPM receives notice of the decision of the MSPB or arbitrator, as the case may be." Devine v. Sutermeister, supra, at 1562, note 4. This case makes it clear that the failure of OPM to take appropriate action within 30 days of OPM's receipt of notice operates to extinguish OPM's right to request intervention and reconsideration in the arbitration proceeding and the right to appeal to the Federal Circuit as well.

At a minimum, the record establishes that OPM received notice of the March 1, 1984 clarification award through Respondent's counsel, and that OPM thereafter took no action to intervene in the arbitration proceeding for the purpose of requesting reconsideration as a step toward appeal to the Federal Circuit. A period of more than 30 days passed after OPM's receipt of notice thus resulting in the extinguishment of OPM's right to proceed further.18/

18/ As noted the exact date of Mr. Owen's telephone conversation with OPM about the clarified award cannot be determined from the record. However, it would have had to occur between March 1, 1984, the date of the clarified award, and March 27, 1984, the date on which the Respondent filed exceptions to the award.

It is noted that a copy of the complaint filed in this case was mailed to OPM on March 12, 1985 (G.C. Exh. No. 1(G)). Thus, even assuming the

Since the charge in this case was filed on August 27, 1984, it was well within six-months of the date on which the clarified award became final and binding, and within the six-month period of limitation prescribed in Section 7118(a)(4) of the Statute. Accordingly, Respondent's motion to dismiss based upon Section 7118(a)(4) is denied.

If the Respondent (through OPM) did in fact have a basis for an appeal to the Federal Circuit, it was lost by the passage of time consumed in the unfortunate choice of appellate procedures. It is entirely possible that Respondent's contentions, if brought to the attention of the Federal Circuit, would have produced a different result. However, such issues are not litigable in this proceeding.[19] The Authority has repeatedly held in a series of analogous cases, that any contention that an arbitrator's award is deficient because it is contrary to any law, rule or regulation must be made by invoking the procedures established by Congress.[20]

It is clear from the record that the Respondent did not comply with the March 1, 1984 clarified award after it became final and binding. The Respondent did not return Mr. Frontera to his regular duties at FCI, Ray Brook. This was admitted by the Respondent. The mere processing of documents to make it appear that Mr. Frontera had been fully reinstated absence of prior notice to OPM, the March 1, 1984 clarified award would have become final and binding prior to the date of the hearing.

It is somewhat unusual that the record does not reflect that the Respondent ever mailed a copy of either award to OPM in light of the Respondent's obligation to do so under the provisions of FPM Letter 711-160 dated July 13, 1981. Instead, Respondent made a special effort to establish that the Respondent did not seek OPM intervention. It was only under close questioning that Respondent acknowledged a telephone conversation with an OPM representative concerning the March 1, 1984 award. As a whole, the record tends to suggest an effort on the part of Respondent to obfuscate this factual issue, and to avoid a final and binding effect by creating a record tending to indicate the absence of communication between the Respondent and OPM, and the absence of notice on the part of OPM. This tendency was noted in counsel's responses to questions on the subject, and especially by statements made on page 54 of Respondent's post-hearing brief.

[19] A number of issues may be mentioned in this context. For the most part these are the same matters which were mistakenly brought to the attention of the Authority, and then again belatedly and mistakenly raised in this unfair labor practice proceeding.

was certainly not compliance with the March 1, 1984, arbitration award. Respondent's repudiation of the obligation to reinstate Mr. Frontera was total in nature, and was the direct cause of Mr. Frontera's resignation. It constitutes a clear violation of Section 7122(b) of the Statute. Accordingly, this conduct also constitutes an unfair labor practice within the meaning of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.21/

Having found that the Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order:

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and Section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the United States Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons, Washington, D.C., and Bureau of Prisons, Federal Correctional Institution, Ray Brook, New York, shall:

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Eaton H. Conant filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

According to the Arbitrator, the grievance in this case arose when the grievant, a union steward, was transferred from the industrial engineering department in building 82 of the Activity to the research and engineering department of the Activity at a location several miles away. A grievance was filed protesting that this reassignment violated Article 7, section 10 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement because management failed to consult with the Union concerning the transfer between work areas as required by the agreement. After the grievance was filed, the grievant was again reassigned: first, to the building adjacent to building 82 and subsequently, back to building 82, his original work area as a steward.

Before the Arbitrator the Activity argued that these subsequent reassignments ultimately returning the grievant to his original building of assignment operated to ameliorate the inadvertent failure to communicate with the Union over the disputed reassignment. The Arbitrator noted that it was not disputed that management violated the collective bargaining agreement when it assigned the grievant to the research and engineering department several miles away from his previous work area assignment. The Arbitrator also noted that the Union contended that management's actions subsequent to the filing of the grievance did not ameliorate the violation and that only an award which returned the grievant to his original position was tenable. Although the Arbitrator stated that this remedy was complicated by the apparent abolishment of the grievant's original position in the industrial engineering department, the Arbitrator agreed with the Union. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator directed that the grievant be returned to his former position in the industrial engineering department under the direction of his former supervisor. The Arbitrator further directed that if the former position is not available because of substantial job redesign, the grievant will be trained to undertake a suitable job in the original work area.

III. EXCEPTION

A. Contentions of the Agency

As its exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. Specifically, the Agency argues that to the extent the Arbitrator's award directs assignment of the grievant to a particular position, it interferes with management's right to assign employees and that to the extent the award orders training provided the grievant, it interferes with management's right to assign work.

B. Opposition of the Union

In its opposition the Union concedes that the Arbitrator was not authorized to require that the Agency provide training to the grievant. However, the Union maintains that the Arbitrator's direction to return the grievant to his original position, or a suitable alternative, is not contrary to section 7106(a) because it merely constitutes a proper enforcement of an applicable procedure or appropriate arrangement of the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority has consistently recognized that the plain language of section 7106(a) provides that "nothing in the Statute shall affect the authority" of an agency to exercise the rights enumerated in that section. The 438 Air Base Group, McGuire Air Force Base, New Jersey and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1778, 22 FLRA No. 3 (1986). Therefore, the Authority has held that an arbitration award under a negotiated grievance procedure may not interpret or enforce a provision of a collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly deny an agency the authority to exercise its rights under section 7106(a) of the Statute. Id. Under the language of section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute and previous decisions of the Authority, it is clear that management has the right to assign employees in the agency. It is equally clear that the award in this case interferes with the Activity's exercise of its right to assign employees by rescinding management's current assignment of the grievant and directing that he be reassigned to his original position or a suitable equivalent. See Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Charlotte, North Carolina District and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3509, AFL-CIO, 17 FLRA 103, 104 (1985). However, in these same decisions the Authority has indicated that because management's section 7106(a) rights are subject to section 7106(b)(2) and (3),[1] an award that is claimed to interfere with rights under section 7106(a) that enforces an applicable procedure or appropriate arrangement which has been negotiated by the parties may not necessarily be contrary to section 7106(a). Id.

In this case because the award directly interferes with management's right to assign employees, we find contrary to the argument of the Union that the award does not merely constitute a proper enforcement of an applicable procedure of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. See National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 26 and Internal Revenue Service, Atlanta District, 22 FLRA No. 30 (1986) (Proposals 1, 2, and 4). In directing that the grievant be returned to his original position under the direction of his original supervisor, the Arbitrator has not enforced the terms of an applicable negotiated appropriate arrangement of the parties' agreement. Although the Arbitrator ruled that management had violated the parties' agreement by not consulting with the Union concerning the transfer of the grievant, the cited provision only pertains to transfers between work areas and work shifts. The provision does not in any respect pertain to assignments of union stewards to positions in the agency when the work area remains the same. Consequently, once the grievant was reassigned to a building adjacent to, and subsequently back to, his original building of assignment, the Arbitrator's remedy of directing that the grievant be returned to his original position under the direction of his original supervisor or to a suitably equivalent position was not founded on any specific negotiated agreement of the parties and was solely the creation of the Arbitrator. See SSA, Charlotte, North Carolina District, 17 FLRA at 105. As the Authority acknowledged in SSA, Charlotte, North Carolina District, an arbitrator may legitimately bring his or her judgment to bear in reaching a fair resolution of a dispute, but an arbitrator may not "dispense his [or her] own brand of industrial justice." Id. (citing Steelworkers v. Enterprise Wheel & Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593, 597 (1960)). The award in this case, which interferes with management's right to assign employees and to assign work, as it pertains to training, does not constitute the enforcement of an applicable negotiated procecure or appropriate arrangement. The award is therefore deficient as contrary to section 7106(a) of the Statute.

[1] Section 7106(b)(2) and (3) provide:

> . . . .
> (2) procedures which management officials of the agency will observe in exercising any authority under this section; or
> (3) appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the exercise of any authority under this section by such management officials.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is modified to strike the remedy of returning the grievant to his original position or to a suitably equivalent position in his original work area.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that the performance rating of the grievant (the local union president) was defective because the grievant's supervisor failed to properly deal with the issue of a work adjustment (giving due consideration to the time required of the grievant to fulfill labor-management representational functions) during the appraisal period because "the required neutrality with respect to representational functions was compromised." The arbitrator ordered the grievant's rating voided.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its first exception, the agency asserted that the arbitrator exceeded his authority by determining an issue not included in the subject matter submitted to the arbitrator. The Authority concluded that the agency's focus on the arbitrator's findings as to a certain article of the parties' agreement constituted nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions underlying the award which resolved the submitted issue of whether the performance evaluation of the grievant was a product of union animus.

The agency, in its second exception, asserted that the arbitrator exceeded his authority by disregarding a plain and specific limitation on his authority contained in the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Authority concluded that the second exception constituted nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's interpretation and application of the parties' agreement and rejected the agency's argument that the arbitrator modified the agreement by his finding that the grievant's supervisor should have made a workload adjustment in connection with the application of the performance elements and standards to the grievant -- when there is no such requirement or connection in the actual language of the agreement.

In its third exception, the agency argued that the arbitrator interpreted and applied the parties' agreement contrary to management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B), by finding that the grievant's supervisor should have made a workload adjustment. The Authority found no basis for finding that the award interfered with the agency's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work. Thus, the arbitrator's ruling that the grievant's supervisor failed to properly deal with the work adjustment issue does not direct what specific work adjustments must be or should have been made.

The Authority modified the arbitrator's award by directing the agency to reevaluate the grievant's performance for the period in question. Although the arbitrator properly sustained the grievance and refused to permit the disputed rating to stand, a reevaluation was necessary in order for the grievant to have an existing performance appraisal for the period in dispute. The arbitrator's award, in addition to voiding the rating, should have directed that the grievant's work be reevaluated by management.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's conclusion that the union should be awarded attorney fees and expenses under Part 2430 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations (5 CFR Part 2430), which implement the Equal Access to Justice Act of 1980. The union's application for fees under Part 2430 arose out of the General Counsel's prosecution of a complaint against the union alleging that in imposing discipline against an individual, the union had discriminated against her based on her marital status in violation of § 7116(b)(4). In that proceeding, the Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed because the General Counsel had failed to present evidence to establish a violation of the Statute. No exceptions were filed to the Judge's Decision and the Authority adopted it as the resolution of the case dismissing the complaint. In agreement with the Judge's conclusion, but for different reasons, the Authority found that the General Counsel failed to show that initiating the underlying case was "reasonable" in fact, or that "special circumstances" existed that would make an award of attorney fees and expenses unjust.

The Authority's Rules and Regulations state that when no exceptions are filed to a Judge's decision, the Authority will issue an order which adopts that decision as the result of that case, with the understanding that the adoption does not mean that the reasoning or conclusions of the Judge shall have precedential significance for any other case. The Authority, therefore, disagreed with the Judge's suggestion that the reasonableness of the General Counsel's position, in a case involving a request for attorney fees under the Equal Access to Justice Act, can be discerned by noting that no exceptions were filed in the underlying case. It cannot be concluded that a failure to file exceptions means that the party having the opportunity but failing to do so knew that its position was wrong.

Because the underlying case was based on an alleged violation of § 7116(b)(4), the issue was properly before the Authority and not the Assistant Secretary of Labor. The case presented novel issues relative to discrimination based on marital status. The Authority agreed with the Judge that the General Counsel was not reasonable in prosecuting the underlying case against the union since it failed to show that the facts alleged would reasonably support the legal theory advanced; that is, the General Counsel failed to prove a _prima facie_ case.

The Authority agreed with the Judge's ultimate conclusion, but for different reasons, that the General Counsel failed to show that "special circumstances" existed which justified denial of the union's application. While strongly agreeing with the General Counsel that advancing novel or untested cases and legal theories -- such as the allegation of unlawful discrimination based on marital status under § 7116(b)(4) -- must not be deterred, the Authority noted that the General Counsel had failed to present a _prima facie_ case of discrimination under the General Counsel's own theory of what would constitute prohibited discrimination.

Allowable fees and expenses established by the Authority represented the amount recommended by the Judge regarding the union's defense in the underlying case, less the amount claimed for a dinner conference, plus the amount associated with processing the union's application before the Authority.

DIGEST NOTES

Both the language and structure of § 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act support the conclusion that under that provision, agencies must continue to negotiate on terms and conditions of employment, other than pay and pay practices, of prevailing rate employees where those terms and conditions of employment were subject to negotiation prior to August 19, 1972. Section 704(a) and section 704(b) respectively provide for the negotiation of terms and conditions of employment and other employment benefits and pay and pay practices. Therefore, proposals relating to the work rules of employees covered under § 704 of the CSRA are negotiable subjects of bargaining, notwithstanding their possible conflict with the management rights provisions of § 7106, where those matters were subject to negotiations between the parties prior to August 19, 1972.

Section 704 of the CSRA and § 9(b) of Pub. L. No. 92-392 require an agency to continue to negotiate on subject matters, relating to certain prevailing rate employees, which were included in agreements to which it was a party prior to August 19, 1972. Parties covered by those sections are not confined merely to the continuation of the terms of previously existing agreements but could, in a new agreement, change those terms and conditions or alter the rights of respective parties concerning the matters involved. Section 9(b) suggests, further, that "new terms" --presumably items not in previous agreements-- may be included in any renegotiated agreement.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Thomas M. Phelan filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievant, the local union president, received for the appraisal year in dispute an overall rating of unsatisfactory. A grievance was filed protesting the rating and was submitted to arbitration on the following stipulated issue:

> Has the Employer violated Article 7, Section 7.01 and/or 7.05 by discriminating against the grievant in his performance appraisal because of his position with the Union, or has the Employer violated Article 22 by knowingly and incorrectly evaluating the grievant's performance and/or by refusing to develop a performance plan with due consideration to the time required to fulfill labor-management representational functions? If so, what shall the remedy be?

At arbitration the Union argued, among other things, that the appraisal was defective because a work adjustment should have been made for the grievant to accommodate his representational duties and that his supervisor did not make the adjustment because of union animus. In response the Arbitrator stated that if the evidence showed that a workload adjustment was both necessary and practical and that management failed to make the adjustment due to union animus, this would conflict with Article 13, pertaining to official time, and would constitute a violation of Article 7 because of the obvious restraint on union representatives. On the basis of the evidence presented, the Arbitrator specifically ruled that the grievant's performance rating was defective because the grievant's supervisor failed to properly deal with the issue of a work adjustment during the appraisal period because "the required neutrality with respect to representational functions was compromised." As his award the Arbitrator ordered the rating voided.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

The Agency contends that the award is deficient because the Arbitrator exceeded his authority by determining an issue not included in the subject matter submitted to arbitration. Specifically, the Agency maintains that the award is based on a determination that the grievant's supervisor violated the provisions of Article 13 of the collective bargaining agreement. Thus, the Agency argues that the Arbitrator determined an issue not submitted because the stipulated issue dealt only with whether the appraisal was the product of union animus in violation of Article 7 or whether management violated Article 22 in evaluating the grievant or developing his performance plan.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that the Agency fails to establish that the Arbitrator decided an issue not submitted. Contrary to the contention of the Agency, we find that the Arbitrator's award resolved precisely the issue submitted. As noted, the Arbitrator specifically stated that if management had failed to make appropriate work adjustments to accommodate the grievant's representational duties due to union animus, this failure would constitute a violation of Article 7. Consequently, we find the Arbitrator's subsequent ruling to be directly responsive to the stipulated issue of whether the grievant's appraisal was the product of union animus. See Department of the Air Force, Kirtland Air Force Base and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2263, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 36 (1985). In other words, we find that the Arbitrator affirmatively addressed that issue when he expressly concluded that the grievant's rating was defective because his supervisor failed to properly deal with the issue of a work adjustment due to what the Arbitrator termed a compromising of the required neutrality with respect to representational functions. Thus, the Agency's focus on the Arbitrator's findings as to Article 13 of the collective bargaining agreement constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions in reaching the award resolving the issue submitted of whether the appraisal was a product of union animus. Accordingly, no basis is provided for finding the award deficient as alleged by the Agency.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

The Agency contends that the award is deficient because the Arbitrator exceeded his authority by rendering his award in disregard of a plain and specific limitation on his authority. Specifically, the Agency argues that the Arbitrator's finding, that the grievant's supervisor should have made a workload adjustment in connection with the application of the performance elements and standards to the grievant, modified the agreement because there is no such requirement or connection in the actual language of the agreement.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that this exception fails to establish that the award is deficient. We find that this exception constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation and application of the parties' collective bargaining agreement and, as the Authority has consistently and repeatedly held, such disagreement provides no basis for finding the award deficient. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29, 22 FLRA No. 15 (1986).

V. THIRD EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

The Agency contends that the award is contrary to management's right in accordance with section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to assign work. Specifically, the Agency argues that the Arbitrator's interpretation and application of the parties' agreement to find that the grievant's supervisor should have made a workload adjustment deprives management of its right to make that determination and interferes with the right to assign work.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has specifically recognized that conflicts, such as in this case, between employees' entitlements to official time for representational functions under section 7131 of the Statute and the entitlements of management under section 7106 can be expected and that when such conflicts arise, the parties must acknowledge the need for and seek a reasonable accommodation of the conflict. Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 20 FLRA No. 89 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. National Association of Government Employees, Local R7-23 v. FLRA, No. 86-1011 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 7, 1986). In this regard the parties in this case had negotiated in their collective bargaining agreement a workload adjustment provision for union representatives which the Arbitrator enforced in finding that the grievant's supervisor failed to properly deal with the issue of the adjustment of the grievant's work. Of course, the Authority has advised that an exclusive representative cannot negotiate and an arbitrator cannot enforce a contract provision relating to the allocation of official time for representational functions without regard to management needs and requirements regarding the assignment of work. Id.; see U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District and Local 29, National Federation of Federal Employees, 22 FLRA No. 9 (1986). However, in this case the Agency has not shown that the Arbitrator's enforcement of this provision disregards management needs and requirements regarding its assignment of work. In particular, the Arbitrator's ruling that the grievant's supervisor failed to properly deal with the work adjustment issue does not direct what specific work adjustments must be, or should have been, made. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, New York-New Jersey Council of District Office Locals, Social Security Administration and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration District Office Operations, 7 FLRA 413, 417 (1981). Consequently, we conclude that no basis is provided for finding that the award interferes with the Agency's right in accordance with section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to assign work.

VI. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons the Agency's exceptions are denied. With respect to the Arbitrator's remedy, the Authority notes that under Bureau of Engraving and Printing, U.S. Department of the Treasury and Washington Plate Printers Union, Local No. 2, IPDEU, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 39 (1985), cited by the Arbitrator in his decision, the Arbitrator properly sustained the grievance and refused to permit the disputed rating to stand. However, in order for the grievant to have an existing performance appraisal for the period in dispute, the Arbitrator should have in addition to voiding the rating directed that the grievant's work be reevaluated by management. Accordingly, the award is modified to read as follows:

> The overall rating for the grievant on his GPAS plan for the period ending September 30, 1984 is hereby voided. The Agency is directed to reevaluate the grievant's performance for that period taking into consideration what workload adjustments would have been made under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement if the required neutrality with respect to representational functions had not been compromised by the grievant's supervisor.

DECISION AND ORDER ON APPLICATION FOR ATTORNEY FEES

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed by the General Counsel to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The Respondent Union has filed an opposition. The dispute concerns whether the Union should be awarded attorney fees and expenses under part 2430 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations (5 CFR part 2430), which were issued to implement the Equal Access to Justice Act (EAJA) of 1980, Pub. L. No. 96-481, 94 Stat. 2325, codified at 5 U.S.C. § 504 (Supp. V 1981). The attorney fees requested were incurred by the Union in defending against an unfair labor practice complaint initiated by the General Counsel which alleged that the Union had violated section 7116(b)(4) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). This case requires the Authority to articulate the standards to be applied in determining whether to grant or deny attorney fees under part 2430 and in determining the amount of fees to be granted where fees are found to be warranted.

II. Background: The Judge's Decisions Dismissing the Complaint and Awarding Attorney Fees

The Union's application for fees under 5 CFR part 2430 arose out of the General Counsel's prosecution of a complaint against the Union. The complaint alleged that in imposing discipline against the Charging Party, Linda S. Moore, the Union had discriminated against her based on her marital status in violation of section 7116(b)(4) of the Statute. The Judge issued his Decision in that case on July 22, 1983, recommending that the complaint be dismissed.

The Judge found that the Union's action involved discipline under its constitution and bylaws and that, as such, the dispute was within the initial or exclusive jurisdiction of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations under section 7120 of the Statute. In the alternative, assuming that the Authority had jurisdiction over the matter, he concluded that the complaint should be dismissed because the General Counsel had failed to present evidence to establish a violation of the Statute.

No exceptions were filed to the Judge's Decision, and on August 31, 1983, the Authority issued an Order as provided under section 2423.29 of its Rules and Regulations, 5 CFR 2423.29, adopting such Decision as the resolution of the case and dismissing the complaint. FLRA Administrative Law Judge Decisions Report No. 30 (Sept. 2, 1983).

The Union then filed its application for attorney fees and expenses under 5 CFR part 2430, and after submissions by the General Counsel and the Union, on May 4, 1984, the Judge issued the attached Decision in which he recommended that the application be granted.

The Judge found that the Union was eligible to apply for an award of attorney fees and expenses under part 2430 and that its application fulfilled the procedural requirements of such regulations. He stated that under section 2430.3 the General Counsel bears the burden of showing that the application should not be granted, and after considering the record in the underlying case and the General Counsel's arguments on the merits of the attorney fees application, he concluded that the General Counsel had not met this burden. Accordingly, he recommended that the application be granted and that $5,658.02 be awarded for attorney fees.

III. Positions of the General Counsel and the Union

The General Counsel's exceptions are limited to the merits of the application, and essentially argue that the Judge erred in concluding that the General Counsel failed to meet the burden of showing that his action in the underlying proceeding was reasonable in law and fact. The General Counsel further argues that special circumstances existed in the underlying case which would make an award unjust. The Union argues generally in support of the Judge's Decision on both of the above matters.

IV. Discussion and Analysis

Because this is the first instance in which the Authority must decide the merits of an application under 5 CFR part 2430, we first discuss the requirements of the EAJA and part 2430 and then apply these provisions to the instant case.

A. The Equal Access to Justice Act

Congress' purpose in enacting the 1980 EAJA was to reduce the extent to which individuals and organizations were discouraged from seeking review of, or defending against, unreasonable government action because of the expense of vindicating their rights. Thus, the EAJA provided for compensating for certain of these costs in certain court and administrative proceedings. Pub. L. No. 96-481, sec. 202, 94 Stat. 2325.

For administrative proceedings, section 203 of the EAJA, codified at 5 U.S.C. § 504, provided that Federal agencies or departments conducting "adversary adjudications" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 554 (the Administrative Procedures Act) became liable for litigation expenses of a party to the case, other than the United States (for example, another Federal agency or department), if:

(1) that party was a "prevailing party" in the case;

(2) the party met certain eligibility requirements; and

(3) it was determined that the government had not shown that:

  (a) its action, represented by the position of the agency in the case, was "substantially justified," or

  (b) "special circumstances made an award unjust," or

> (c) the party applying for an award of costs had engaged in conduct which unduly or unreasonably protracted the final resolution of the case.

Pub. L. No. 96-481, sec. 203, 94 Stat. 2325; 5 U.S.C. § 504 (Supp. V 1981).

(1) Prevailing Party

Although "prevailing party" was not defined in the EAJA, its legislative history makes clear that it included (a) parties who obtain favorable settlements, in situations where the agency or department that initiated the matter seeks dismissal of the case, (b) parties who obtain partial victories, and (c) parties who totally prevail on the merits of their case after a hearing. H.R. Rep. No. 1418, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 11 (1980), reprinted in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 4990.

(2) Eligibility Requirements

Prevailing parties eligible to receive awards of costs in such proceedings were specified as including individuals and organizations, other than a Federal agency or department, such as partnerships, corporations, associations, and labor unions, but not: (a) individuals having a net worth exceeding $1 million; and (b) organizations having a net worth exceeding $5 million, unless the organization is exempt from taxation under certain provisions of the Internal Revenue Code and has less than 500 employees. 94 Stat. 2326; 5 U.S.C. § 504(b)(3)(B).

(3) Definition of Terms

When an application is filed by an eligible prevailing party, the EAJA provided that the application shall be granted unless the agency which initiated the proceeding shows that its position was "substantially justified," that the applying party unduly protracted the proceeding concerning which it is applying for an award, or that "special circumstances" exist. Although the phrases "substantially justified," and "special circumstances" were not specifically defined in the EAJA, the Senate and House Committees recommending the legislation provided guidance in identical explanations.

Thus, Congress did not intend that the government would have to show that it won the case, or that its decision to initiate the case was based on a substantial likelihood that it would win, in order to avoid paying the applicant's attorney fees. The intent was to establish a test of reasonableness, of whether the government could show that its position in the matter had a "reasonable basis in law and fact," a test somewhere between the one applied to plaintiffs in Civil Rights Act cases and the one applied for defendants under the "American rule." H.R. Rep. No. 1418, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 10-11 (1980), reprinted in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 4990. Under the Civil Rights Act, plaintiffs ordinarily recover their attorney fees unless special circumstances would render an award unjust. Newman v. Piggie Park Enterprises, Inc., 390 U.S. 400 (1968). Under the "American rule," defendants may recover their costs only where it is found that the plaintiff's action was frivolous, unreasonable, groundless or without foundation. Christiansburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 U.S. 412, 420-21 (1978). See also Enerhaul v. NLRB, 710 F.2d 748 (11th Cir. 1983) and Spencer v. NLRB, 712 F.2d 539, 558 n.67 and accompanying text (D.C. Cir. 1983) ("substantially justified" was intended to be a test which is slightly more stringent than one of reasonableness).

As explained by the United States Courts of Appeals for the Third, Eighth, and Tenth Circuits, under this test of reasonableness the government must show that there is a reasonable basis in truth for the facts alleged, that there exists a reasonable basis in law for the theory of the case, and that the facts alleged will reasonably support the legal theory advanced. Iowa Express Distribution, Inc. v. NLRB, 739 F.2d 1305, 1308 (8th Cir. 1984); United States v. 2,116 Boxes of Boned Beef, 726 F.2d 1481, 1487 (10th Cir. 1984); Dougherty v. Lehman, 711 F.2d 555, 564 (3d Cir. 1983).

In applying the test in unfair labor practice cases within its jurisdiction, the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) has stated that the question of whether its General Counsel was substantially justified should not be decided simply on the basis of whether the General Counsel had been able to prove a prima facie case. Iowa Parcel Service, Inc., 266 NLRB 392 (1983), affirmed Iowa Express Distribution v. NLRB, 739 F.2d 1305 (8th Cir. 1984); DeBolt Transfer, Inc., 271 NLRB 299 (1984) (where the NLRB adopted the Judge's decision that its General Counsel was not substantially justified even though a prima facie case had been established). To the same effect, see Board Avenue Laundry and Tailoring v. United States, 693 F.2d 1387, 1391 (since the question of reasonableness depends on all the pertinent facts of the case, fixed rules cannot be established for determining the issue).

The NLRB has also stated, however, that it will conclude that its General Counsel was not substantially justified if there is a failure to present evidence which, if credited by a factfinder, would constitute a prima facie case. Derickson Company, Inc., 270 NLRB 516, 518 (1984); SME Cement, Inc., 267 NLRB 763, n.1 (1983).

We find that this rule is appropriate as a threshold test in unfair labor practice proceedings under the Statute. A "prima facie" case is one in which the evidence presented would suffice to show that there is a basis for the theory of the case if such evidence is presumed to be true and the evidence presented by the opposing party is disregarded. Black's Law Dictionary 1353 (rev. 4th ed. 1986); Webster's Third New International Dictionary, Unabridged 1800 (1976). A case which did not reach the NLRB's standard would be groundless or "meritless" and the equivalent of or very close to a case under which a defendant would qualify for an award of fees under the "American rule." Christiansburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 U.S. 412, 421 (1978).

"Special circumstances" was intended to be a "safety valve" to ensure that awards would not be made in conflict with equitable considerations and to ensure that the government was not deterred from advancing in good faith the novel but credible extensions and interpretations of the law that often underlie vigorous enforcement efforts.

In addition to setting out who may apply for such awards under agency proceedings and the tests to be applied in determining whether an award of costs should be made, the EAJA set forth procedural requirements for applications; limitations on the types and amounts of the costs to be reimbursed; and a mandate, applicable to the Authority, that agencies issue regulations for its implementation. Finally, the EAJA contained a "sunset" clause which provided by its terms that it would expire as of October 1, 1984, with the proviso that it would continue to apply until the final resolution of any pending case which had been initiated prior to October 1, 1984. On August 5, 1985, the EAJA was renewed and made permanent. Pub. L. No. 99-80, 99 Stat. 183 (1985). See Part C, infra.

B. Authority Proceedings under the EAJA; 5 CFR part 2430

The Authority issued regulations in 1981, codified at 5 CFR part 2430, which provide for the submission of EAJA applications for fees and expenses from parties to its proceedings and for the consideration of such applications.

These regulations reiterate the purpose of providing for awards of costs to eligible individuals and entities that prevail in agency adversary adjudications unless the agency's position in the case was substantially justified or special circumstances exist to make an award unjust. 5 CFR 2430.1. The regulations provide for awards in conjunction with unfair labor practice proceedings under the Statute pending on complaints against labor organizations between October 1, 1981, and September 30, 1984, including proceedings pending on September 30, 1984. 5 CFR 2430.2(a).1/

A labor organization/respondent in an unfair labor practice proceeding may qualify for an award if it prevails in the case, or in a significant and discrete portion of the case, on the merits. It also must meet the EAJA eligibility requirements of net worth and number of employees. 5 CFR 2430.2(b). If these requirements are met, the labor organization may receive an award unless the General Counsel can show that his position in initiating the case was "reasonable in law and fact." 5 CFR 2430.3(a). Further, an award will be reduced or denied if the General Counsel shows that the applicant has unduly or unreasonably protracted the proceeding, or that special circumstances make an award unjust. 5 CFR 2430.3(b).

The EAJA application is referred where possible to the same Administrative Law Judge who presided over the proceeding for which the award is sought. 5 CFR 2430.7. The Judge is required to make specific findings and conclusions on all the requirements in 5 CFR part 2430. 5 CFR 2430.12. The Judge's decision and the entire record on which it is based is then transmitted to the Authority and the parties may file exceptions to the Judge's decision in the manner set forth in sections 2423.26(c), 2423.27 and 2423.28 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. 5 CFR 2430.13.

1/ Awards are not provided for other Authority proceedings described in 5 U.S.C. § 7105, because unfair labor practice proceedings are the only Authority proceedings which qualify as "adversary proceedings" under 5 U.S.C. § 554.

C. The 1985 Extension of the EAJA

The Equal Access to Justice Act was renewed and made permanent by the Equal Access to Justice Act of 1985, Pub. L. No. 99-80, 99 Stat. 183, with clarifications and amendments. As explained by the House Committee which reported the legislation to the House of Representatives, the amendments to the law were intended to apply to matters pending on or commenced after August 5, 1985, the date of the new law's enactment. The clarifications to the prior law were intended to be applicable to these matters and to matters which were pending on, or commenced on or after October 1, 1981, the effective date of the prior law. H.R. Rep. No. 120, 99th Cong., 1st Sess. 11 (1985), reprinted in 1985 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 183.

We have reviewed the new law and the House Committee's report in connection with the Authority's proceedings and have concluded that the clarifications which were intended to be applicable to matters pending under the 1980 EAJA prior to August 5, 1985, id. at 11-17, do not affect the result to be reached on the application for attorney fees in this case. However, we urge parties who may wish to file applications under the EAJA in the future to be attentive to the contents of the EAJA in its new form.

D. The Union's Application

1. Eligibility: The Judge found, without dispute by the General Counsel, that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of 5 CFR part 2430, that it timely filed its application within 30 days of the final order in the underlying case, and that it was the prevailing party in that case. He also found that the Union meets the other eligibility requirements of 5 CFR part 2430 and that the content of its application complies with the Authority's Rules and Regulations. These findings are correct and are adopted.

2. Whether the General Counsel's position in the underlying case was reasonable: In deciding whether the General Counsel had met the test of reasonableness in the underlying case, the Judge reexamined his two key conclusions in the case. First he reexamined his conclusion that the case should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, based on the Authority's prior decision in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2000, AFL-CIO, 8 FLRA 718 (1982), and considered whether the General Counsel's position in the case was reasonable in the face of that conclusion. He reaffirmed the jurisdictional result and decided that the General Counsel should have known that this would be the result when the case was initiated. On this reasoning he decided that the General Counsel's action in prosecuting the case was not reasonable "in law." Second, the Judge reexamined his alternative finding in the underlying case that the General Counsel's action in prosecuting the case was not reasonable because the General Counsel did not produce evidence to prove a prima facie case.

First, with respect to the reasonableness of the General Counsel's jurisdictional argument, we disagree with the Judge and find it reasonable. However, with respect to the second issue, we agree with the Judge and conclude that the General Counsel was not reasonable in prosecuting the case without sufficient evidence to make a prima facie case. Moreover, as discussed in part D.3, we accept for purposes of our analysis the reasonableness of the General Counsel's legal theory in this case but we make no judgment as to the validity of that theory.

Initially, we disagree with the Judge's suggestion, following n.9 of his decision, that the reasonableness of the General Counsel's position can be discerned from the fact that no exceptions were filed in the underlying case. The Authority's Rules and Regulations state that when no exceptions are filed to a Judge's decision, the Authority will issue an order which adopts that decision as the result of that case, with the understanding that this adoption does not mean that the reasoning or the conclusions of the Judge shall have precedential significance for any other case. 5 CFR 2423.29(a). This being true, the General Counsel or any party can decide not to file exceptions for any reason. It cannot be concluded that a failure to file exceptions means that the party having the opportunity but failing to do so knew that its position was wrong.

As stated above, we disagree with the way in which the Judge applied Local 2000, particularly his reasoning that Local 2000 was applicable to the underlying case because both "ar[ose] out of an internal union disciplinary proceeding alleging violation of the union's constitution and bylaws." The Authority in Local 2000 explicitly stated that the only allegation in the complaint in that case was that the union had failed to comply with its constitution and bylaws. This is not what the complaint against the Respondent Union alleged in the underlying case here.

Rather, it was alleged that the Union had discriminated against the Charging Party, Linda Moore, based on her marital status in violation of section 7116(b)(4) of the Statute.

Because it is exclusively the Authority, and not the Assistant Secretary of Labor, which has jurisdiction over alleged violations of section 7116 of the Statute, cases presenting such statutory questions must be presented to the Authority for decision, not to the Assistant Secretary. See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1738, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 66 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1738 v. FLRA, No. 85-1609 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 25, 1985). Issues which are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Assistant Secretary under section 7120 of the Statute should be presented separately to the Assistant Secretary under the procedures set forth in 5 CFR 2428. We conclude therefore that the Judge was incorrect in concluding the General Counsel was not reasonable in prosecuting the case because the General Counsel should have concluded that the Authority lacks jurisdiction in this case.

However, we agree with the Judge that the General Counsel was not reasonable in prosecuting a case for which the General Counsel did not present evidence which would prove a prima facie case. In seeking to show that the Union had discriminated against the Charging Party, Linda Moore, the General Counsel asserted that Jimmy Moore, her spouse, had acted against the Union's interests and that the Union had disciplined Linda because Linda and Jimmy were married. Even assuming that this would amount to discrimination based on marital status under section 7116(b)(4) of the Statute, it is readily apparent that the General Counsel did not present evidence to support such a claim.

Jimmy and Linda Moore were elected officers of the Union in 1981, and both had become dissatisfied with the Union leadership. Jimmy initiated meetings with a representative of another union to discuss how he might go about circulating a petition among employees to require a vote to oust the incumbent Union. The extent of Linda's participation at these meetings is not certain. Jimmy did circulate a petition, which was signed by Linda. Eventually, both Jimmy and Linda resigned from the Union, and copies of their letters of resignation, criticizing the union, were posted on the Union's bulletin board. The Union saw the posting of Jimmy's and Linda's letters, learned of Jimmy's activity on behalf of the rival labor organization, and decided to initiate disciplinary action against Jimmy and Linda.

Linda was notified that a hearing was to be conducted by a trial committee on a specified date. She did not attend. The chairperson of the committee then, by letter, asked Linda for certain information. She refused to supply any. A second request for information was made by letter, and Linda was also informed that the trial committee had not yet decided her case and that another hearing would be held on a specified date. Linda refused to give any information and did not attend the hearing. She then filed the unfair labor practice charge which was the basis for the complaint in this case, alleging that the Union had discriminated against her on the basis of her marital status, in violation of section 7116(b)(4) of the Statute. The Union expelled her (adjudged her ineligible for membership) for a period of four years.

Based on our review of this presentation of evidence, it shows that the Union was not without a reasonable basis for pursuing disciplinary action against Linda for participating in activity which was detrimental to the Union. For the General Counsel to have succeeded in its theory of the case, the General Counsel needed to either (1) present direct evidence showing that one of the reasons the Union pursued discipline against Linda was because she was married to Jimmy or (2) present evidence that it was so clearly unreasonable for the Union to have pursued discipline against Linda that the trier of fact could permissibly infer that the reason was because Linda was married to Jimmy. The General Counsel did neither.

In view of the evidence presented, it should be apparent that the General Counsel's case was appropriate for summary judgment in favor of the Respondent Union as soon as the General Counsel's case was completed. The General Counsel was unable to show that the facts alleged would reasonably support the legal theory advanced for the case. United States v. 2,116 Boxes of Boned Beef, 726 F.2d 1481, 1487 (10th Cir. 1984). It was not able to present evidence which, if credited, would constitute a prima facie case. Derickson Company, Inc., 270 NLRB 516, 518 (1984); SME Cement, Inc., 267 NLRB 763, n.1 (1983). Accordingly, on this basis we decide the General Counsel was not reasonable in prosecuting the case.

3. Whether special circumstances exist which would make an award unjust: In deciding that special circumstances did not exist in the case to justify denial of the application, the Judge relied upon his jurisdictional conclusions. As explained above, his dismissal of the complaint for lack of jurisdiction was erroneous. He also relied on his evaluation of Linda's conduct in the proceedings. While we do not rely on any assessment of her conduct, we do agree with his ultimate conclusion that the General Counsel has not been able to show that special circumstances exist which would justify denial of the Union's application for an award.

We agree with the General Counsel that the case was novel because it was the first to allege unlawful discrimination based on marital status under section 7116(b)(4) of the Statute and because it sought to find that this proscription against discrimination based on marital status encompasses discrimination against someone because of the identity of the person's spouse.

We also strongly agree that there is a need for vigorous enforcement of the law in Federal labor relations and that the General Counsel must not be deterred from advancing novel or untested legal theories and cases in such an effort. Indeed, the "special circumstances" proviso of the EAJA was intended to prevent deterrence.

It remains, however, that while the underlying case was "novel" in the above respects, the General Counsel is not being penalized by an adverse EAJA award in this case because of its pursuit of a novel theory. Rather, the EAJA award is based upon the conclusion that the General Counsel has failed to present a prima facie case of discrimination under the General Counsel's own theory of what would constitute prohibited discrimination.

We conclude that the Union should not have been forced into the expense of defending against the General Counsel's action. Further, there is no suggestion in this case that the EAJA applicant unduly or unreasonably protracted the proceeding. This is precisely the type of case to which the EAJA was intended to apply.

E. Allowable fees and expenses

The Union's application provides documentation for the amount of attorney fees and expenses requested as required in 5 CFR 2430.4 and 2430.6. The billing rates of $75.00 per hour for attorney fees and $35.00 per hour for paralegal services have been justified as being customary for the services rendered and as being comparable to the prevailing rate in the community in which the services were rendered.

We also find that, with one exception discussed below, the time which was billed for the Union's defense in the underlying case, the presentation of the application, the Union's opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions to the attached Decision, the Union's Supplementary Motion citing authorities, and the associated expenses, are reasonable in relation to the matters which have been presented for decision. See Tyler Business Services v. NLRB, 695 F.2d 73, 77 (4th Cir. 1982) and DeBolt Transfer, Inc., 271 NLRB 299, 300 (1984), where it was explained that it would be inconsistent with the EAJA to deny a request for fees and expenses which arises from the need to process an EAJA application.

The application includes a request for $34.91 for the expense of a dinner conference. We understand that conferences with clients and potential witnesses are necessary, particularly in planning for a hearing. However, where such conferences are necessary, we believe that the billing should be for the attorney's time. Billings for the expenses of meals have great potential for abuse and will not be reimbursed.

As provided in 5 CFR 2430.4 and based on the above considerations, we conclude that the application should be granted in the amount of $6,194.40. This amount represents the amount recommended by the Judge ($5,658.02), plus the fees and expenses associated with the processing of the matter before the Authority ($571.29), less the amount claimed for a dinner conference ($34.91).

V. Conclusion

The Union was the prevailing party in the underlying case and it meets the other eligibility requirements for an award of attorney fees and expenses set forth in 5 CFR part 2430. The General Counsel has not been able to show that his position in initiating that proceeding was reasonable in fact or that special circumstances existed in that proceeding which would make an award unjust as provided in 5 CFR 2430.5. The application is granted, as adjusted above, in the amount of $6,194.40, and payment shall be made in the name of the Union, the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 495, AFL-CIO. To obtain payment, the applicant must follow the procedures set forth in 5 CFR 2430.14, which provides:

§ 2430.14 Payment of award.

> To obtain payment of an award made by the Authority the applicant shall submit to the Executive Director of the Authority a copy of the Authority's final decision granting the award, accompanied by a statement that the applicant will not seek court review of the decision. The amount awarded will then be paid unless judicial review of the award, or of the underlying decision, has been sought by the applicant or any other party to the proceeding.

ORDER

As provided in 5 CFR 2430.13, IT IS ORDERED that the application for attorney fees and expenses be, and it hereby is, granted, in the amount of $6,194.40.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 31, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER
GRANTING APPLICATION FOR AWARD OF FEES AND EXPENSES

This proceeding under the Equal Access to Justice Act (herein EAJA), 5 U.S.C. § 504, 94 Stat. 2325 (1980), was instituted by the filing of an Application For An Award of Attorneys' Fees and Expenses (herein the application) by Stanley Lubin, Esq. of McKendree & Lubin, Phoenix, Arizona, on behalf of American Federation of Government Employees, Local 495, herein referred to as AFGE Local 495, Applicant, or Respondent. The application was filed pursuant to Part 2430, Sections 2430.1 through 2430.14, inclusive, of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority. In accordance with the requirements of section 2430.7, the application was referred to me for consideration.

On October 26, Counsel for the General Counsel filed a motion to dismiss the application, contending that the action of the General Counsel in initiating this proceeding, i.e., the issuance of a complaint and notice of hearing, was reasonable in law and fact.1/ Since the issue raised by the General Counsel's motion is the same issue I would have to decide and include in a decision prepared pursuant to Section 2430.12(a), I believed it inappropriate to rule on such issue until I had received the General Counsel's answer and the Applicant's reply thereto. Accordingly, I so advised the parties in my order of December 29, 1983 denying the motion to dismiss.

Thereafter, the General Counsel filed a timely answer which raised no issues not previously raised in the motion to dismiss.2/ The Applicant filed no reply. Neither party has requested an evidentiary hearing and such hearing appears unnecessary as no factual issues were raised concerning Respondent's application. Upon consideration of the entire record,3/ I make the following findings and conclusions.

Discussion and Analysis

A. Statutory and Regulatory Background - General Counsel has Burden of Proving Applicant's Ineligibility.

The Equal Access to Justice Act, which became effective October 1, 1981, permits prevailing parties to obtain awards of attorney fees and other expenses against the United States in certain administrative

1/ The Rules and Regulations do not specifically provide for the filing by the Applicant of a response to the motion to dismiss. However, I have authority to grant leave to submit a reply or to issue an order to show cause why the motion to dismiss should not be granted. (See section 2430.11 and 2423.19). In fact, the Applicant filed Opposition by memorandum dated October 31, 1983 accompanied by a request for additional fees and expenses incurred in preparing its opposition.

2/ The "motion to dismiss" procedure is designed, I assume, to avoid the unnecessary expenditure of time and resources in litigating such questions as an organization's net worth and number of employees or the reasonableness of fees and expenses until after a threshold determination has been made by the adjudicative officer that the application is timely filed and the government's position is not substantially justified. However, where the sole issue to be resolved is whether the government's position is substantially justified, it seems to me that filing a motion to dismiss is inappropriate as it only adds an unnecessary step in the fee-adjudication procedure, as illustrated by this case.

3/ See section 2430.12(b) of the Rules and Regulations.

proceedings and judicial actions. The EAJA accomplishes this end by creating a new section 504 to Title 5 of the United States Code and by amending 28 U.S.C. 2412. The first of these two provisions, the new section 504, concerns the award of fees and expenses in certain administrative proceedings such as the one involved herein. The latter provision, the amended section 2412, concerns the award of fees and expenses in certain court cases.

The "findings and purpose" of the EAJA are set forth in Section 202 thereof, as follows:

> Sec. 202. (a) The Congress finds that certain individuals, partnerships, corporations, and labor and other organizations may be deterred from seeking review of, or defending against, unreasonable governmental action because of the expense involved in securing the vindication of their rights in civil actions and in administrative proceedings.
> (b) The Congress further finds that because of the greater resources and expertise of the United States the standard for an award of fees against the United States should be different from the standard governing an award against a private litigant, in certain situations.
> (c) It is the purpose of this title--
> (1) to diminish the deterrent effect of seeking review of, or defending against, governmental action by providing in specified situations an award of attorney fees, expert witness fees, and other costs against the United States; and
> (2) to insure the applicability in actions by or against the United States of the common law and statutory exceptions to the "American rule" respecting the award of attorney fees.

The Authority's implementation of the EAJA is set forth in Part 2430 of its Rules and Regulations which, in pertinent part, provides as follows:

> Section 2430.3 Standards for awards.
> (a) An eligible applicant may receive an award for fees and expenses incurred in connection with a proceeding, or in a significant and discrete portion of the proceeding, unless the position of the General Counsel over which the > applicant has prevailed was substantially justified. The burden of proof that an award should not be made to an eligible applicant is on the General Counsel, who may avoid an award by showing that its position in initiating the proceeding was reasonable in law and fact.

> (b) An award will be reduced or denied if the applicant has unduly or unreasonably protracted (sic) the proceeding or if special circumstances make the award sought unjust.[4]

Therefore, the General Counsel has the burden of proving in this fee-adjudication proceeding before me that its position in initiating the unfair labor practice proceeding was reasonable both in law and fact,[5] or that special circumstances exist which make the award unjust.

B. The Unfair Labor Practice Proceeding: A Summary of My Findings and Conclusions.

1. On June 4, 1981, Jimmy Moore resigned his position as First Vice President of AFGE Local 495. Between June 4 and June 12 he met several times with Dick Coffey, national representative of a rival union, National Federation of Federal Employees. On two occasions his wife Linda Moore was with him.

2. On June 11, 1981 Linda Moore submitted her letter of resignation as Second Vice President of AFGE Local 495. Her letter was highly critical of the Union and its President, Evelyn Greeson. She gave a copy of her letter to her husband, Jimmy Moore.

[4] The General Counsel does not contend that Respondent unduly or unreasonably protracted the proceeding.

[5] The legislative history behind this language discloses that

> The test of whether or not a Government action is substantially justified is essentially one of reasonableness. Where the Government can show that its case had a reasonable basis both in law and fact, no award will be made. [See H.R. Rep. No. 1418, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 10 (1980), reprinted in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 4989.]

This standard has been recognized in the application of the EAJA to the National Labor Relations Board. Tyler Business Services v. N.L.R.B., 695 F 2d 73 (CA-4), 111 LRRM 3001 (1982). See also Jim's Big M, 266 NLRB No. 119, 113 LRRM 1019 (1983).

3. On June 13, Jimmy Moore circulated an election petition which both had signed. A week later he returned the petition to a representative of the National Federation of Federal Employees. During this same period, Jimmy and Linda Moore's resignation letters were found by AFGE Local 495 officers on bulletin boards at the VA Medical Center. Linda Moore was out of the state during this period in which the petition was being circulated.

4. By letter dated July 28, the Union notified Linda Moore that charges had been preferred against her which could lead to expulsion. Hearings were held but Linda did not appear to testify, although she had notice of the hearings.

5. On December 21, Linda Moore filed this unfair labor practice charge alleging she had been expelled because of her marital status. In truth, she was not actually expelled until a vote of the membership on January 4, 1982. She appealed this decision. It appears from the application (p. 2) herein that the charge was dismissed by the Regional Director and later reinstated by the General Counsel. The dates of these latter actions are not indicated.

6. In exercising his discretion to issue the complaint against AFGE Local 495, the General Counsel chose not to be influenced by the terms of a Release (Resp. Exh. No. 3), signed by both Linda and Jimmy Moore, dismissing with prejudice their civil lawsuit in the U.S. District Court for the District of Arizona.[6] The terms of the Release executed on April 28, 1982 included a promise by both Jimmy and Linda Moore that they,

> ". . . shall not file any further litigation on any present and/or future claims arising out of or in connection with action taken against the Plaintiffs by AFGE Local 495 at its January 1982 membership meeting or prior thereto concerning the matters covered by this lawsuit. Further, in this regard the Plaintiffs recognize that Plaintiffs shall be bound by the decision or decisions to be issued by AFGE in connection with any appeals emanating from the aforesaid action taken by AFGE Local 495 and expressly agree that Plaintiffs shall not file any litigation arising out of or in connection with such appeals."

[6] In the interim, Linda and Jimmy Moore had filed suit in October 1981, alleging various causes of action against the Respondent Local Union, as well as several of its officers individually, for violations of their civil rights, breach of contract, and defamation (Resp. Exh. No. 4). Linda Moore admitted that the facts underlying that lawsuit center on the same allegations she made here - that she was improperly expelled from the Respondent Local Union. Throughout the civil litigation, Linda Moore was represented by an attorney, Debra Hillary.

Ultimately, AFGE determined that her appeal to the National was untimely.

7. In the unfair labor practice proceeding before me, Respondent protested that Linda Moore, who had already refused to attend two union hearings, was now attempting to get out from under a legally binding "accord and satisfaction" in the District Court lawsuit by seeking relief from the Authority concerning the same dispute. In passing on this defense, I first ruled that it was proper for the General Counsel to amend the complaint at the hearing to state the correct date of expulsion as being in January 1982, albeit after the charge was filed. However, I further stated as follows:

> I feel compelled to point out, however, that such ruling permits Charging Party Moore to do indirectly (via the General Counsel) precisely what she could not do herself directly. Because of the clear language of the Release executed on April 28, 1982, Moore was precluded from thereafter filing an amended charge (should one have been legally necessary), or a new charge (should her first charge already have been dismissed on the grounds, for example, that it was premature or lacked merit, or both). Although a different judicial forum might conclude that Moore's conduct violated the spirit of the Release, the issue raised by the Respondent is whether the terms of the Release estop Moore from proceeding with this case. Although I will address this issue I must observe at the outset that resolution of this issue is not critical. The real issue is whether Moore's Release estops the General Counsel from litigating this matter.
> Since Moore did not, in fact, file any further litigation, she technically complied with the literal language of the Release. In this regard, I note that the Release did not expressly require Moore to withdraw the related unfair labor practice charge then pending before the Regional Director of the Authority. Therefore, she was not estopped.
> . . . More importantly, the Regional Director was not barred because he was not a party thereto. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss on this ground is denied.

In the absence of exceptions by Respondent (because it prevailed on other grounds) my ruling on this contention is nonprecedential and not binding upon the Authority.

8. On May 20, 1982 the Authority issued its decision in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2000, AFL-CIO, 8 FLRA No. 125, 8 FLRA 718 (1982) finding that the allegations at issue could not be litigated under section 7116 of the Statute because such allegations involved matters within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Assistant Secretary pursuant to section 7120 of the Statute. The complaint therein alleged a failure to comply with section 7116(c) in violation of section 7116(b)(1) and (8). Notwithstanding the foregoing decision, the Complaint in the instant case was issued on August 12, 1982.

9. In my decision below, I granted Respondent's motion to dismiss on jurisdictional grounds. In reaching this conclusion I noted at footnote 11 that the proviso to section 7116(c) states that this subsection "does not preclude any labor organization from enforcing discipline in accordance with procedures under its constitution or bylaws to the extent consistent with the provisions of this chapter." I also quoted from the legislative history as follows:

> . . . The initial jurisdiction to decide alleged violations of the standards of conduct for labor organizations will be retained by the Assistant Secretary, who administers similar standards in the private sector. [Emphasis supplied].7/

Finally, I recommended dismissal of the complaint noting that:

> Here, as in AFGE Local 2000, the thrust of the allegations against the Respondent concern purely internal union matters, to wit: whether the Respondent had sufficient reason to expel Linda Moore from membership and, if so, whether its constitution and bylaws were followed in that procedure. Under the case law cited above, therefore, I find that the matters at issue involve allegations that certain of Respondent's conduct was inconsistent with and violative of its constitution and bylaws, and thus are matters within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Assistant Secretary of Labor pursuant to the provisions of Section 7120 of the Statute. (footnote omitted).

In the absence of exceptions by the General Counsel, my decision is, of course, nonprecedential and not binding upon the Authority.

C. Whether the Position of the General Counsel in Initiating this Proceeding was Reasonable in Law.

1. As authority for its legal position, the General Counsel cites National Treasury Employees Union and National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 53 (Internal Revenue Service and Brooklyn District Office), 6 FLRA No. 37, 6 FLRA 218 (1981), where the Authority found that a union had committed an unfair labor practice in removing a steward from office for having testified in an Authority proceeding--a right found to be protected under section 7102 of the Statute. The Authority noted "this should not be construed as abrogating the union's control of its own internal affairs in the absence of a statutory violation such as here involved." (Emphasis added). Thus the Authority was very carefully limiting its decision to the type of conduct involve therein; i.e. discrimination because a person appeared as a witness and gave testimony in an Authority proceeding. The Authority did not indicate that its decision was applicable to any alleged violation of section 7116(b) and no issue was raised as to whether the Assistant Secretary also had jurisdiction pursuant to section 7120 of the Statute and section 208.37 of the Rules and Regulations.[8] In my opinion, therefore, the NTEU case lends no support for the General Counsel's position.

2. The General Counsel also contends that Respondent's reliance (and therefore my reliance) on American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2000, AFL-CIO, 8 FLRA No. 125, 8 FLRA 718 (1982), herein AFGE Local 2000, is misplaced because that decision is distinguishable and inapposite.[9] Although the General Counsel probably has no choice but to make this contention, I cannot help but note that he is indirectly challenging the basis for my dismissal even though he already elected not to file exceptions with the Authority and challenge it directly. Whether the Authority would want to deal with this contention is a matter for the Authority to decide. As for me, I still believe AFGE Local 2000 governs this case. What needs to be emphasized, however, is that the issue here is not whether I correctly decided the jurisdictional issue or even whether the Authority may have reached a different conclusion. Rather, the issue is whether the General Counsel - armed with whatever evidence was gathered in its investigation of the charge, and charged with knowledge of the state of the law as it existed at that time - had a reasonable basis in law and fact for issuing a complaint on August 12, 1982 and putting Respondent to the expense of defending against this governmental action.

The only reason asserted for attempting to distinguish that case from this one is the contention that AFGE Local 2000 "did not involve the violation of other statutory rights." Actually, however, the cases are similar. Thus, they both arise out of an internal union disciplinary proceeding alleging violation of the union's constitution and bylaws and in both cases the General Counsel is arguing that discipline resulting from "improper motivation" is a violation of another statutory right. In AFGE Local 2000, the statutory section allegedly violated is section 7116(b)(1); here the statutory section is section 7116(b)(4). To me, it makes no difference. To claim jurisdiction by merely alleging a violation of section 7116 is not the same as proving the Authority has jurisdiction. A more persuasive "legal position" is required.[10] The General Counsel's position was rejected in AFGE Local 2000 by the Authority and in its decision it emphasized the fact that the Assistant Secretary of Labor had exclusive jurisdiction. As noted earlier (see fn. 7), I quoted from the legislative history indicating that, at least, the Assistant Secretary had initial jurisdiction. In view of the AFGE Local 2000 decision, and no persuasive arguments to distinguish its applicability, it's my opinion that the General Counsel's position is not substantially justified because it is not reasonable in law.

[9] In its brief dated December 17, 1982, in the unfair labor practice proceeding before me, the General Counsel never even mentioned the AFGE Local 2000 case.

[10] It has also been held by one court that the "position of the United States" (section 2412 (d)(1)(A) of EAJA) means the arguments relied upon by the government in litigation, rather than the "underlying (governmental) action" that precipitated the lawsuit. Spencer et. al. v. N.L.R.B. et. al., 712 F 2d 539, DC Cir. (June 28, 1983).

D. Whether the Position of the General Counsel in Initiating this Proceeding was Reasonable in Fact.

1. The General Counsel contends, and I agree, that the mere fact that Respondent prevailed before the Administrative Law Judge does not alone justify the granting of an award of fees and expenses. As noted in the legislative history: "The standard, however, should not be read to raise a presumption that the government position was not substantially justified, simply because it lost the case." [See H.R. Rept. No. 1418, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 11 (1980), reprinted in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. and Ad. News 4990.] On the other hand, if it is found that no prima facie case has been established by the General Counsel, and additionally, if no exceptions are filed to such finding, does it follow from this that the General Counsel's position was not reasonable in fact? The answer, I believe, is that it depends upon the facts of each case. Accordingly, like the National Labor Relations Board, it is necessary to resolve these questions on a case-by-case basis.[11]

2. The General Counsel also contends that "the fact that the Administrative Law Judge's findings of fact differed from the investigative evidence on which the issuance of the Complaint was based does not have any substantial significance here." In theory, I agree with the foregoing statement; in fact, I disagree as to its application here. This is because I reject the suggestion that my findings "differed from the investigative evidence" on which the complaint was based. In this regard I assume that the General Counsel's case-in-chief represents the evidence upon which the complaint was based. Essentially this consisted of the testimony of Jimmy and Linda Moore and certain documentary evidence, primarily the transcript of the disciplinary hearing. From the very beginning of this proceeding the General Counsel has proceeded on the erroneous assumption that if I accepted Linda Moore's testimony that she was not involved in Jimmy's campaign to replace AFGE with NFFE and that she did not authorize him to use her resignation letter as part of his campaign, then I necessarily would have to infer that the Union's motive in preferring charges against her was her marital status. But, in fact, it is insufficient to merely prove her lack of participation in Jimmy Moore's campaign. The General Counsel also has to prove the Union knew or had reason to know of her lack of involvement, but preferred charges anyway, and presumably for one reason only, namely, her marital status.12/ In other words, the General Counsel would have to prove that the Union's charges against Linda were baseless and from this fact argue that the Union must have had an unlawful motive. The fact that Linda Moore, in her pretrial affidavit and at the hearing, denied being involved in Jimmy's circulation of a petition does not make the Union's charges baseless. When the General Counsel issued his Complaint, he already had before him the transcript of the Union's hearing of August 1, which stated that Linda's resignation letter was placed on the "VA Medical Center Bulletin Boards" (G.C. Exhibit No. 8, pages 1 and 6). Therefore, the General Counsel was aware that the Union had reason - whether mistaken or not - for suspecting complicity on the part of Linda Moore in her husband's activities. The burden was on Linda Moore to respond to these charges and inform the Union that it was mistaken in preferring charges against her. Because Linda refused to participate in the Union's disciplinary proceeding, the evidence against her was undenied and unrebutted. As a result, she was found guilty and expelled. I reject the General Counsel's reliance on a so-called "marital assumption." There is absolutely no evidence in the hearing transcript to suggest that Linda's marital relationship played any part in the Union's decision to prefer charges in the first place and find her guilty in the second place. The foregoing evidence was known to the General Counsel before he issued his complaint and was unchanged as a result of the evidence adduced at the hearing. In footnote 17 of my decision I stated as follows: "Assuming, arguendo, that the authority has jurisdiction here, I would find and conclude that the General Counsel failed to prove a prima facie case of any violation of section 7116(b)(4)." With respect to this conclusion, I would like to make these two points: (a) My recommendation was not based in any way on the fact that I discredited Jimmy Moore; his testimony was corroborative only. Linda's testimony, if credited, could still stand alone; (b) I did not discredit Linda Moore; rather, I specifically declined (in paragraph 6) to decide whether Linda Moore gave Jimmy "carte blanche authority" to utilize her resignation letter as he saw fit. Indeed, I further stated that "the possibility exists that she did not know what use he was going to make of it." In the light of the foregoing, I am at a loss to understand the General Counsel's statement (brief, p. 9) that "the facts as credited would not support the taking of exceptions. . ." My view of the case is that the General Counsel, if he wished, could have filed exceptions both to my recommended dismissal on jurisdictional grounds as well as to my finding that there was no prima facie case on the merits. However, since there may be a myriad number of reasons why the General Counsel decided not to file exceptions, I agree with the contention that as far as this case is concerned, the failure to file exceptions is not dispositive.

[11] Even where a prima facie case was found by the Judge and no exceptions were filed, the NLRB declined to find whether the establishment of a prima facie case is a prerequisite to finding the General Counsel's position reasonable in law and fact. Enerhaul, Inc., 263 NLRB 890 (at fn. 3), 111 LRRM 1085 (1982). On appeal, the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the NLRB and awarded fees and expenses. 113 LRRM 3636.

12/ I have difficulty understanding why the fact of her marital status is necessarily the only reason to be inferred. Is the General Counsel suggesting that the Union would have taken no action against Linda Moore if she were merely a co-worker who had written the same letter which was found posted on a bulletin board? Isn't it possible, and indeed more likely, that the charges were preferred against Linda Moore because of the contents of her resignation letter; i.e. the harsh criticism and accusations concerning Union President Greeson's integrity and competence? No evidence was introduced to show that similar letters were written and disseminated by other members, but that charges were not preferred against them (thus inferring disparate treatment).

3. The General Counsel further contends in his Answer as follows:

> In the investigation and resolution of unfair labor practices, the General Counsel is not empowered to resolve credibility conflicts which may arise. Under the statutory scheme of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, it is the role of the Authority, through its Administrative Law Judges, to credit or discredit witnesses,through the mechanism of the adversary hearing whereat witnesses testify under oath, are subject to direct and cross-examination and can be observed in their demeanor by the Administrative Law Judge.

I agree with the foregoing statement and I am sure there will be many cases where the General Counsel will be required to issue a complaint in order for a judge to resolve crucial factual questions which hinge upon making a credibility determination. However, as I have indicated above, this is not the case here and it is for this reason that I reject, as misleading, the General Counsel's assertion that the factual basis for its case was undermined because I "substantially discredited the testimony of Jimmy Moore." As noted above, Jimmy Moore's testimony was corroborative only. Assuming, arguendo, that I credited both Linda and Jimmy in all respects, the result in this case would be no different. Proving a negative proposition (i.e. Linda's noninvolvement) isn't the same as proving an affirmative proposition (i.e. that the Union's charges were based upon her marital status, rather than upon a mistaken belief that she posted or authorized someone else to post her resignation letter on the bulletin board.)

4. For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraphs of this section, I find and conclude that the General Counsel's position was not substantially justified because it had no reasonable basis in fact. Inasmuch as the complaint alleged no statutory violations other than section 7116(b)(4), I find it in unnecessary to address the arguments raised in the General Counsel's brief at pp. 7 and 8.

E. Whether Special Circumstances make the Award sought Unjust.

1. The General Counsel contends, and I agree, that the EAJA was not intended to stifle the good faith exploration of novel issues through the administrative process. Section 2430.3(b) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides that "special circumstances" may make the award of fees sought unjust. The legislative history on this point is enlightening:

> This "safety valve" helps to insure that the government is not deterred from advancing in good faith the novel but credible extensions and interpretations of the law that often underlie vigorous enforcement efforts. It also gives the court discretion to deny awards where equitable considerations dictate an award should not be made. [See H.R. No. 1418, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 11 (198), represented in 1980 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 4990.]

The foregoing is applicable here, according to the General Counsel, because of his assertion "that the section 7116(b)(4) allegation at issue here--involving marital status--appears to be one of first impression." But, in my opinion, the General Counsel is putting the cart before the horse. The threshold issue is jurisdiction. Once you get past that threshold issue, you can argue whether certain conduct is violative of section 7116(b)(4). The jurisdictional fence to hurdle in this case is the fact that a union has a statutory right under section 7116(c) to enforce discipline, and this entire proceeding arose in that context. Moreover, section 7120 of the Statute gives the Assistant Secretary of Labor the responsibility to review violations of a union's conduct in this respect.

2. We would have a completely different situation if Linda Moore, for example, were attempting to gain admission to the union and was refused membership because of her marital status[13] or any of the other factors set forth in section 7116(b)(4). Such alleged discrimination would not arise out of a union disciplinary proceeding and, in my opinion, - although dicta herein - the Authority would have jurisdiction. Therefore, the

[13] The General Counsel assumes that the term "marital status" in section 7116(b)(4) is not confined to the fact that a person may be married, single or divorced. Thus it is alleged that the Union discriminated against Linda Moore not because she was a married woman (i.e. her individual marital status), but because of whom she was married to (i.e. Jimmy Moore). Assuming that the Authority had jurisdiction in this matter, a novel issue for it to then decide would be the meaning and scope of the statutory term "marital status."

General Counsel is not being precluded from advancing novel legal theories concerning the applicability of section 7116(b)(4) as well as section 7116(c) and (b)(1), so long as he does it in appropriate cases, and this is not one of them.[14] My view of the case before me is that there are no special circumstances which would make the award of fees unjust.[15]

Findings and Conclusions

1. Section 7118(a)(6) of the Federal Service Labor Relations Statute (herein the Statute) and section 2423.14 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provide that hearings in complaints be conducted in accordance with subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5 of the United States Code. Therefore, the hearing before me was an "adversary adjudication" within the meaning of section 504(b)(1)(C) of the EAJA.

2. Section 7105(d) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute authorizes the Authority to appoint administrative law judges under section 3105 of Title 5. Pursuant to Part 2423 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, hearings on unfair labor practice complaints are conducted by administrative law judges. There is no dispute that the undersigned is an "adjudicative officer" within the meaning of section 504(b)(1)(D) of the EAJA.

[14] I would emphasize that the case before me is not one in which the charges against Linda Moore were admittedly based upon a factor prohibited by section 7116(b)(4). Nor is this a case, for example (hypothetically), where a woman is expelled from union membership admittedly and specifically because she married a high-level management official and the union is concerned that her continuing membership may result in the unauthorized disclosure to management of information about the union's internal affairs. In such event, an arguable case for concurrent jurisdiction might be a defense to an EAJA fee application, even though the Authority - in a case of first impression - might decide the Assistant Secretary had initial or exclusive jurisdiction. Such a factual situation might arguably be distinguishable from AFGE Local 2000.

[15] Indeed, if there are any special circumstances in this case, they cut the other way. Linda Moore can hardly be regarded as having "clean hands," having pursued this litigation after signing a Release in the District Court of Arizona agreeing to "be bound by the decision or decisions to be issued by AFGE in connection with" her appeals of her expulsion. Without her cooperation and testimony, the General Counsel could hardly have issued the complaint herein. Moore's conduct, however, is not relevant to the issues actually been considered and decided in this proceeding before me. Rather, it is the General Counsel's decision to issue a complaint which is at issue.

3. My decision recommending dismissal of the complaint for lack of jurisdiction was issued on July 22, 1983. Since no exceptions were filed to my decision, the Authority issued an Order dated August 31, 1983 dismissing the complaint in accordance with the provisions of section 2423.29(a) of the Rules and Regulations. In its Order the Authority stated: "Therefore, . . . the findings, conclusions, and recommendations in the Decision of the Administrative Law Judge constitute, without precedential significance, the findings, conclusions, decision and order of the Authority, and all objections and exceptions thereto are deemed waived for all purposes." On the basis of the foregoing, I find and conclude that the Authority's Order of August 31, 1983 constitutes a "final disposition" of an adversary adjudication within the meaning of section 504(a)(2) of the EAJA. I further find that the Authority's Order of August 31, 1983 constitutes "the entry of a final order establishing that the applicant has prevailed" within the meaning of section 2430.7 of the Rules and Regulations. Accordingly, Respondent is a "prevailing party" within the meaning of section 504 of the EAJA.

4. The application herein was received by the Authority on September 28, 1983. I find and conclude that the Application was timely filed within the meaning of section 2430.7(a) of the Rules and Regulations.

5. The application asserts, and the answer admits, that AFGE Local 495, AFL-CIO is a small local union with less than 300 members. Its office is in Tucson, Arizona. The organization is in existence solely to represent employees at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Tucson, Arizona. It has never had any employees of any kind. Its net worth has always been substantially less than $5,000,000. In compliance with section 2430.6(f), a net worth exhibit was attached to the application.

6. The application asserts, and the answer admits, that AFGE Local 495, AFL-CIO is a labor organization described in § 501(c)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. § 501[c][5]) and is a tax exempt organization.

7. The application asserts, and the answer admits, that the Applicant incurred legal fees and expenses in defending against the unfair labor practice complaint in Case No. 8-CO-20006-2. Since the answer does not specifically deny or contest the amount of the fees and expenses, I deem the assertions set forth in paragraph 5 of the application to be admitted. Accordingly, I find and conclude that the Applicant incurred legal fees for services rendered which equal $5,325.00. In addition, costs and expenses incurred in connection with the rendering of such legal services totalled $144.83. By supplemental affidavit dated October 31, 1983 in connection with its opposition to the motion to dismiss, the Applicant requested additional attorney fees in the amount of $172.50 and expenses of $15.69 for a total of $188.19. This request was also unopposed. Thus the total of services and costs incurred by Applicant in defending itself against the charges alleged in this matter equals $5,658.02. I find and conclude that the application filed by the Applicant complies fully with the requirements of section 2430.4 of the Rules and Regulations.

8. For the reasons more fully set forth above in Sections C and D of the Discussion and Analysis, supra, I find and conclude that the position of the General Counsel over which the Applicant has prevailed was not substantially justified because the General Counsel has not met its burden of showing that its position in initiating the proceeding was reasonable in law and fact.

9. For the reasons more fully set forth above in Section E of the Discussion and Analysis, supra, I find and conclude that no special circumstances exist which would make the award sought unjust. (Section 504(a)(1) of the EAJA and section 2430.3(b) of the Rules and Regulations.)

[16] Section 504(a)(1) of the EAJA provides as follows:

> An agency that conducts an adversary adjudication shall award, to a prevailing party other than the United States, fees and other expenses incurred by that party in connection with that proceeding, unless the adjudicative officer of the agency finds that the position of the agency as a party to the proceeding was substantially justified or that special circumstances make an award unjust. (Emphasis supplied.)

In this regard, section 504(c)(1) of the EAJA provides that a party dissatisfied with the fee determination made under section 504(a) may petition for leave to appeal to the court of the United States having jurisdiction to review the merits of the underlying decision of the agency adverse determination. However, compliance with section 2430.13 of the Rules and Regulations requires the filing of exceptions with the Authority.

It is hereby ORDERED that American Federation of Government Employees, Local 495, AFL-CIO,[17] be awarded $5,658.02 for fees and expenses.

[17] Section 2430.14 of the Rules and Regulations requires applicants seeking payment of an award to file a copy of the Authority's "final decision granting an award" to its Executive Secretary. Notwithstanding a request for payment directly to the attorney involved, my reading of the EAJA and the Authority's Rules and Regulations indicates that payment should be made to the Applicant. Therefore, I direct that the Authority's check for $5,658.02 should be made out for payment to AFGE Local 495, AFL-CIO and mailed directly to its authorized representative, Stanley Lubin, Esq. of McKendree and Lubin, La Hacienda Antiqua, 902 West McDowell Road, Phoenix, Arizona 85007.

ORDER DISMISSING PETITION FOR REVIEW

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute on a petition for review of a negotiability issue filed by the Union.

From the record before the Authority, it appears that during the course of proceedings before the Federal Service Impasses Panel, the Activity by letter dated May 5, 1986, notified both the Panel and Union that it considered the issue before the Panel as contradictory to section 7114(c) of the Statute and not negotiable. On May 13, 1986, pursuant to section 7117 of the Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Union filed a petition for review as to whether the disputed proposal was within the duty to bargain. Subsequently, in a letter dated June 13, 1986, the Agency withdrew the allegation of nonnegotiability.

Since the Agency has withdrawn the allegation concerning the Union's proposal, there is no longer an issue as to whether the proposal is within the parties' duty to bargain under the Statute.

Accordingly, and apart from other considerations, the petition for review in this case is hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and presents issues as to the negotiability of twenty-one provisions of a local agreement disapproved by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute.[1]

II. Positions of the Parties

The fundamental dispute in this case concerns the interpretation of section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1111, 1218,[2] codified at 5 U.S.C. § 5343 (Amendments) (1982 ed.). That section provides, in essence, that matters pertaining to terms and conditions of employment and pay and pay practices which were subject to bargaining by prevailing rate employees covered under section 9(b) of Pub. L. No. 92-392,[3] codified at 5 U.S.C. § 5343 (Amendments, note) (1982 ed.), prior to August 19, 1972 shall continue to be subject to bargaining without regard to the provisions of chapter 71 (the Statute), subchapter IV of chapter 53 (prevailing wage rate systems), and subchapter V of chapter 55 (premium pay), of title 5 of the United States Code. The parties agree that the units of exclusive recognition involved in this case are covered by section 704.[4] The Agency contends, however, that the Union's interpretation of section 704 to permit negotiation on the disputed provisions, which primarily concern employee work rules, is overly broad.

[1] The disputed provisions in the instant case are set forth in Appendix A attached to this decision.

[2] For the text of section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, see Appendix B at 1, attached to this decision.

The Agency contends, generally, that notwithstanding section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, the disputed provisions of the local parties' agreement are nonnegotiable because they directly interfere with management's rights under section 7106 of the Statute or are otherwise inconsistent with the Statute. The Agency argues further that section 704 is intended only to preserve the right of affected employees to negotiate on pay related matters and does not authorize bargaining on terms and conditions of employment unrelated to pay and pay practices. The Agency concludes that since the provisions at issue herein concern terms and conditions of employment unrelated to pay matters, e.g., work rules, those provisions are not protected by section 704.

The Union, on the other hand, contends that section 704 requires the negotiation of matters, including pay and pay practices and other terms and conditions of employment, which had been subject to bargaining prior to August 19, 1972, notwithstanding the management rights provisions of the Statute. The Union argues that section 704 exempts matters pertaining both to terms and conditions of employment and to pay and pay practices from otherwise applicable limitations on bargaining and, since the provisions in dispute concern conditions of employment subject to negotiation prior to August 19, 1972, they are protected by the exemption in section 704.[5]

III. Analysis and Conclusion

The issues in this case concern whether section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 applies to conditions of employment other than pay and pay practices, and, if so, whether it exempts those conditions of employment from the limitations on bargaining set forth in the management rights provisions of section 7106 of the Statute. The Agency concedes that if section 704 applies to conditions of employment other than pay and pay practices and if it exempts those conditions of employment from the management rights provisions and other limitations on bargaining contained in the Statute, all but three of the disputed provisions herein are negotiable because those provisions, or substantially similar provisions, were contained in the parties' agreements prior to August 19, 1972. As to the other three provisions, however, the issue is whether they concern matters which were subject to negotiation prior to August 19, 1972 within the meaning of section 704.

A. The Language of Section 704

In agreement with the Union, the Authority finds that both the language and structure of section 704 support the conclusion that under that provision, agencies must continue to negotiate on terms and conditions of employment, other than pay and pay practices, of prevailing rate employees where those terms and conditions of employment were subject to negotiation prior to August 19, 1972. In particular, section 704(a) and section 704(b) respectively provide for the negotiation of "terms and conditions of employment and other employment benefits" and "pay and pay practices." Not only does section 704 explicitly authorize negotiation on terms and conditions of employment, its requirements with respect to these matters are entirely separate from its requirement that pay and pay practices also be negotiated. The Agency's contention that section 704 concerns only matters related to wages would make section 704(a) and [5] There is no dispute that the provisions at issue herein concern "conditions of employment" within the meaning of section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 and section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute. Union Response to Agency Statement of Position at 9. Agency Statement of Position at 2.

704(b) redundant and section 704(a) unnecessary.[6] This distinction by Congress between "terms and conditions of employment" and "pay and pay practices" leads to the conclusion that section 704 provides for the negotiation of matters other than pay related matters.

B. The Legislative History of Section 704

Not only does the language of section 704 demonstrate that terms and conditions of employment unrelated to pay matters are preserved thereby for negotiation; the legislative history of section 704 further reinforces our conclusion. Section 704 was introduced in the House of Representatives as a part of the House Committee bill (H.R. 11280).[7] The House Committee Report accompanying the bill specifically states that the provision is intended to "preserve the existing right of certain Federal prevailing rate employees to negotiate terms and conditions of employment" and to "preserve unchanged the scope and substance of the existing collective bargaining relationship. . . ."[8]

During the debate in the House on the labor relations provisions of H.R. 11280, Congressman Ford of Michigan, who had introduced section 704, not only affirmed that it was intended to preserve the existing scope of bargaining for specific groups of prevailing rate employees, but also specifically stated that the purpose of the provision was to overrule two Comptroller General decisions.9/ In those decisions, the Comptroller General held that while section 9(b) exempted certain bargaining agreements from the other provisions of the prevailing rate statute, it did not exempt those agreements from other applicable laws and regulations such as those pertaining to overtime compensation. In addressing the legislative history of section 704, the Agency appears to base its interpretation of section 704 on the fact that these decisions, which, according to Congressman Ford, section 704 was designed to overrule, concern pay matters. The Agency reads this part of the legislative history too narrowly.

[6] Union Response to Agency Statement of Position at 2, 8-10. Even if section 704(a) were interpreted to mean "terms and conditions of employment related to pay," the redundancy would not disappear, since whatever matters would be included in the phrase would be indistinguishable from "pay practices" under section 704(b).

[7] As set forth in the House Committee bill, the section which is currently section 704 was denominated section 704(c). As set forth in the bill passed by the House (the "Udall substitute") section 704 was denominated section 704(d). Between the issuance of the House-Senate Conference Report and the passage of the bill by Congress, the other provisions of section 704 had been stripped from the section and what had been section 704(d) became section 704.

[8] For the relevant text of the House Report, See Appendix B at 2, attached to this decision.

In the first place, Congressman Ford's statement makes it clear that section 704 is intended to preserve the existing scope of bargaining for employees covered by section 9(b) not only as to other laws pertaining to pay matters but also as to limitations in the Statute pertaining to the negotiation of terms and conditions of employment, including "wages, pay practices, and other practices" (emphasis added), unrelated to pay. Thus, Congressman Ford speaks more generally of preserving the right of those employees to negotiate terms and conditions of employment in accordance with the "prevailing practice principle," rather than tying such negotiations to the specifically wage-related "prevailing rate principle." Congressman Ford further states that the purpose of section 704 is to insure that qualified craft employees of the Federal Government "enjoy comparable terms and conditions of employment" to employees in the same crafts in the private sector, so that such employees are not lost to Federal service.10/

10/ Id. In this regard, see Appendix B at 2-3, the Conference Committee Report, at 159, Legislative History at 827, wherein it is stated:

> This section also provides specific statutory authorization for the negotiation of wages, terms and conditions of employment and other employment benefits traditionally negotiated by these employees in accordance with

Moreover, the Agency's narrow interpretation of section 704 is contradicted by the subsequent history of the legislation. The Conference Committee Report reaffirms that section 704 is intended, as stated by Congressman Ford, to overturn the aforementioned Comptroller General decisions. But the report goes on to state that section 704 is "also" intended to provide specific statutory authority for the negotiation of "wages, terms and conditions of employment and other employment benefits."11/ [Emphasis added.] Consistent with the structure of section 704, as discussed above, the Report addresses separately the right preserved in section 704 to negotiate on terms and conditions of employment and the right to negotiate on pay matters. Contrary to the Agency, therefore, the legislative history of section 704 demonstrates that that provision is intended to authorize negotiation not only on pay and pay practices, but also on other terms and conditions of employment unrelated to pay matters.

C. The Language and Legislative History of Section 9(b)

Section 9(b) of Pub. L. No. 92-392 does not support the claim that section 704 relates only to pay matters. Although section 9(b) was enacted as part of the statutory provisions governing the establishment of wage rates for prevailing rate employees, the terms of section 9(b) concern general terms and conditions of employment as well. Section 9(b)(1) provides, essentially, that the provisions of Pub. L. No. 92-392 establishing the prevailing rate system shall not be interpreted in any way to nullify or otherwise affect the provisions of existing negotiated agreements relating to wages, terms and conditions of employment, and other employment benefits of certain specified groups of prevailing rate employees. Here also Congress provided separately for the negotiation of pay matters and of terms > prevailing practices in the private sector of the economy. [Emphasis added.]

See also section 704(a), set forth in Appendix B at 1, which specifically provides for the continued negotiation of matters "which were the subject of negotiation in accordance with prevailing rates and practices prior to August 19, 1972 . . . ." [Emphasis added.]

11/ For the relevant text of the Conference Committee Report, See Appendix B at 3-4 attached to this decision.

and conditions of employment unrelated to pay. Thus, even though the statutory provisions of which section 9(b) is a part pertain to pay-setting for prevailing rate employees, section 9(b) is clearly intended to preserve for negotiation all matters previously negotiated by those employees, not just matters pertaining to wages.

This conclusion is confirmed by the legislative history of section 9(b). The House Committee Report, for example, states as follows:[12]

> The provisions of section 9(b) are directed at those groups of Federal employees whose wages and other terms or benefits of employment are fixed in accordance with contracts resulting from negotiations between their agencies and employee organizations. . . . It is not this committee's intent to affect, in any way, the status of such contracts or to impair the authority of the parties concerned to renegotiate existing contracts or enter into new agreements. [Emphasis added.]

Section 9(b) of Pub. L. No. 92-392 is intended to preserve the whole range of matters subject to negotiation by certain prevailing rate employees in existing bargaining relationships, not just that portion which pertains to pay and pay practices. Section 704 continues this policy.

D. Congressional Intent in Enacting the Statute

The Agency also argues that the Union's interpretation of section 704 to require bargaining on matters pertaining to the exercise of management rights is inconsistent with Congress' intent, in enacting the Statute, to protect those rights. In support of this argument, the Agency refers to statements in the legislative history of the Statute which describe the management rights set forth in section 7106 as "essential."[13] Such generalized discussion of management rights, however, is not sufficient to override the specific terms of section 704(a) as confirmed by the pertinent legislative history. Section 704(a) provides that agencies are required to bargain on terms and conditions of employment contained in collective bargaining agreements prior to August 19, 1972 without regard to chapter 71 of title 5 (the Statute), to the extent that the provisions of chapter 71 are inconsistent with section 704.[14] The plain meaning of that subsection is that it exempts provisions of specified collective bargaining agreements from the limitations on the scope of bargaining set forth in the Statute, including the management rights provisions of section 7106.[15] The House Committee Report confirms this interpretation, stating: "The subsection excludes these employees from the restrictions on the scope of collective bargaining under chapter 71 . . . ."[16] The Conference Committee Report states that the subsection is not to be construed, among other things, to "nullify" the right of any party to bargain on "benefits" previously negotiated.[17] Yet that is precisely what the Agency's interpretation of section 704 would do -- nullify long-standing provisions of the parties' collective bargaining agreement based upon a purported conflict with management rights under section 7106. The Agency's interpretation, therefore, is contrary to the plain terms and legislative history of section 704(a).

News 2980, 2985, states that section 9(b) "is a savings clause to prevent disruption or modification of existing wage board bargaining agreements now in effect." The plain language of this statement indicates that Congress intended to preserve bargaining on all provisions of existing wage board agreements, not just those pertaining to wages. The Conference Committee Report, H.R. Rep. No. 1275, 92d Cong., 2nd Sess. (1972), reprinted in 1972 U.S. Code Cong. and Ad. News 2994, 2997, is silent on section 9(b).

E. Conclusion

In sum, contrary to the Agency's contentions, as to matters subject to bargaining by prevailing rate employees prior to August 19, 1972, section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 provides for the negotiation of terms and conditions of employment unrelated to pay and pay practices of employees subject to its provisions, such as the work rules and other provisions at issue in this case, notwithstanding the management rights provisions of the Statute. With certain exceptions discussed below, the Agency concedes that the provisions pertaining to terms and conditions of employment of unit employees at issue herein were subject to negotiations between the parties prior to August 19, 1972. We hold, therefore, that the Agency is required to negotiate on those provisions, notwithstanding their possible conflict with management rights under section 7106 of the Statute.[18] See The Columbia Basin Trades Council, Grand Coulee, Washington and The Grand Coulee Project Office, Bureau of Reclamation, U.S. Department of the Interior, Grand Coulee, Washington, 20 FLRA No. 40 (1985).

IV. Analysis and Conclusion With Respect to the Remaining Issues

The Agency contends that three of the disputed provisions are not protected by section 704 because they concern matters which were not contained in any of the parties' collective bargaining agreements prior to August 19, 1972.[19] However, the record indicates that the provisions remaining in dispute involve subject matters which had previously been negotiated by the parties. While the provisions themselves had not been included in previous agreements, they constitute changes in previously negotiated provisions rather than the introduction of entirely new subject matter.[20] That is, as to Provision 1, the Agency contends that the provision constitutes a substantial change in the role of the Union on the joint labor-management apprenticeship committees and in the authority of those committees. See Agency Statement of Position at 15-22. As to Provision 2, the Agency contends that the grievance procedure in effect prior to August 19, 1972 did not prohibit management from invoking arbitration. In addition, the Agency contends that Provision 2 violates section 7121(b)(3)(C) of the Statute which requires negotiated grievance procedures under the Statute to provide that either the agency or the exclusive representative may invoke arbitration. See Agency Statement of Position at 23-24. This is the only provision alleged by the Agency to be nonnegotiable under the Statute on a ground other than management rights under section 7106. However, as discussed above, section 704 protects the right of the parties to negotiate on matters without regard to limitations on the scope of bargaining established by the Statute, which would include section 7121. As to Provision 13, the Agency contends that the parties' prior agreements contained no restrictions on how much work could be assigned, or at what times it could be assigned, to heavy truck drivers. See Agency Statement of Position at 49-54.

[18] The Agency concedes that eighteen of the disputed provisions were included in the parties' agreements prior to August 19, 1972: Provisions 3-12, 14-21. See Agency Statement of Position at 27, 30-31, 32, 35, 38, 39-40, 41, 45, 46, 49, 53, 56, 58, 59, 61, 65, 66, 68-69, and 70. The instant case is distinguishable from International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 640 and U.S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, 18 FLRA No. 102 (1985). In that case, the Authority held that section 9(b) and section 704 do not authorize negotiation on matters inconsistent with law where such law is not specifically referenced in section 9(b) or section 704. In this case, we hold that matters inconsistent with management rights are negotiable because those rights are specifically referenced in section 704.

[19] The disputed provisions, as set forth in Appendix A attached to this decision, are Provision 1 at pages 1-2 of the Appendix, Provision 2 at page 2 of the Appendix, and Provision 13 at pages 12-14 of the Appendix.

Thus, the issue is whether section 704 permits the negotiation of changes in previously negotiated subject matter without sacrificing the protection which that section affords. For the following reasons, we conclude that the three provisions are negotiable.

Section 704 provides that matters subject to negotiation by certain prevailing rate employees prior to August 19, 1972, shall be negotiated after the enactment of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 "in accordance with the provisions of section 9(b) of Pub. L. No. 92-392." Section 9(b) of Pub. L. No. 92-392, see Appendix B at 1, provides, in essence, for parties covered by that section to negotiate, after the enactment of Pub. L. No. 92-392, for the "modification, or improvement" of provisions of agreements entered into prior to the enactment of that law. Parties covered by section 9(b) are not confined merely to the continuation of the terms of previously existing agreements but could, in a new agreement, change those terms or alter the rights of the respective parties concerning the matters involved. The legislative history of section 9(b) not only confirms this interpretation, but suggests, further, that that provision permits the inclusion of "new terms" -- presumably items not in previous agreements -- in any renegotiated agreement.21/ Moreover, the legislative history of section 704 indicates that it was intended to continue the policy established by section 9(b): "[Section 704] may not be construed to nullify, curtail, or otherwise impair the right or duty of any party to negotiate for the renewal, extension, modification, or improvements of benefits negotiated."22/ By the use of terms such as "modify" and "improve," it is clear that Congress did not intend to preclude parties from negotiating changes in the provisions of previous agreements or to prevent them from adding to or increasing the rights already negotiated.

[20] For reference to the provisions of the parties' agreements prior to 1972 which relate to the subject matter of Provisions 1, 2, and 13 in this case, see Appendix B at 4, attached to this decision.

Therefore, to the extent discussed above, section 704 and section 9(b) require an agency to continue to negotiate on subject matters which were included in agreements to which it was a party prior to August 19, 1972. The record indicates that the three provisions in dispute concern subject matters included in the parties' agreements prior to August 19, 1972: joint labor-management apprenticeship committees, arbitration, work rules for heavy truck drivers.23/ Since section 704 permits bargaining on 21/ For the relevant text of the House Report, see Appendix B at 5, attached to this decision.

---

22/ See Conference Committee Report, Appendix B at 3-4, attached to this decision.

23/ In deciding that the subject matters of the disputed provisions are protected by section 704 because those matters were contained in the parties' agreement prior to August 19, 1972, it is unnecessary to reach the Union's additional argument that in order for a matter to be covered by section 704 it is enough that it was included in an agreement of any of the parties subject to section 9(b) prior to August 19, 1972, not just in an agreement of the modifications and improvements of matters about which the parties had negotiated prior to August 19, 1972, without regard to limitations imposed by the Statute, negotiation of provisions which, for example, would be more restrictive of management's rights than previous agreements, is protected by section 704. Therefore, negotiation of such restrictions on management's rights is not an expansion of the scope of bargaining which is inconsistent with section 704, as the Agency contends, since it does not involve an entirely new subject matter which had not been negotiated by the parties prior to August 19, 1972. Rather, it constitutes a permissible "modification or improvement" in employee "benefits" which is within the scope of bargaining protected by section 704.

In each instance herein, the disputed provisions merely add to or otherwise modify already existing limits on management action. For example, Provision 1 increases the authority of the joint labor-management apprenticeship committees over aspects of the apprenticeship program beyond the limits on the role of those committees set forth in previous agreements. Provision 2 substitutes the Union for the aggrieved employee as the party which may invoke arbitration; but in precluding the Agency from invoking arbitration, it represents no change from prior agreements. Provision 13 merely adds new restrictions to the already existing limitations on the assignment of work to heavy truck drivers which were set forth in the work rules governing those employees. As changes or modifications of the rights of the Union and of employees, or of the restrictions on management action, which had been negotiated by the parties prior to August 19, 1972, Provisions 1, 2, and 13 are protected by section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 from the limitations on bargaining set forth in the Statute and are within the duty to bargain.

APPENDIX A

Provisions At Issue In The Instant Case:

Provision 1

11. APPRENTICESHIP

11.01 An appropriate system of apprenticeship shall be established and maintained for employees covered by this Agreement.

11.02 The minimum standards for apprenticeship shall conform to the standards of and shall be approved by the Bureau of Apprenticeship, U.S. Department of Labor, prior to adoption.

11.03 A Central Joint Council on Apprenticeship consisting of three representatives appointed by the Administrator, and three representatives designated by the Council shall be maintained. The Administration's Supervisor of Apprentice Training will be an ex-officio member.

11.04 The powers and functions of the Central Joint Council on Apprenticeship shall be as follows:

(1) To select a chairperson, establish its own rules of procedure, and determine the time and place of its meetings;

(2) to prepare and revise as deemed advisable the Standards of Apprenticeship to be recommended to the Bureau of Apprenticeship, U.S. Department of Labor;

(3) to direct and to review and approve the work of the various craft committees (see paragraph 11.05);

(4) to monitor the progress and effectiveness of the apprenticeship program and take action, through the Craft Committees, to improve program effectiveness.

11.05 For each craft in which apprentices are to be trained, there shall be established a craft committee consisting of two members of the Administration's supervisory staff and two members representing labor. When the appropriate labor representative cannot attend an apprentice examination, one journeyman from the location at which the examination is being held can be designated to attend on official time for the time spent in the examination. The Administration's supervisor of Apprentice Training shall be an ex-officio member of each such committee.

11.06 The powers and functions of the craft committees are as follows:

(1) To prepare and recommend to the Central Joint Council craft apprenticeship standards that include a program of work experience, a program of related training, and the maximum ratio of apprentices to journeymen;

(2) To select a chairperson who will be a BPA Management official;

(3) To evaluate and select candidates for the craft apprentice program;

(4) To conduct periodic examination of apprentices;

(5) To advance apprentices, if appropriate; and

(6) To terminate apprentices from the craft apprenticeship program if appropriate. [Only the underlined portion of the provision is in dispute]

Provision 2

12. GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE

12.09 The expenses of arbitration, including the compensation and expenses of any outside arbitrator, shall be borne equally by the Administration and the Council. Only the Council or an affiliated union may take an issue to arbitration.

Provision 3

16. SPECIAL LEAVE FOR UNION ASSIGNMENTS

16.01 Unions affiliated with the Council may request leave of absence for Administration employees for the purpose of accepting assignments with the union. Such employees, if they have worked at least one year for the Administration, may be granted leave without pay for a period not to exceed one year. Subject to DOE regulations on leave without pay provisions, they may be granted an additional year of leave without pay. If at the end of that period they wish to remain with the union, they will resign their Federal employment with the understanding that when they wish to return to the Administration, they will be reemployed subject to the following conditions:

(1) Evidence of satisfactory physical and mental qualifications.

(2) The individuals must have acquired career or career-conditional status, and have served the time requirements outlined in FPM 315, 4-5.

(3) The individual must notify the Administration of a desire for reemployment within 30 days after the termination of the union assignment. Subsequent to receiving this notification and subject to other conditions listed here, the individual will be offered the first vacancy to occur in the branch of the trade at the grade left or below. The individual will not be obligated to accept a position below the grade formerly held but upon accepting any employment with the Administration or upon declining to accept a position equal in grade to the one left all obligations under this plan would be terminated.

(4) There is no qualified priority placement person required by law who wants the vacant position.

After being reemployed, such individual will not be granted further leave without pay for a union assignment until having been reemployed for a period at least equal to that of the preceding union assignment, or 2 years whichever is less.

Provision 4

17. JURISDICTIONAL BOUNDARIES AND DISPUTES

17.01 The determination of jurisdiction boundaries between and among the various unions affiliated with the Council shall be the sole and exclusive responsibility of the national and international unions representing employees of the Administration. Where such jurisdictional agreements or awards affect the assignment of work by the Administration, the Council shall so notify the Administration.

17.02 The Administration shall assign work in conformance with such traditional jurisdictions, agreements or awards in a manner consistent with its responsibility to meet operating and construction requirements and to accomplish the duties and responsibilities assigned to it.

17.03 Where work boundaries for the unions affiliated with the Council have been established through custom, practice or tradition or by agreements between unions or by decisions of jurisdictional award bodies which are on record with the Administration, the employee represented by each union shall normally perform the work within the established boundary. However, in emergencies unusual circumstances, or in the absence of jurisdictional agreements, awards or understandings, the Administration retains the right to assign work, until an agreement is reached between the unions, or an award is rendered. Thereafter, and as soon as possible, the Administration shall alter its assignments and schedules to conform to such agreement or award.

18. WORK OUTSIDE OF CLASSIFICATION

18.01 Employees shall not be required to perform work outside their classification, except in cases of extreme emergencies; in such a case the employees affected shall be under the direct supervision of a foreman or other regular worker regularly performing this work.

18.02 Employees classified as helpers will in no event be used to replace journeymen.

SUPPLEMENTARY AGREEMENT NO. 2

WORKING RULES FOR ELECTRICAL WORKER CRAFT SERIES

2-1. GENERAL

2-1.04 In subsequent paragraphs of these working rules which define the work of journeymen, it shall be understood that apprentices and trainees may perform such work for training purposes subject to the ratio limits established by Apprenticeship Standards and provided that only grade V and VI line apprentices shall be permitted to work on poles or structures performing hot line work.

2-1.05 Foremen at all levels (I, II, and III) shall have journeyman qualifications in the branch of the trade in which they are employed.

2-1.06 Journeymen-in-Charge, Foremen I and II (or their equivalents) will be required to handle tools and do that class of work required of a journeyman, except that Foremen II shall not do this type of work while supervising a crew larger than may be supervised by a Journeyman-in-Charge, unless:

a. life or property is in danger and there are no other qualified persons available to do the work, or

b. the only work being supervised is transmission line right-of-way maintenance work and there is no electrical hazard involved.

2-1.07 Foremen III shall not normally handle tools or do that class of work required of their crews except in situations such as the following:

a. When necessary to check the work of others.

b. When necessary to train others.

c. When life or property is in danger and there are no other qualified persons available to do the work.

2-1.08 When two journeymen are assigned to work together without other supervision, one shall serve as a Journeyman-in-Charge and be paid accordingly. This does not apply to operators, craftsmen or to situations where a Lineman is supervising journeymen from other crafts as provided in paragraph 2-5.05. Journeymen will not be considered to be working together when they are performing work at the same location and at the same time which each was assigned to do separately.

2-1.10 Operation of hydrolifts assigned to electrical crews shall be by Line Equipment Operators or journeymen of the electrical craft.

SUPLEMENTARY AGREEMENT NO.2

WORKING RULES FOR ELECTRICAL WORKER CRAFT SERIES

2-2. LINEMEN

2-2.06 An Aircraft Patrol Observer shall be or shall have been journeyman Lineman.

2-2.07 A Line Equipment Operator A operates the following vehicles and equipment when it is assigned to a line crew:

a. Line trucks equipped with a boom and winch.

APPENDIX B

2/ Section 704 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 (CSRA) provides:

> Sec. 704. (a) Those terms and conditions of employment and other employment benefits with respect to Government prevailing rate employees to whom section 9(b) of Public Law 92-392 applies which were the subject of negotiation in accordance with prevailing rates and practices prior to August 19, 1972, shall be negotiated on and after the date of the enactment of this Act in accordance with the provisions of section 9(b) of Public Law 92-392 without regard to any provision of chapter 71 of title 5, United States Code (as amended by this title), to the extent that any such provision is inconsistent with this paragraph.
> (b) The pay and pay practices relating to employees referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be negotiated in accordance with prevailing rates and pay practices without regard to any provision of--
> (A) chapter 71 of title 5, United States Code (as amended by this title), to the extent that any such provision is inconsistent with this paragraph;
> (B) subchapter IV of chapter 53 and subchapter V of chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code; or
> (C) any rule, regulation, decision, or order relating to rates of pay or pay practices under subchapter IV of chapter 53 or subchapter V of chapter 55 of title 5, United States Code.

3/ Section 9(b) of Pub. L. 92-392 provides as follows:

> . . . .
> (1) abrogate, modify, or otherwise affect in any way the provisions of any contract in effect on the date of enactment of this Act pertaining to the wages, the terms and conditions of employment, and other employment benefits, or any of the foregoing matters, for Government prevailing rate employees and resulting from negotiations between Government agencies and organizations of Government employees;

> (2) nullify, curtail, or otherwise impair in any way the right of any party to such contract to enter into negotiations after the date of enactment of this Act for the renewal, extension, modification, or improvement of the provisions of such contract or for the replacement of such contract with a new contract; or
> (3) nullify, change, or otherwise affect in any way after such date of enactment any agreement, arrangement, or understanding in effect on such date with respect to the various items of subject matter of the negotiations on which any such contract in effect on such date is based or prevent the inclusion of such items of subject matter in connection with the renegotiation of any such contract, or the replacement of such contract with a new contract, after such date.

8/ H.R. Rep. No. 1403, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 61-62 (1978) states as follows:

> Section 704(c) is intended to preserve the existing right of certain Federal prevailing rate employees to negotiate terms and conditions of employment. The committee intends that this subsection preserve unchanged the scope and substance of the existing collective bargaining relationship between the employees' representatives and the agencies involved. The subsection excludes these employees from the restrictions on the scope of collective bargaining under chapter 71, and grants them authority to negotiate pay and pay practices without regard to any provision of chapters 51, 53, and 55 of title 5, or other provisions relating to rates of pay or pay practices with respect to Federal employees.

Reprinted in Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, House of Representatives, 96th Cong., 1st Sess., Legislative History of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute of 1978, Committee Print No. 96-7, at 675 (1979) (hereinafter Legislative History).

9/ Congressman Ford stated as follows:

> During committee markup, I offered an amendment to add a new provision, section 704(c), which is intended to preserve the scope of collective > bargaining heretofore enjoyed by certain trade and craft employees. . . . This provision is required because of two recent rulings by the Comptroller General which invalidated certain collectively bargained provisions and held that specific legislative authorization is necessary for these employees to continue to negotiate such provisions in accordance with prevailing private industry practice. Decisions Nos. B-189782 (February 3, 1978) and B-191520 (June 6, 1978).

> Certainly, we should not now be narrowing the preexisting collective bargaining practices of any group of Federal employees. This provision of the bill would have the effect of overruling the two Comptroller General decisions, and would adopt his own suggestion for specific legislative authorization. The provision would specifically authorize the continuation of prior collective bargaining practices, and would allow these employees, whom Congress already sought to protect in the savings provision of 1972 wage board reform law, to continue to negotiate their _terms and conditions of employment_ in accordance with the prevailing practice principle. I do not intend to expand nor contract the scope of bargaining that existed prior to the Comptroller General decisions. In the past, these employees have negotiated wages, pay practices, and other practices in accordance with the prevailing practice principle. This has produced some of the most stable and effective collective bargaining in the history of public employee labor relations. It has enabled the Federal Government to procure and retain qualified craft employees who otherwise might choose employment in private industry, by insuring that they will enjoy comparable terms and conditions of employment. [Emphasis added.]

124 Cong. Rec. 25722 (1978), _Legislative History_ at 857.

> CERTAIN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS
> Section 704(d) of the House bill provides certain savings clauses for employees principally in agencies under the Department of the Interior and the Department of Energy who have traditionally negotiated contracts in accordance with prevailing rates in the private sector of the economy and who were subject to the savings clauses prescribed in section 9(b) of Public Law 92-392, enacted August 19, 1972.

The Senate contains no comparable provision.

The conference report adopts the House provision with an amendment.

As revised, section 704(d) overrules the decision of the Comptroller General in cases number B-L89782 (Feb. 3, 1978) [sic] and B-L9L520 (June 6, 1978), [sic] relating to certain negotiated contracts applicable to employees under the Department of the Interior and the Department of Energy. This section also provides specific statutory authorization for the negotiation of wages, terms and conditions of employment and other employment benefits traditionally negotiated by these employees in accordance with prevailing practices in the private sector of the economy.

Section 704(d)(1) authorizes and requires the agencies to negotiate on any terms and conditions of employment which were the subject of negotiations prior to August 19, 1972, the date of enactment of Public Law 92-392. Section 704(d)(1) may not be construed to nullify, curtail, or otherwise impair the right or duty of any party to negotiate for the renewal, extension, modification, or improvements of benefits negotiated.

Section 704(d)(2) requires the negotiation of pay and pay practices in accordance with prevailing pay and pay practices without regard to chapter 71 (as amended by this conference report), subchapter IV of chapter 53, or subchapter V of chapter 55, of title 5, United States Code, in accordance with prevailing practices in the industry.

See also Article 11.04 and 11.06 of the Collective Agreement Between the Administrator, Bonneville Power Administration and Columbia Power Trades Council, Revised July 1, 1971, as set forth in Exhibit D attached to the Union's Petition for Review (hereinafter referred to as the "1971 Agreement"), which provides for the joint labor-management apprenticeship committees to develop standard apprenticeship plans and minimum craft standards. As to Provision 2, see Union Response to Agency Statement of Position at 31-32. See also Article 12.10g of the 1971 Agreement, as set forth in Exhibit D attached to the Union's Petition for Review, which appears to provide only for the employee to invoke arbitration. As to Provision 13, see Union Response to Agency Statement of Position at 32-33. See also Section 4-2.02 of Supplementary Agreement No. 4 of the 1971 Agreement, as set forth in Exhibit D attached to the Union's Petition for Review, which, contrary to the Agency's contention, prescribes limits on heavy truck drivers steering of pole trailers and Section 1-23 of Supplementary Agreement No. 1 of the 1971 Agreement, as set forth in Exhibit D attached to the Union's Petition for Review, which prescribes hours of work for all unit employees, including heavy truck drivers.

> Savings clause for existing agreements
> Section 9(b)(1) of the bill, with the committee amendment, provides that the amendments made by the Act shall not be construed to abrogate, modify, or otherwise affect the provisions of any existing contract pertaining to the wages, conditions of employment, and other employment benefits of Government employees, which contract resulted from negotiations between agencies and employee organizations. Paragraph (2) of section 9(b) states that the provisions of any contract in effect on the date of enactment of the Act may be renewed, extended, modified or improved through negotiation after the enactment date of the Act. Paragraph (3) of section 9(b) provides that the Act shall not affect any existing agreement between agencies and employee organizations regarding the various items which are negotiable, nor shall the Act preclude the inclusion of new items in connection with the renegotiation of any contract. DIGEST NOTES

In agreement with the Judge, the Authority found that the agency violated § 7116(a)(1) by coercively interrogating a unit employee and thereafter proposing disciplinary action against the employee in connection with her refusal to supply the names of employees referenced in an affidavit requested of her pursuant to a pending District Court proceeding. The interrogation of the employee clearly resulted from her exercise of protected activity. Thus, the Authority noted the Judge's finding that the affidavit was prepared by the employee while acting as a representative of the union, and that the questions posed and answered in the affidavit reflect that it was executed by the employee in a representational capacity in an effort to remedy discriminatory practices affecting bargaining unit employees. The Authority agreed with the Judge's finding that management's interrogations and threats necessarily conveyed to the employee and other bargaining unit members the clear message that discipline, harassment, or both would follow as a direct result of pursuing legitimate union interests. The Authority found it unnecessary to pass upon whether the agency contravened established Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) regulations and other laws cited by the Judge.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator sustained the union's grievance that under Pub. L. No. 96-342, in order to have contracted out the maintenance functions, alone, the agency was required to conduct a new cost comparison after it modified the procurement contract to delete firefighting functions. The arbitrator's award directed the agency to terminate the procurement action and to reinstate the employees involved with appropriate backpay.

READEX FICHE best copy available

In its exceptions, the agency contended that the award was contrary to management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to make determinations with respect to contracting out. The agency also contended that the direction to reinstate affected employees with backpay is contrary to the Back Pay Act. Addressing for the first time the remedial authority of an arbitrator in resolving grievances disputing determinations by agencies to contract out agency work, the Authority in Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986) held that an arbitrator can sustain a challenge to a procurement action only on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. In the subject case, the Authority found that the arbitrator was not authorized to sustain the grievance on the basis of an obligation that the arbitrator "felt" Congress intended in Pub. L. No. 96-342, but did not specifically provide. Therefore, it was found that the arbitrator's award sustaining the grievance and directing the agency to terminate the procurement action is contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(B). In view of this conclusion, it was determined that the arbitrator's direction to reinstate the affected employees with backpay is likewise deficient. Accordingly, the award was set aside.

The agency having conceded that the grievant had been improperly evaluated in violation of the collective bargaining agreement, the arbitrator stated the issue to be one of remedy, and directed the agency to: (1) properly reevaluate the grievant's performance for the disputed appraisal period; and (2) issue a fully satisfactory or higher performance rating to the grievant for the disputed appraisal period.

While agreeing that the arbitrator appropriately directed management to properly reevaluate the grievant's performance under the established elements and standards, the agency in its exceptions maintained that by additionally ordering that the grievant's rating be no less than fully satisfactory, the award is, to that extent, contrary to management's rights under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). By directing the agency to rate the grievant's performance no lower than fully satisfactory, the Authority found that the arbitrator improperly substituted her judgment for that of management contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). Accordingly, the award was modified to strike any order or direction as to what the grievant's performance rating for the disputed appraisal period should be after reevaluation by management. The Authority has recently held that in resolving disputes pertaining to performance appraisal matters, an arbitrator may: (1) resolve employee grievances claiming that management's application of established performance standards adversely affected the employee's performance appraisal; (2) sustain the grievance on finding that management applied the standards in violation of law, regulation, or an appropriate provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreement; and (3) as a permissible remedy, direct that the grievant's work product be properly evaluated by management. However, the Authority has cautioned that the arbitrator may not substitute his or her own judgment for management's in deciding what the employee's evaluation and rating should be.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal concerning travel and per diem is negotiable. The agency's argument that the proposal does not involve conditions of employment was summarily rejected by the Authority for the reasons set forth in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) appealed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986). The proposal is within the duty to bargain as it is within the agency's administrative discretion, and is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. The negotiability of travel and per diem is based on consideration of whether the travel involved is in the primary interest of the Government so as to constitute official business without consideration of § 7131 official time. The Authority noted the agency did not cite any legal or regulatory provision which would absolutely prohibit it from exercising through negotiations the discretion which it possesses to determine whether, and under what circumstances, travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is in the primary interest of the Government. Also, the union acknowledges that provisions of the Travel Expense Act and the Federal Travel Regulations apply. Thus, the Authority finds the proposal is within the duty to bargain.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which provides that "[t]he decision by the employer to contract out work presently being performed by bargaining unit employees will be made in accordance with OMB Circular A-76 (unless application of the Circular is prohibited or not required by the Ciruclar)," is negotiable. The Authority concluded that the proposal would only contractually recognize external limitations on management's right and would not itself establish any particular substantive limitation on management in the exercise of that right. The Authority further noted, that the provision (1) did not change the statutorily prescribed scope and coverage of the parties' negotiated grievance procedure; (2) would not prevent management from reaching the decision to contract out or from implementing that decision; (3) does not create any new right of appeal since the right to file grievances concerning contracting-out decisions is created by the Statute and nothing in OMB Circular A-76 restricts the statutory right to file such grievances. The Authority again emphasized that in reviewing management's contracting out actions for conformity with applicable laws and regulations, an arbitrator may not substitute his or her judgment for that of the agency. See Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72, slip op. at 6-7 (1986).

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding finding that the Respondent had engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order as modified below.

In agreement with the Judge's conclusion, the Authority finds that Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute, within the totality of circumstances of this case, by coercively interrogating a unit employee and thereafter proposing disciplinary action against the employee in connection with her refusal to supply the names of employees referenced in her court affidavit.1/

1/ In so concluding the Authority finds it unnecessary to pass upon whether the Respondent contravened established Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) regulations and other laws cited by the Judge.

In determining that the interrogation of employee Handke resulted from her exercise of protected activity, we note particularly the Judge's findings on page 12 of his decision:

> The circumstances presented in this case indicate that the affidavit was prepared by Handke while acting as a representative of the Union. The questions posed and answered in the affidavit reflect that it was executed by Handke in a representational capacity in an effort to remedy discriminatory practices affecting bargaining unit members . . . . Handke's representational activity dominates the picture presented by the evidence. At the time the affidavit was planned she was concluding her term as president of the Union. She was a Union representative on the Respondent's EEO Committee. Her work location was the focal point of Union activity, and in 1981-1982, she had served as a Union steward.

Further, we fully agree with the Judge's findings on page 16 that "[t]he conduct conveyed to Handke, and other bargaining unit members, the clear message that discipline and/or harassment would follow as a direct result of the pursuit of legitimate Union interests."

ORDER[2/]

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, Cincinnati Operations, Cincinnati, Ohio, shall:

[2/] The Authority agrees with the Judge that, in light of the District Court Order providing for the revocation of Handke's suspension and for deletion of all relevant references to insubordination in Handke's personnel file, a cease and desist order, together with a posting, would best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interfering with, restraining, or coercing Jan Handke, or any other employee in the exercise of rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, by conducting interrogations concerning protected union activity, and by threatening disciplinary action for failing to disclose details of information relating to such protected union activity.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Post at its facilities at the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, Cincinnati Operations, Cincinnati, Ohio, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by an appropriate official and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and all other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region V, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This case arose as an unfair labor practice proceeding under the provisions of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq. (hereinafter referred to as "the Statute"), and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

The complaint alleged that on or about June 19, 1984, and July 16, 1984, the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, Cincinnati Operations, Cincinnati, Ohio (Respondent or NIOSH), through the conduct of Philip J. Bierbaum and F. Sutton Kay, violated Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by interrogating a representative of American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3840, AFL-CIO (Charging Party or Union) concerning the identities of five NIOSH employees referred to in an affidavit prepared by the representative in conjunction with a pending court case, and in conjunction with representational duties performed on behalf of the Union. The complaint also alleged that on the same dates the Respondent, through Bierbaum and Kay violated Section 7116(a)(1) by threatening to discipline the Union representative for failing to reveal the identities of the five NIOSH employees referred to in the affidavit.

Counsel representing the Respondent contends that Respondent's representatives were conducting a legitimate inquiry to help establish evidence of discriminatory practices, and further that under the circumstances presented herein the conduct outlined was not violative of Section 7116(a)(1).

The parties were represented by counsel during the hearing and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, and examine and cross-examine witnesses. Based upon the entire record herein, including exhibits, and other relevant evidence adduced at the hearing, and briefs filed by the parties, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

General Background Information

The record reveals that the Respondent's activities in Cincinnati are operated and supervised by the Centers for Disease Control, Department of Health and Human Services (CDC), through a facility in Atlanta, Georgia known as Headquarters, National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health. The Union is the exclusive representative of a unit of Respondent's employees consisting of certain professional and non-professional General Schedule and Wage Grade employees.[1] Philip J. Bierbaum has served as the Deputy Director of Respondent's Division of Surveillance, Hazard Evaluations and Field Studies (DSHEFS) since 1976. F. Sutton Kay has been employed as Operation Management Officer for DSHEFS, under Bierbaum, since 1977 or 1978.

The Union official referred to in the complaint was identified as Jan Handke, an epidemiologist in DSHEFS. Handke served as President of the Union for a one year period ending on May 7, 1984, when the position was taken over by James P. Agee, Handke's successor (Tr. 17, 22-23). During the preceding year (1982-1983), Handke served a term as the Union's

[1] The Union represents about 300 bargaining unit members out of a total of approximately 500 to 600 employees engaged on behalf of the Respondent in Cincinnati.

Vice-President, and during the year 1981-1982 she served as the Union's Steward for DSHEFS (Tr. 22). Since October 10, 1982, Handke has served as a Union representative on the Respondent's Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) Committee. The Committee was established under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement governing the labor relations of the Respondent and the Union (Jt. Exh. No. 1 at 9; Tr. 18-19). The EEO Committee meets quarterly for the purpose of assisting the Respondent to develop and implement a more effective EEO program (Jt. Exh. No. 1 at 10). The Committee deals generally with affirmative action policy, and discusses individual problems at times (Tr. 133). Handke was also selected to serve as the Union's EEO Fair Practices Coordinator. The selection was made at a Union meeting in June of 1984 by James P. Agee, the current Union President (Tr. 17).

Handke's identification with the Union was further established by the fact that during the period that she served as President of the Union, her office was enlarged to provide additional space for the Union as required by the collective bargaining agreement (Tr. 23-24). Union files were maintained at her office work location in space provided by the Respondent, and Union business was conducted at her work location.

Handke's Association with Union Representational Duties on Behalf of James E. Peguese

James E. Peguese was employed as an industrial hygienist in DSHEFS from approximately 1981 until May of 1984 (Tr. 24-25). He filed two grievances, both of which were handled by the Union (Tr. 152). The first was filed in March of 1984 to protest an unsatisfactory performance rating (Tr. 27, 116).[2] The grievance interposed objection to the rating and also alleged a failure to follow relevant provisions of the collective bargaining agreement in the preparation of Peguese's performance rating (Tr. 118). Peguese's second grievance related to Respondent's denial of a within-grade pay increase (Tr. 27-28). It was not pursued to arbitration because it was felt that the arbitrator's decision relating to the first grievance would dispose of issues posed in the second (Tr. 28).

As President of the Union Handke discussed Peguese's grievances with Union stewards assigned to handle them, and met with Peguese and stewards on at least three occasions to discuss them (Tr. 29-31). She was involved in decisions made at each step of the grievance procedure (Tr. 30-31).

In the latter part of March 1984, after the initiation of the Peguese grievances, Peguese was served with a letter of proposed separation (Tr. 31). Peguese retained Lee Thompson, a Columbus, Ohio attorney to represent him in connection with this proposed adverse action (Tr. 37-38, 134). The removal action, like the two earlier grievances involved the issue of poor performance (Tr. 118-119, 153).

[2] This grievance eventually went to arbitration and was pending decision at the time of hearing.

In addition to Peguese's use of the adverse action procedure to oppose Respondent's proposed letter of separation, Peguese also initiated an EEO complaint in an attempt to defeat Respondent's efforts to remove him (Tr. 33-34, 153). The complaint, based upon a charge of racial discrimination, alleged that Bierbaum and Kay were the officials responsible for the discriminatory conduct designed to effect his removal (Tr. 72, 118, 150-151).

On March 30, 1984, Peguese designated the Union to represent him during the informal stage of his EEO complaint, and Jan Handke was designated to serve as his Union representative (G.C. Exh. No. 2, Tr. 33-34). Handke accompanied Peguese to a meeting with the EEO Counselor assigned to the case, and her name appears on the "Designation of Representative" form as well as other documents filed in connection with the informal stages of the EEO proceeding (Tr. 34-35). As a result of this Union representational activity, Handke was very familiar with the issues raised in the Peguese EEO complaint (Tr. 151-152).

Circumstances Surrounding Preparation of Affidavit for Filing in James E. Peguese v. United States, et al, Case No. C-1-84-896, United States District Court, Southern District of Ohio

Following the issuance of the EEO Counselor's report in the latter part of April 1984, Peguese retained his attorney Lee Thompson to replace Handke as the representative of record for the formal stage of the EEO proceeding (Tr. 33-34, 38). At about the same time Thompson filed an action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio to enjoin the adverse action proceeding brought to remove Peguese (Tr. 41-42). At this point Thompson was acting as Peguese's representative in defense of the removal action, as attorney of record in the EEO proceeding, and as Peguese's attorney in the District Court action. However, the Union continued to represent Peguese in connection with grievances filed under the negotiated grievance procedure.

Peguese advised Handke of Thompson's interest in Handke's preparation of an affidavit relating to knowledge gained by Handke through her representation of Peguese during the informal stage of the EEO proceeding (Tr. 42). Upon the basis of knowledge gained as a Union official Handke agreed to express her view that Peguese had been subjected to racial discrimination (Tr. 151). On May 5, 1984, just prior to the expiration of her term as Union President, Handke wrote Thompson to confirm that she would prepare an affidavit as a witness in the District Court proceeding, but noted that she would need a list of questions Thompson wished to have answered in the affidavit (G.C. Exh. No. 3).

Thompson's questions were delivered to Handke on May 7, 1984, and the affidavit was prepared by Handke on May 7 and 8, 1984. She utilized Union grievance files located in her office to verify some of the dates incorporated into her responses (Tr. 45-46).

The affidavit, included in the record as G.C. Exh. No. 4, reflects questions and answers relating to Handke's Union membership; Union offices held during 1983 and 1984;[3] responsibilities and duties assumed as Union Vice-President, and President; Handke's personal knowledge regarding Respondent's proposals to remove white and black employees in 1983 and 1984; and whether Handke thought the Peguese removal action involved unfair treatment.

Question (7) of the affidavit requests Handke to state her "personal knowledge regarding management at NIOSH-Cincinnati Operations proposing to remove white and black employees in 1983 and 1984." Handke's affidavit reflected the following language relative to this inquiry:

> In June 1983 Mr. Jon Ruse, head of the Personnel Office at NIOSH-Cincinnati Operations gave the only black clerk-typist in his office a letter stating she would be fired. The date of implementation was about two days before she would have completed her one-year probationary period as a permanent employee and have the right to appeal to the Merit System Protection Board. She refused to resign so that she would have the right to file a formal EEO complaint and clear her name. As a result of pressure on management at NIOSH-Cincinnati Operations by concerned employees, she was then immediately rehired by another supervisor as a temporary employee. Since then she has informed me she received two "exceeded" ratings on her annual performance evaluation in January, 1984.

[3] The affidavit indicates that she served as President during the period "May 1983 - April 1984"; however, it appeared from the record that Handke's successor was the President Elect until he assumed office on May 7, 1984, and that Handke's term of office did not technically terminate until May 7, 1984 (Tr. 17, 22-23).

> In July 1984[4] a white clerk-typist in the Division of Surveillance, Hazard Evaluations and Field Studies (DSHEFS) discussed with me a letter she received proposing that she be fired. This firing was reversed by officials in Atlanta and she was allowed to transfer to another Division.
> Around December 1983 a white health technician in DSHEFS received a letter proposing that he be fired. This firing was reversed by officials in Atlanta and he was given a 30-day suspension.
> In March 1984 a black industrial hygienist in DSHEFS received a letter proposing that he be fired. This action is currently being appealed to officials in Atlanta.
> In April 1984 my immediate supervisor informed me he was going to fired [sic] a black clerk-typist. I argued strongly that this was unfair and discriminatory since she was being treated differently from a white male doctor in the same Section who was asked to resign by the Director of DSHEFS. (This white male doctor subsequently transferred to a different supervisor.) My immediate supervisor then reversed his decision and the clerk-typist was laid off.

The affidavit reflects that Handke refused to name the individuals referred to in Question (7). She responded that she could not reveal the names because of "confidentiality." (G.C. Exh. No. 4 at Question (8)). Her testimony at the hearing established that she did not intend to conceal the identity of the individuals referred to from "NIOSH management," and that she included sufficient detail for management to identify the employees involved (Tr. 71, 109-110). To this end she supplied relevant dates, and identifying data relating to employee job titles, race, sex, and office location, together with descriptive phrases about surrounding circumstances (Tr. 109-110). However, she did not wish to disclose the names of employees publicly in the affidavit because she wanted to protect the reputations of the employees who had in the past been subjected to proposed removals, and because she had been advised by the Union's District Office to consider the names confidential until the District Judge ordered her to reveal the names (Tr. 108-109). Her testimony established that these matters involved Union grievances which were considered confidential by the Union (Tr. 110).

[4] Handke's testimony established that the date used in the affidavit was a typographical error, and that "July 1983" was intended (Tr. 58).

The record revealed the following relative to the Union's representational interest in the episodes outlined in the Handke affidavit:

The June 1983 Episode[5] - This episode involved Florence Darks, an employee in Respondent's Personnel Office. She was not a member of the bargaining unit. Handke became aware of the matter as a result of employees reporting to her as the Union President, and then as a result of Darks asking the Union to represent her in connection with an EEO complaint arising out of management efforts to terminate her employment. Handke was designated as her representative (G.C. Exh. No. 5, Tr. 47-48). Thereafter Handke represented her as a Union representative during the informal stage of her EEO complaint, and as an individual during the formal stage of the EEO proceeding (Tr. 50-51). The matter was of special concern to the Union and was the subject of Union Executive Committee discussion on more than one occasion (Tr. 52-53, 55). The informal stage of the EEO proceeding lasted many months (Tr. 54), and involved a number of Union sponsored initiatives (Tr. 56).

The July 1983 Episode - This matter involved Linda Smith, a bargaining unit employee in DSHEFS. Smith requested the Union to represent her when management threatened to terminate her employment (Tr. 58-60). Smith sought out Handke personally; and Handke and another Union official served as designated Union representatives (G.C. Exh. No. 6, Tr. 62, 127-128). Although Smith did not file a formal grievance, the Union represented her interests in the matter through informal contacts with management (Tr. 126-127, 131). The matter was resolved by classifying Smith as a handicapped person with a learning deficiency. She was demoted and retained as an employee (Tr. 63).

The December 1983 Episode - This segment of the affidavit involved Dorris Hale a bargaining unit employee in DSHEFS. Handke became aware of the case when Hale received a letter indicating that management planned to terminate Hale's employment. Hale contacted the Union and requested representation, and a Union representative handled Hale's administrative appeal (Tr. 64-65). Handke had conversations with Hale, and discussed strategy with the designated Union representative (Tr. 66-67). As a Union representative Handke also had conversations with Bierbaum, Kay and other management officials concerning the Hale matter (Tr. 67-68).

The March 1984 Episode - This paragraph of the affidavit refers to the previously outlined efforts to terminate the employment of James E. Peguese because of poor performance.

[5] For convenience the five episodes mentioned by Handke in reply to Question (7), are referred to by dates used in the Handke affidavit.

The April 1984 Episode - This element of the affidavit refers to a matter involving one Kim Gordon, a black clerk-typist who was not a member of the bargaining unit. Handke became personally aware of the plan to terminate Gordon, and in a personal capacity, intervened on Gordon's behalf with management officials (Tr. 69-70).

Handke Interrogated by Bierbaum and Kay Following Filing of Handke Affidavit in United States District Court Action

On May 9, 1984, Lee Thompson, acting as Peguese's attorney, filed the Handke affidavit in the United States District Court proceeding brought to obtain a temporary restraining order in the Peguese adverse action proceeding (Tr. 72). The affidavit was submitted to the District Court as the statement of a witness testifying on behalf of Peguese to establish an evidentiary basis for a temporary restraining order.

The filing of the affidavit came to the attention of Kay, who then phoned Everett L. Martin, Chief of Labor and Employee Relations for CDC in Atlanta (Tr. 160). Martin and Kay decided that it would be necessary to interrogate Handke to obtain the exact identity of individuals that Handke referred to in factual situations outlined in her affidavit. According to Kay and Martin it was further determined that Kay should undertake this assignment so that the names could be turned over to the appropriate people at CDC for the purpose of initiating further investigation to determine whether discriminatory actions had in fact occurred (Tr. 161, 172-173, 186).6/ However, as will be described in more detail herein, Respondent's representatives were then completely aware of the identity of individuals referred to in the affidavit. One purpose of the interrogation was made clear. The interrogation was proposed as part of Respondent's efforts to prepare a defense for use in the District Court action (R. Exh. No. 2 at 11).

Kay summoned Handke to his office on June 19, 1984. She attended the meeting with C. K. Wang, Vice President of the Union, who acted as here reprentative (Tr. 73). At the meeting Kay and Bierbaum advised Handke that the allegations were serious, and that disclosure of the identity of the individuals to Kay and Bierbaum was necessary to permit NIOSH to initiate an investigation into discriminatory practices to see if they existed, and to provide a basis for appropriate action (Tr. 105, 112, 162). Kay's testimony indicated that he and Bierbaum were the individuals conducting the investigation (Tr. 166). They asked her if she had prepared the affidavit, whether or not she had signed it, and then requested her to identify the individuals referred to in the document (Tr. 75-76, 163). The record as a whole indicates the first two questions were unnecessary inasmuch as Kay and Bierbaum knew that she had prepared the affidavit before Kay scheduled the interview. It was also clearly established that Kay and Bierbaum, and/or other NIOSH officials knew the identity of the individuals referred to in the document. This fact was admitted during the interview (Tr. 77, 79, 143, 149, 173-175, 178-179, 181).

6/ Martin's testimony established that neither Handke nor Peguese were suspected of any criminal activity or wrongdoing in connection with the information presented in the affidavit (Tr. 203-204).

Handke acknowledged that the affidavit was hers but refused to name the individuals because of possible civil liability related to her disclosure under the circumstances; because she did not know the legal basis for Kay and Bierbaum insisting upon disclosure, and lastly, because the affidavit had been filed in connection with the then pending Federal court case (Tr. 164). Bierbaum and Kay strongly disagreed with her refusal and conveyed to Handke, erroneous information to the effect that the court case had been settled (Tr. 77-78, 164). On behalf of Handke, Wang informed Kay and Bierbaum that the Federal case was still pending and that there were appropriate court procedures for interrogating witnesses (Tr. 76-77). Kay and Bierbaum insisted that she answer and threatened her with discipline for failing to reveal the names (Tr. 78). Handke repeatedly stated that she would be willing to provide the names "in the proper legal format." (Tr. 78-79). Kay and Bierbaum became uncertain about the status and the effect of the Federal case and decided to terminate the interrogation at this point (Tr. 166).

Following the meeting Handke wrote directly to the Director of DSHEFS to express concern about Division policy concerning such interviews, and to inquire whether he thought the meeting appropriate (Tr. 80, 83). Her Union representative sent a similar letter to Kay and Bierbaum. He noted objections to the questioning because of the pending court case, and mentioned the need to follow appropriate civil procedure in such cases (Tr. 83-84).

As a followup Kay contacted Everett Martin in Atlanta concerning the interview. Martin stated that he would communicate with the Office of the United States Attorney as they were handling Respondent's defense in the District Court proceeding (Tr. 168). Martin called Kay back to advise that Kay and Bierbaum should postpone any further questioning (Tr. 168, 187). However, on July 13, 1984, Martin phoned Kay to advise that he (Martin) had again discussed the matter with the United States Attorney's Office and that an Assistant United States Attorney had advised that they could resume their interview of Handke (Tr. 169, 187-188).

On July 16, 1984 Kay and Bierbaum again summoned Handke to a meeting for the purpose of continuing the interrogation (Tr. 80-81). Bierbaum conducted most of the interrogation on this occasion (Tr. 169). C. K. Wang again represented Handke. In response to an inquiry from Wang concerning a failure to reply to Handke's and Wang's letters concerning the propriety of the June 19th meeting, Bierbaum stated that the letters were not worthy of a response (Tr. 83-84). Bierbaum stated that the United States Attorney's Office had advised that the questions previously posed would have to be answered, and repeated the three questions asked on June 19th even though Handke had previously stated that she had prepared and signed the affidavit, and even though they knew the identity of the individuals referred to therein (Tr. 86-87, 169-170). He and Kay repeatedly demanded answers, and at 3:20 P.M. threatened her with discipline based upon insubordination if she did not respond by 3:30 P.M. (Tr. 87-88, 89). Again Handke stated that she would cooperate in an appropriate legal setting (Tr. 89). At 3:30 P.M. Bierbaum declared that the meeting was over (Tr. 89).

Wang again addressed letters to NIOSH on behalf of Handke after this meeting, and Bierbaum had verbal conversations with Wang about the matter (Tr. 182). Bierbaum indicated that there would be no response to his letters, because the Respondent's position had been stated (Tr. 182-183).

On August 7, 1984, Handke was served with a notice that NIOSH intended to suspend her for a period of six months for her refusal to identify the individuals referred to in the affidavit (G.C. Exh. No. 7). The notice stated that Handke's refusal to answer questions by management representatives, "cannot be tolerated." On August 12, 1984, Handke wrote to a representative of the Respondent and provided the information demanded (G.C. Exh. No. 9).

As a result of the proposal to suspend, Handke wrote to United States District Court Judge S. Arthur Spiegel, who was handling the District Court proceeding, and requested a protective order to prevent further interrogation by Kay and Bierbaum, and to effect a withdrawal of the proposed six-month suspension (Tr. 96). The Charging Party also sought to intervene in the proceeding to protect from harassment, Union members who had filed affidavits in the District Court proceeding, as well as others who might be called as witnesses (R. Exh. No. 2, at 2). Judge Spiegel issued a show cause order requiring that NIOSH establish why such an order should not be granted (Tr. 96-97, G.C. Exh. No. 10).

At a scheduled hearing before Judge Spiegel on October 12, 1984, it was argued that Handke and Wang had been subjected to harassment and interrogations outside of the regular procedures of the court, that NIOSH had sought to circumvent discovery procedure, and had conspired to deter witnesses from testifying fully and truthfully in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 985. It was argued that threats of discipline and suspension were improper under the circumstances presented, and could materially affect the testimony of the witnesses in the District Court proceeding. It was argued that Handke had not refused to answer in an appropriate forum; and that since Kay and Bierbaum were officials alleged to have been guilty of discriminatory practices in the District Court action, and in the Handke affidavit, serious questions were posed concerning the legitimacy and real intent of their interrogations.

As a result of argument presented to District Court Judge Spiegel during the October 12th hearing, the need for a protective order was recognized by the District Court (R. Exh. No. 2 at 11-13, 16, 19-20). However, the protective order became unnecessary by reason of NIOSH assurances that the proposed six-month suspension would be revoked, that all reference to insubordination in relation to the Peguese case would be deleted from Handke's personnel file, that Mrs. Handke would be deposed by the Government in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure; and lastly that no alleged discriminating official would be permitted to conduct any hearing, investigation, or interrogation of Ms. Handke in regard to the NIOSH investigation of Peguese's charges of discrimination, or in regard to the allegations made in the Handke affidavit submitted to the District Court. An order providing a basis for the resolution of the matter along the foregoing lines was entered by Judge Spiegel on October 19, 1984 (G.C. Exh. No. 11).

Discussion and Conclusions

Counsel representing the General Counsel contends that the Respondent, through the conduct of Bierbaum and Kay on June 19th and July 16th, violated Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by interfering with, restraining or coercing Handke in the exercise of rights accorded to her under Section 7102 of the Statute.

Section 7116(a)(1) provides in pertinent part:

> (a) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency -

Section 7102(1) of the Statute provides:

> "Each employee shall have the right to form, join, or assist any labor organization, or to refrain from any such activity, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, and each employee shall be protected in the exercise of such right. Except as otherwise provided under this chapter, such right includes the right --
> (1) to act for a labor organization in the capacity of a representative and the right, in that capacity, to present the views of the > labor organization to heads of agencies and other officials of the executive branch of the Government, the Congress, or other appropriate authorities . . .

A determination of whether a statement violates Section 7116(a)(1) must take into consideration all of the circumstances surrounding the making of the statement. Internal Revenue Service, Mid-Atlantic Service Center, 4 A/SLMR 519, A/SLMR No. 421 (1974); U.S. Customs Service, Region IV, Miami, Florida, 1 FLRA No. 108 (1979), 1 FLRA 942; Veterans Administration Medical Center, Shreveport, Louisiana, 3 FLRA No. 65 (1980), 3 FLRA 429.

That standard by which one may determine interference, restraint or coercion, is not the subjective perceptions of the employee, nor is it the intent of the employer. Rather the test is whether, under the circumstances of the case, the employer's conduct may reasonably tend to coerce or intimidate the employee, or, in the case of a statement, whether the employee could reasonably have drawn a coercive inference from the statement. The effect of the employer's statements must be judged in light of circumstances in which words, innocent in and of themselves, may be understood as threats. Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, 9 FLRA No. 31 (1982), 9 FLRA 199; Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Louisville District, 11 FLRA No. 64 (1983), 11 FLRA 290.

The circumstances presented in this case indicate that the affidavit was prepared by Handke while acting as a representative of the Union. The questions posed and answered in the affidavit reflect that it was executed by Handke in a representational capacity in an effort to remedy discriminatory practices affecting bargaining unit members, particularly James Peguese. Handke's representational activity dominates the picture presented by the evidence. At the time the affidavit was planned she was concluding her term as president of the Union. She was a Union representative on the Respondent's EEO Committee. Her work location was the focal point of Union activity, and in 1981-1982, she had served as a Union steward.

The Union acted as Peguese's representative in connection with two grievances which arose out of personnel actions relating to an unsatisfactory performance rating, and denial of a within-grade pay increase. These grievances had not been resolved as of the date of the alleged unfair labor practice herein, and were then being handled by the Union. As the Union president, Handke played an important role in the formulation of Union decisions relating to the processing of these grievances.

The Respondent's action to remove Peguese in the latter part of March 1984, was the culmination of Respondent's efforts against Peguese. Like the grievances, the removal action turned upon allegations of poor performance. Although, Peguese retained private counsel to represent him in the removal action, he resorted to the Union to help him through the filing of an EEO complaint alleging that Bierbaum and Kay had discriminated against him in connection with the removal action. Handke was Peguese's designated Union representative during the informal stage of the EEO proceeding.

Although Peguese retained a private attorney to represent him during the formal stage of the EEO proceeding, Handke was called upon to assist Peguese's attorney in his handling of Peguese's effort to resist removal. These efforts finally assumed the form of an injunction proceeding initiated by Peguese in the United States District Court. Handke was specifically asked to provide, in affidavit form, information of value which she had gathered through her handling of the informal stage of the EEO proceeding as a Union official. In effect she was assisting Peguese's attorney in the transition required as a result of Peguese's change in designated representatives, and she was at the same time stating, in an appropriate forum, the official position of the Union regarding Respondent's efforts to remove Peguese.

In addition to the Union's deep interest and involvement in Peguese's grievances, Peguese's EEO complaint, and court proceedings, the Union and/or Handke had vital representational interests in other episodes of alleged discrimination referred to by Handke in her affidavit. Specifically, this interest stemmed from the designation of Handke and/or others as Union representatives assigned to assist other alleged discriminatees referred to in the affidavit.

There was no legitimate basis for the Bierbaum and Kay interrogations. It was acknowledged that Respondent's representatives were aware of the identity of the individuals referred to in the affidavit. This circumstance gives rise to considerable inquiry, as do repetitive efforts to establish Handke's authorship of the affidavit filed in the District Court proceeding. Even though she acknowledged her authorship and her signature during the June 19, 1984 meeting, she was again subjected to interrogation concerning these elements on July 16, 1984.

A number of reasons may be cited to establish the absence of any legitimate basis for conducting the interrogations described, or for using threats of discipline for refusal to respond to questions. Perhaps the most glaring and noticeable is the fact that Handke was either a witness, or a prospective witness in a pending District Court proceeding. The Bierbaum and Kay confrontations with Handke were extra-judicial in nature and outside the purview of discovery procedures prescribed in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. This element was clearly recognized by United States District Court Judge Spiegel (G.C. Exh. No. 10, R. Exh. No. 2, G.C. Exh. 11).

Discriminatory practices in the Federal Government are prohibited by 42 U.S.C.A. § 2000e-16(a). Section 2000e-16(b) of Title 42 grants authority to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) to enforce the policy of nondiscrimination in the Federal Government; and instructs the EEOC to issue rules and regulations necessary to carry out its responsibilities under Section 2000e-16. The EEOC has issued regulations requiring Federal agencies to establish programs for equal opportunity in employment. 29 C.F.R. § 1613.201 et seq. Section 1613.203(k) of Title 29 C.F.R. requires agencies to "[P]rovide for the prompt, fair, and impartial consideration and disposition of complaints involving issues of discrimination on grounds of race, color, religion, sex or national origin." The EEOC mandates specific procedures and requires agencies to attempt to resolve complaints of discrimination on an informal basis according to established EEOC guidelines before a formal complaint of discrimination can be filed. 29 C.F.R. § 1613.204(d)(4), § 1613.213, and § 1613.214.

The interrogations utilized by Respondent's representatives in this case contravened established EEOC procedures, and were not authorized by law. Even assuming a legitimate intent to develop evidence of the discriminatory practices alluded to in Handke's affidavit, Respondent's representatives should have referred the matter to appropriate investigatory officials and should have avoided the Bierbaum-Kay confrontations with Handke.[7] [7] Although it would be inappropriate within the context of this case to determine the applicability of federal criminal statutes, it is noted that the interrogations and threats might be considered as possible violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1512. Among other things this Section prohibits tampering with a witness in a United States District Court proceeding.

Furthermore, under the provisions of Section 2302(b)(8)(A)(i) of Title 5, United Stated Code, it is a "prohibited personnel practice" to take disciplinary action against any employee as reprisal for disclosing information which an employee reasonably believes evidences a violation of any law, rule or regulation.

It is also noted that this policy is reflected in the collective bargaining agreement governing the labor relations of the parties (Jt. Exh. No. 1, at 11).

It is also well-settled that an agency may not conduct fact-gathering sessions without limitation when preparing for third party proceedings. In Internal Revenue Service and Brookhaven Service Center, 9 FLRA No. 132 (1982), 9 FLRA 930 the Authority held:

> . . . . Thus, while management may ascertain facts in preparing its case for third-party proceedings without the presence of the exclusive representative, the unit employees have the right under section 7102 of the Statute to 'form, join, or assist any labor organization, or to refrain from such activity, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal[.]' Accordingly, where management exercises its right to interview unit employees in preparation for third-party proceedings, but does not take necessary precautions to preserve employees' protected rights, and instead acts in a manner which 'interferes with, restrains, or coerces' the employees, it violates section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. To protect employees' rights under section 7102 while management attempts to ascertain necessary facts, the Authority concludes that (1) management must inform the employee who is to be questioned of the purpose of the questioning, assure the employee that no reprisal will take place if he or she refuses, and obtain the employee's participation on a voluntary basis; (2) the questioning must occur in a context which is not coercive in nature; and (3) the questions must not exceed the scope of the legitimate purpose of the inquiry or otherwise interfere with the employee's statutory rights. In this manner, the necessary balance between the rights of management and the rights of employees and their exclusive representatives will best be preserved.

This rule may appropriately be applied to the facts of this case. The record disclosed that the interrogations and threats did in part relate to Respondent's preparations for the District Court proceeding. Evidence introduced by the Respondent reflects that they arose in part out of Respondent's effort to prepare a defense concerning evidence introduced through a Union official in the District Court case (R. Exh. No. 2 at 11). The Union's involvement, interest, and participation in the litigation initiated on behalf of Peguese was obvious. Respondent was under an obligation to comply fully with the carefully established guidelines in Internal Revenue Service and Brookhaven Service Center. It is clear that the Respondent failed to do so.

On the basis of the foregoing it is concluded that interrogations and threats would necessarily have had a chilling effect on Handke's continued participation in Union activity. The conduct conveyed to Handke, and other bargaining unit members, the clear message that discipline and/or harassment would follow as a direct result of the pursuit of legitimate Union interests. It operated to interfere with, restrain, and coerce her and other bargaining unit members in the exercise of the statutory right to engage in Union activity. Accordingly, it is concluded that the Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) by subjecting Handke to interrogation and threats as alleged in the complaint.

Having found that the Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order:

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and Section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, Cincinnati Operations, Cincinnati, Ohio, shall;

1. Cease and desist from:

    (a) Interfering with, restraining or coercing Jan Handke, or any other employee in the exercise of rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, by conducting interrogations concerning protected union activity, and by threatening disciplinary action for failing to disclose details of information relating to such protected union activity.[8]

    (b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purpose and policies of the Statute:

[8] Counsel representing the Respondent seeks a cease and desist order and an appropriate posting, together with any further relief deemed just and proper. In light of the District Court Order providing for the revocation of Handke's suspension, and for deletion of all relevant references to insubordination in Handke's personnel file, it is determined that a cease and desist order, together with a posting would best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

(a) Post at its facilities at the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, Cincinnati Operations, Cincinnati, Ohio, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Director, Division of Surveillance, Hazard Evaluation, and Field Studies, National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, Cincinnati Operations, Cincinnati, Ohio, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by other material.

(b) Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region V, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator James E. Fulford filed by the Department of the Navy (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute before the Arbitrator concerned the Activity's determination to contract out certain maintenance and firefighting functions. After the contract had been awarded but before performance had begun, the Defense Authorization Act of 1983, Pub. L. No. 97-252, § 1111, 96 Stat. 718, 747 (1982) was enacted and signed into law prohibiting the contracting out of firefighting functions at any military installation or facility. Consequently, the contract was modified to delete firefighting functions. The Activity determined that a new cost comparison study was not required because the modification was still within the scope of the initial contract. The grievance alleged that the Activity's action was not in accordance with applicable law as required by the parties' collective bargaining agreement. Specifically, the Union alleged that the procurement action, as modified, was not in accordance with section 502 of Public Law No. 96-432, which pertinently requires that no commercial or industrial type function of the Department of Defense

(DOD) may be converted to performance by a private contractor unless the Secretary of Defense provides Congress with a detailed cost comparison which demonstrates that performance by the contractor will result in cost savings to the Government. The Union argued that under that provision the Activity was required to conduct a new cost comparison before the maintenance functions could be contracted out. The Arbitrator agreed with the Union's position, finding that the Activity was required to recertify the modified contract to Congress or at least to conduct a new study to prove that contracting out the maintenance functions would be more cost effective then in-house performance. The Arbitrator therefore sustained the grievance and, as his award, directed the Activity to terminate the procurement action and to reinstate the employees involved with appropriate backpay.

III. EXCEPTIONS

A. Contentions

In its exceptions the Agency contends that the award is contrary to management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to make determinations with respect to contracting out. The Agency also contends that the direction to reinstate affected employees with backpay is contrary to the Back Pay Act.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986), the Authority addressed for the first time the remedial authority of an arbitrator in resolving grievances disputing determinations by agencies to contract out agency work. In sum, the Authority held that under the Statute and procurement law and regulation, arbitrators are not authorized to cancel a procurement action and are authorized to sustain grievances challenging a decision to contract out only on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. The Authority advised that these provisions of law or regulation must be sufficiently specific to permit the arbitrator to adjudicate whether there has been compliance with such provisions.

In this case we conclude that the Arbitrator was not authorized either to sustain the grievance or to cancel the procurement action. In accordance with our decision in Blytheville Air Force Base, the Arbitrator's direction that the Activity cancel the procurement action is clearly deficient. In addition, we find that under Blytheville Air Force Base the Arbitrator was not authorized to sustain the grievance. As noted, the Union essentially claimed in its grievance that under Pub. L. No. 96-342, in order to have contracted out the maintenance functions, alone, the Activity was required to conduct a new cost comparison after it modified the procurement contract to delete firefighting functions. At arbitration the Activity had argued that although the provisions of that law require a cost comparison and a certification to Congress before a contract is awarded, there is nothing in the law requiring another cost comparison and a recertification when the contract is modified prior to its effective date. In rejecting the Activity's argument, the Arbitrator reasoned that if there were no obligation imposed to recertify after a contract has been substantially modified, the provisions of Pub. L. No. 96-342 could be entirely negated. Thus, the Arbitrator decided to impose such an obligation based on his "feel[ing] that Congress intended that substantially modified contracts would be recertified or that at least a new study would prove that in this case, contracting would be more cost effective than in-house performance."

We decided in Blytheville Air Force Base, slip op. at 6, that an arbitrator can sustain a challenge to a procurement action only on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. In this case we find that the Arbitrator was not authorized to sustain the grievance on the basis of an obligation that the Arbitrator felt Congress intended in Pub. L. No. 96-342, but did not specifically provide. Therefore, the Arbitrator's award sustaining the grievance and directing the Activity to terminate the procurement action is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. In view of this conclusion, the Arbitrator's direction to reinstate the affected employees with backpay is likewise deficient.

IV. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is set aside.*/

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Judith A. La Manna filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

For the appraisal period of 1984-85, the grievant received an overall performance rating of minimally satisfactory. He filed a grievance that was ultimately submitted to arbitration claiming that his performance appraisal was procedurally improper. Noting that the Activity conceded that the grievant had been improperly evaluated in violation of the collective bargaining agreement, the Arbitrator stated the issue to be one of remedy. As the remedy for the violation, the Arbitrator directed that the Activity reevaluate properly the grievant's performance for the disputed appraisal period and issue to the grievant a performance rating for the period of fully satisfactory or higher.

III. EXCEPTION

As its exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7106(a) of the Statute. The Agency agrees that under the decisions of the Authority, the Arbitrator appropriately found that the grievant had not been properly rated and appropriately directed that management reevaluate properly the grievant's performance under the established elements and standards. However, the Agency maintains that by additionally ordering that the grievant's rating be no less than fully satisfactory, the award to that extent is contrary to management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

As noted by the Agency, the Authority in a number of recent decisions has discussed in detail the role of an arbitrator in resolving disputes pertaining to performance appraisal matters. General Services Administration, Region 10 and American Federation of Government Employees, Council 236, 22 FLRA No. 8 (1986); Social Security Administration, Office of Hearings and Appeals, Region II and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, 21 FLRA No. 86 (1986); Bureau of Prisons, Department of Justice and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 148, 21 FLRA No. 15 (1986); Bureau of Engraving and Printing, U.S. Department of the Treasury and Washington Plate Printers Union, Local No. 2, IPDEU, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 39 (1985). As acknowledged by the Agency, the Authority in these decisions found that an arbitrator may resolve an employee's grievance claiming to have been adversely affected in his or her performance appraisal by management's application of the established performance standards. An arbitrator may sustain the grievance on finding that management applied the standards in violation of law, regulation, or an appropriate provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Authority also has stated that in sustaining the grievance, an arbitrator as a permissible remedy may direct that the grievant's work product be properly evaluated by management. The Authority, however, has cautioned in these decisions that the arbitrator may not substitute his or her own judgment for that of management as to what that employee's evaluation and rating should be.

In this case we find that by directing the Activity to rate the grievant's performance no lower than fully satisfactory, the Arbitrator improperly substituted her judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's performance evaluation and rating should be. Although the Arbitrator properly ordered the grievant reevaluated in accordance with the established performance elements and standards in order to remedy management's violation of the collective bargaining agreement, the Arbitrator's restriction of the rating on reevaluation to fully satisfactory or higher is deficient as contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the Arbitrator's award is modified to strike any order or direction as to what the grievant's performance rating for the disputed appraisal period should be after reevaluation by management.

ORDER DISMISSING APPLICATION FOR REVIEW

On June 10, 1986, Mr. Willie L. Coberly, an employee, filed what may be considered to be an application for review pursuant to Section 2422.17(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, seeking to set aside the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Petition for Clarification of Unit in the above-entitled case. For the reasons set forth below, it has been determined that the application for review must be dismissed.

Under Section 2422.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, only a party can file an application for review of a Regional Director's Decision and Order in a representation proceeding.[1]

Section 2421.11 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, in pertinent part, define a party as ". . . [A]ny person: (1) Filing a charge, petition or request; (2) named in a charge, complaint, petition, or request; (3) whose intervention in a proceeding has been permitted or directed by the Authority. . . ."

[1] Section 2422.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides, in pertinent part, "A Regional Director's Decision and Order shall be final: provided however, That a party may file an application for review of the Regional Director's Decision and Order. . . ." [emphasis added]

In this case, the Activity filed the clarification of unit (CU) petition.[2] Mr. Coberly was not the subject of the petition. He was not the representative of the Union in the proceeding nor was he granted intervention status by the Authority. Therefore, Mr. Coberly is not a party to the case within the meaning of Section 2421.11 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and has no standing to file an application for review under Section 2422.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Accordingly, as employee, Willie L. Coberly, has no standing to file an application for review of the Regional Director's Decision and Order in the instant case, and apart from other considerations, the application for review is hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case is before the Authority because of an appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of the following Union proposal submitted while the parties were bargaining over ground rules in preparation for contract negotiations.

Union Proposal

> All employee negotiators will receive travel and per diem reimbursement for negotiations from the employer.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is not within the duty to bargain for the following reasons:[1]

---

[1] The Agency incorporated in the present case its Statement of Position in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 21 FLRA No. 19 (1986). Thus, the positions and arguments presented here are identical.

1. It does not concern conditions of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute because payment of travel expenses is specifically provided for by law;
2. it is inconsistent with Federal law or Government-wide regulation;
3. the demand for travel and per diem to employee/negotiators is not limited to those employee/negotiators who are receiving official time.

The Agency maintains that the crux of the issue is the negotiability of reimbursement for travel and per diem for employee negotiators. As explained by the Union, the proposal would only provide travel and per diem to employee negotiators on official time.

III. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority held in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. March 27, 1986) that payment by an agency of travel expenses and per diem allowances incurred by employees using official time in the conduct of labor-management relations concerns a condition of employment which is within the agency's administrative discretion, and is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. Furthermore, the negotiability of travel and per diem is based on consideration of whether the travel involved is in the primary interest of the Government so as to constitute official business without consideration to 7131 official time. In this regard, the Agency has not cited any legal or regulatory provision, nor is any apparent, which would absolutely prohibit it from exercising through negotiations the discretion which it possesses to determine whether, and under what circumstances, travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business. Also, the Union acknowledges that provisions of the Travel Expense Act and the Federal Travel Regulations apply. Thus, the Authority finds the proposal is within the duty to bargain.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning the Union's Proposal).[2]

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the following provision of a negotiated agreement disapproved by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute:1/

1/ The Agency head originally disapproved three provisions of the agreement and the Union's appeal encompassed all three disapprovals. Thereafter, the Agency withdrew its disapproval of one provision (Article 3, Section 6B) and the parties agreed upon alternative language for another disapproved provision (Article 19, Section 1A). Accordingly, the dispute with regard to two of the originally disapproved provisions has been resolved and those matters are no longer before the Authority for decision.

Article 13, Section 3

> The decision by the employer to contract out work presently being performed by bargaining unit employees will be made in accordance with OMB Circular A-76 (unless application of the Circular is prohibited or not required by the Circular).

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that the disputed provision conflicts with section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute which reserves exclusively to management the right to contract out, and subjecting management's contracting out determination to review by arbitrators would result in arbitrators rather than Federal agencies making substantive contracting out decisions. At the very least, it is argued, the arbitral review process would delay the Agency's exercise of its right to contract out. Finally, the Agency argues that the provision is inconsistent with the exclusive appeal procedures contained in OMB Circular A-76, which should be viewed as a Government-wide rule or regulation within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

In its response, the Union asserts that the disputed provision constitutes a negotiable procedure for management to follow in the event a decision is made to contract out, and cites Authority decisions to support its contention.

III. Analysis

The Agency's arguments in this case are essentially the same as those rejected by the Authority in finding a similar proposal negotiable in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of EEOC Locals and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 10 FLRA 3 (1982) (Union Proposal 1), enforced sub nom. EEOC v. FLRA, 744 F.2d 842 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. dismissed, 54 U.S.L.W. 4408 (U.S. April 29, 1986) (per curiam). In the EEOC case, the Authority held that a proposal which required management to comply with applicable laws and regulations, and specifically OMB Circular A-76, in exercising its right to make contracting out determinations was not inconsistent with section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute because the proposal would only contractually recognize external limitations on management's right. The proposal would not itself establish any particular substantive limitation on management in the exercise of that right. The D.C. Circuit expressly agreed. EEOC v. FLRA, 744 F.2d at 848-849.

As for the Agency's further assertion that any contractual provisions which would subject management's contracting-out decisions to any type of grievance or arbitration review are nonnegotiable, the Authority in EEOC concluded that such contention also could not be sustained. The Authority noted that the Statute and its relevant legislative history requires the grievance procedures negotiated under section 7121 of the Statute to cover all matters that under the provisions of law could be submitted to the grievance procedure unless the parties exclude them through bargaining. The Authority also noted that the disputed proposal in EEOC would not change the statutorily prescribed scope and coverage of the parties' negotiated grievance procedure because, even in the absence of such a contractual provision, disputes involving conditions of employment arising from the application of OMB Circular A-76 would be covered by the negotiated grievance procedure. The D.C. Circuit agreed, rejecting the Agency's contrary arguments as follows:

> The [Statute] expansively defines the subjects covered under the statutory grievance procedure. Grievances include complaints concerning "any claimed violation, misinterpretation, or misapplication of any law, rule, or regulation affecting conditions of employment" as well as complaints "concerning any matter relating to the employment of the employee." 5 U.S.C. § 7103(a)(9). Only five subjects, not including the subject of contracting-out, are expressly excluded from coverage under the grievance mechanism. An allegation that the EEOC failed to comply with the OMB Circular, or with any other law or rule governing contracting-out, plainly falls within this expansive definition.
> . . . .
> A grievance alleging noncompliance with the Circular, . . . does not affect management's substantive authority, within the meaning of the statutory language, to contract-out. Rather, it > provides a procedure for enforcing the [Statute's] requirement that contracting-out decisions be made in accordance with applicable laws. Any substantive limitation on management's authority stems from the externally established criteria contained in the Circular. . . . We therefore find that a grievance asserting that management failed to comply with its statutory or regulatory parameters in making a contracting-out decision is not precluded by the management rights clause. (footnotes omitted.)

EEOC v. FLRA, 774 F.2d at 849-851.[2]

We also reject the Agency's argument that the disputed provision would delay the exercise of management's right to contract out. Nothing in the provision would prevent management from reaching the decision to contract out or from implementing that decision. In any event, as noted by the D.C. Circuit in EEOC v. FLRA, 774 F.2d at 850 n.19:

> Of course, any review of an agency decision, whether conducted by the courts or through a contractual grievance mechanism, may cause some delay. This court has previously recognized that a proposal that may result in delay, including delay created by the arbitral process, need not infringe management's reserved authority, and may thus be negotiable. See Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d at 1153-58.

Finally, we reject the Agency's assertion that the provision is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with the exclusive appeal procedures contained in OMB Circular A-76. This argument was rejected by the Authority in EEOC, 10 FLRA at 4, and by the D.C. Circuit on review, 744 F.2d at 851.

[2] We respectfully adhere to the view that this position is correct, although we note that the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit rejected this approach in Defense Language Institute, Presidio of Monterey, California v. FLRA, 767 F.2d 1398 (9th Cir. 1985), denying enforcement of National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1263 and Defense Language Institute, Presidio of Monterey, California, 14 FLRA 761 (1984).

That reasoning applies equally here. The provision in question does not create any new right of appeal; the right to file grievances concerning contracting-out decisions is created by the Statute. Nothing in OMB Circular A-76 restricts the statutory right to file such grievances.

In concluding that the disputed provision is within the duty to bargain, we emphasize that in reviewing management's contracting-out actions for conformity with applicable laws and regulations, an arbitrator may not substitute his or her judgment for that of the agency. Rather, as the Authority recently stated in a related case, Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72, slip op. at 6-7 (1986):

> In sum, arbitrators are not authorized to cancel a procurement action and are authorized to consider only grievances challenging a decision to contract out on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. These provisions must be sufficiently specific to permit the arbitrator to adjudicate whether there has been compliance with such provisions. When presented with such a grievance, an arbitrator on finding a failure to comply may sustain the grievance. In sustaining the grievance, the arbitrator as a remedy may properly order a reconstruction of the procurement action when the arbitrator finds that an agency's noncompliance materially affected the final procurement decision and harmed unit employees. An agency in taking the action required by such an award must reconstruct the procurement process in accordance with the provisions which were previously not complied with and must determine on reconstruction whether the decision to contract out is now in accordance with law and regulation. If the decision to contract out can no longer be justified, the agency must determine whether considerations of cost, performance, and disruption override cancelling the procurement action and take whatever action is appropriate on the basis of that determination. For example, an agency could determine that immediate cancellation is warranted, or an agency could determine that cancellation is not warranted, but that an improperly granted contract should not be renewed. Additionally, an agency may use its discretion to fashion other remedies appropriate to the circumstances.

Having found that the disputed provision is within the duty to bargain but that its inclusion in the parties' agreement does not add to the scope of their contractual grievance procedure because such matters already are covered unless the parties specifically exclude them during negotiations, we believe that the parties would be well advised to concentrate their energies on more meaningful matters.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the disputed provision is not inconsistent with management's rights under section 7106 of the Statute to make determinations with respect to contracting out or with applicable law and regulations.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall rescind its disapproval of the provision which was bargained on and agreed to by the parties at the local level.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 31, 1986.

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Gladys Gershenfeld filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

A proposal which requires an agency to fill vacancies in a RIF situation only with affected employees who meet minimum "X-118 standards" is nonnegotiable. The Authority held that the provision violates the agency's right to choose among candidates from any appropriate source pursuant to § 7106(a)(2)(C)(ii). Furthermore, the provision is inconsistent with Federal Personnel Manual, Chapter 335, subchapter 1-4, Requirement 4, because it would prevent the agency from making selections from any appropriate source in filling vacant positions.

A proposal which requires an agency to fill vacancies in a RIF situation only with affected employees who meet minimum "X-118 standards" is not an appropriate arrangement, within the meaning of § 7106(b)(3) because it excessively interferes with management's right to fill positions. The provision would effectively preclude the agency from determining the requisite qualifications for vacant positions, that is, any qualifications beyond the minimum requirements of X-118 standards. Such a total abrogation of management's right to act in this respect excessively interferes with management's rights.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority dismissed the union's petition for review as untimely filed because it failed to comply with §§ 2424.3 and 2429.22 of the Authority's rules and regulations, applicable to the computation of time limits. The Authority found that the agency head's disapproval of the local agreement provisions was properly served on the Union's Regional Vice President by certified mail and that there was no basis for the union's assertion that the agency was required to serve notice on the National President instead of the Union's Regional Vice President.

DIGEST NOTES

Under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq., and the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), 41 CFR, Part 101-7, agencies have the discretion to make determinations that travel in the context of union activity is sufficiently within the interest of the Government to constitute official business. Upon this determination, otherwise proper travel and per diem expenses may be paid from agency funds. Nothing in those authorities requires that that necessary determination be only made by management on a case by case basis. See National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. March 27, 1986) Therefore, union proposals providing for the payment of travel and per diem relate to conditions of employment and are negotiable within the meaning of the Statute. The agency made no argument that the travel flowing from the activities and circumstances set forth in the provisions could not meet the required standard nor do the provisions suggest that they would foreclose case by case determinations as to the appropriateness of specific travel and per diem expenses which are proper under law and governing regulations.

Union proposals providing for the payment of travel and per diem relate to conditions of employment and are negotiable within the meaning of the Statute. The agency's argument that the proposal conflicts with its regulation is rejected inasmuch as, the Authority has consistently found that the agency has failed to establish a compelling need for the regulation.

STATUTE

A grievance was filed when the grievant's overall annual performance rating by his immediate supervisor was lowered from "outstanding" to "highly satisfactory" by the reviewing official. The issue at arbitration was whether the reviewing official's action violated the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement. The arbitrator determined that the reduction of the rating by the reviewing official was inconsistent with the agreement because under the agreement it was not appropriate for someone who does not have daily knowledge of any employee's performance to reduce the employee's performance rating by the employee's immediate supervisor. He also found that under the agreement the reduction was not timely and properly communicated to the grievant. The arbitrator sustained the grievance and ordered that the grievant's "outstanding" rating be reinstated and that the grievant be considered for a monetary award.

In its exception to the arbitrator's award the agency contended that the award was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute because it interfered with management's right to assign performance appraisal review duties to the reviewing official and substituted the arbitrator's judgment for that of the agency as to who has the authority to review and change performance appraisals. The Authority held that the arbitrator interpreted the parties' agreement to preclude the reviewing official, an individual not in the bargaining unit, from carrying out the assigned duty of reviewing performance appraisals and so as to deprive him of the discretion to change appraisals inherent in that duty. An arbitrator may not interpret or enforce a provision of a collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly deny the authority of an agency to exercise its rights under § 7106(a) or result in the substitution of the arbitrator's judgment for that of the agency in the exercise of those rights. The award was set aside because it improperly interfered with management's right to assign work.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority determined, consistent with the Judge's ruling, that an unfair labor practice proceeding was barred by § 7116(d) of the Statute. The Authority found that its reopening of the union's exceptions to an arbitrator's award for consideration of the exception's merits did not nullify the activity's prior grievance election. The activity was aware of the union's intention to appeal a previous Authority order in this case and knew that the union had filed a request for reconsideration with the Authority when it requested a panel of arbitrators to enforce the subject arbitration award. The activity's election to pursue enforcement of the arbitration award through the parties' negotiated grievance procedure barred it from pursuing the same matter under the unfair labor practice procedures of the Statute. The activity's pursuit of the grievance was not voided by the Authority's later decision to consider the union's exceptions on the merits.

DIGEST NOTES

An agency did not bypass the union, in violation of § 7116(a)(1) and (5), by meeting directly with a bargaining unit employee and negotiating an informal adjustment of her EEO complaint. Any employee is entitled to elect to pursue a complaint of discrimination pursuant to and under the regulations of the EEOC as provided by law. These regulations provide for an informal adjustment process. Nowhere in those regulations is there any provision for the exclusive representative's presence, unless the exclusive representative is the complainant's designated representative. An unfair labor practice cannot be found based solely upon an agency's conduct in resolving an EEO complaint pursuant to the regulations of the EEOC. The bargaining unit employee had elected to pursue her complaint of discrimination as an appeal under the regulatory process of the EEOC, and the union had no statutory rights or obligations to represent her in that process.

Normally, a union does not have right to participate in the informal adjustment of an EEO complaint where a bargaining unit employee has elected to pursue the complaint of discrimination as an appeal under the regulatory process of the EEOC, and the exclusive representative had no statutory rights or obligations to represent her in that process. It may, however, have a role if the settlement gives rise to an impact on the bargaining unit. The resolution of such complaints could potentially affect all bargaining unit employees in important ways, since a benefit or opportunity granted to one employee can mean the loss of the same benefit or opportunity for other employees. Accordingly, if the adjustment of an EEO complaint results in a change of unit employees' conditions of employment, the agency would have an obligation under the Statute to give prompt notice of that change to the union and provide it with an opportunity to bargain to the extent required by the Statute. Since Congress has determined that the rights of identifiable victims of discrimination must take priority over the interests of the bargaining unit, an exclusive representative's right to bargain upon receiving notice of an EEO complaint settlement cannot conflict with or overturn the substance of such settlements.

The Authority dismissed the Judge's finding that the agency failed to provide the union with notice of the agency's settlement of a EEO Complaint with a unit employee. The complaint neither alleged nor did the parties litigate at the hearing, whether the agency failed to provide notice to the union of the informal adjustment of the EEO complaint constituted an unfair labor practice charge. The clear basis of both the ULP charge and the complaint was that the agency violated the Statute by meeting directly with a bargaining unit employee and reaching a settlement with that employee with respect to her EEO complaint of discrimination. Since the allegation that the agency failed to provide notice and an opportunity to bargain was not encompassed by the complaint and thus not before the Judge, the violation must be dismissed.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which requires the agency, under normal circumstances, to rotate details of less that 31 days constitutes a negotiable procedure for the selection of employees to perform work on details, that is, selection by rotation among employees management has determined to be qualified to perform the work involved. The Authority has held that when two or more employees have been determined by management to be equally qualified and capable of performing work, the selection of any one of those employees to perform the work is consistent with management's exercise of its discretion under § 7106(a). A proposed procedure by which employees previously judged by management to be equally qualified will be selected to perform the work does not directly interfere with § 7106(a)(2)(A) or (B), but, rather, is a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2). Under the proposal, management would fully retain the discretion to determine the qualifications necessary to perform any detail work and the qualifications of any employees to be detailed. Management would also retain the discretion to determine not to rotate details in other than normal circumstances.

DIGEST NOTES

A union proposal which provides for the hanging of union greetings/notices at the entrances of the agency facility is nonnegotiable because it concerns a matter which is not a condition of employment of bargaining unit employees. The Authority will consider two basic factors in deciding whether a proposal involves a condition of employment of bargaining unit employees: (1) Whether the matter proposed to be bargained pertains to bargaining unit employees; and (2) The nature and extent of the effect of the matter proposed to be bargained on working conditions of those employees. Applying the above factors, the Authority concluded that the union proposal does not pertain to unit employees or affect their working conditions inasmuch as, it would merely welcome all people entering the specified gates and advise them of the union's existence. The union did not show how hanging the proposed sign on agency property would facilitate communication or in any other way directly affect the working conditions of bargaining unit employees.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's conclusions and held that the activity did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it failed and refused to execute and implement a memorandum of understanding reached by representatives of the parties at a negotiating session. The Authority concluded, as found by the Judge, that no final agreement had been reached between the parties requiring execution and implementation, because the agency representatives made clear to the union's representatives at the outset of the session that they did not have the authority to bind the agency and that they consistently maintained this position.

The Authority found that the Judge was correct in finding that the agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) by refusing to bargain in good faith when it sent representatives to a negotiating session who were not fully authorized to conclude an agreement as required by § 7114(b)(2). The Authority concluded that the Judge's finding of the above violation, as well as the Judge's resolution of the issue of whether the agency was provided with adequate notice at the hearing that it was being charged with such misconduct, were supported by the record despite the fact that the charge was not specifically stated in the formal complaint. The union's opening and closing statements included that contention and the General Counsel supported that position as an alternative to the allegation that the agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) by failing to execute the agreement.

The Authority held, consistent with the Judge's finding, that the General Counsel violated the policy set forth in section 2423.7(d) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, by showing one of it witnesses, prior to the hearing, a document obtained from the agency in the course of its investigation. The Authority further concluded that the Judge acted appropriately in deciding that the actions cast doubt on the credibility of that witness' testimony, as well as the testimony of other union witnesses with whom the affected witness was likely to have discussed the matter, rather than striking and disregarding their entire testimony.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of one provision of a negotiated agreement which was disapproved by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute.1/

II. Provision

Section 26: Performance Appraisals

Annual performance appraisals will be frozen at the time of the general RIF Notice.

1/ The Agency withdrew its allegation that the duty to bargain did not extend to a second provision concerning criteria to be used when taking an adverse action based on unacceptable performance. Hence, that provision will not be considered herein.

> This provision does not determine the date on which the Employer will freeze other personnel actions. In addition, Employer agrees to fill vacancies, for which affected Employees meet minimum X-118 standards, only with affected employees after issuance of the general RIF notice to maximize the number of positions available to affected employees.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that the underlined portion of this provision would interfere with its right, under section 7106(a)(2)(C)(ii) of the Statute, to fill positions from any appropriate source.

The Union did not file a response in this case.

B. Analysis

The disputed portion of this provision, by its terms, would require the Agency to fill vacancies in a RIF situation only with affected employees who meet minimum X-118 standards. In this regard, the provision herein is to the same effect as a provision in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 9 FLRA 983 (1982), remanded as to other matters sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, No. 82-2225 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 19, 1984), vacated by FLRA as to other matters, May 3, 1984, which provided in Article 12, sections 12A and B that for a 3-month period following a RIF affected employees be placed in vacant positions for which they qualify. In that decision, the Authority held that the provision violated the Agency's right to choose among candidates from "any appropriate source" pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(C)(ii) of the Statute. Hence, for the reasons cited in U.S. Customs Service, the provision here in dispute must also be found to be outside the duty to bargain.

While the Union does not argue that the disputed provision is an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute,2/ the Authority notes that the provision is similar to union proposal 2 in National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Department of the Army, Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 105 (1986), which the Authority found to be an excessive interference with management's right to fill positions and, thus, not an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3). As indicated in Kansas Army National Guard, management's right to make selections for vacant positions includes the right to decide to fill or not fill a position and the right to determine the qualifications necessary to perform the work of the position. Management therefore retains the right in filling a position to determine whether any qualifications, in addition to basic qualification requirements such as those set forth in the X-118 standards, are necessary to accomplish the work of a position.

In this case, the provision in dispute would effectively preclude the Agency from determining the requisite qualifications for vacant positions, that is, any qualifications beyond the minimum requirements of the X-118 standards. Such a total abrogation of management's right to act in this respect excessively interferes with management's right to fill positions and, therefore, is not an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1799 and Department of the Army, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland, 22 FLRA No. 62, slip op. at 6 (1986). Furthermore, the provision is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation, Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the Federal Personnel Manual, because it would prevent the Agency from making selections from any appropriate source in filling vacant positions. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2677 and Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Community Services, 21 FLRA No. 22 (1986).

2/ The Authority has determined that proposals which concern "arrangements" for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management rights are negotiable unless the arrangement excessively interferes with the exercise of those rights. National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986).

C. Conclusion

Therefore, for the above reasons, the Authority finds that the provision in dispute is not within the duty to bargain.

III. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

ORDER DISMISSING PETITION FOR REVIEW

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Regulations on a petition for review of negotiability issues filed by the Union. For the reasons indicated below, it has been determined that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and must be dismissed on that basis.

From the record before the Authority, it appears that the local parties forwarded a supplemental collective bargaining agreement to the designee of the Agency head for review and approval pursuant to section 7114(c)(4) of the Statute. Article 9, Section d of the parties' National Controlling Agreement set forth the procedures for review of such local supplemental agreements.*/ The designee of the Agency head disapproved a number of provisions of the local agreement and served a copy of that disapproval on the Regional Vice President of the Union on August 27, 1985, by certified mail. The Union filed its petition for review with the Authority on September 19, 1985. In its statement of position, the Agency contends that the Union's petition was untimely filed. In response, the Union asserts that under the Controlling National Agreement the Agency's disapproval should have been served on the National President of the Union rather than the Regional Vice President. The Union further asserts that its appeal was timely filed from the date a local Union official obtained a copy of the disapproval.

Under section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute and section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the time limit for filing a petition for review of negotiability issues is 15 days after service on the Union of the Agency's allegation that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter proposed to be bargained. Further, section 2429.22 of the Authority's Regulations provides for five days to be added to the prescribed filing period when the allegation is served on the Union by mail. Moreover, it is now well-established that an agency head's disapproval of a locally negotiated collective bargaining agreement constitutes an allegation of nonnegotiability for purposes of appeal to the Authority. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2142, AFL-CIO and Department of the Army, Corpus Christi Army Depot, Corpus Christi, Texas, 15 FLRA 98 (1984).

*/ Article 9, Section d provides, in part:

> Section d. Once an agreement has been reached at the local level, it shall be reduced to writing and signed by the local parties within fifteen (15) calendar days from the conclusion of the negotiations. A copy of the signed, proposed agreement shall be forwarded to the Labor-Management Relations Section by local management and another copy shall be forwarded by the local Union to its Regional Vice President. These parties at the national level shall have thirty days, from the date that the proposed agreement was signed, to independently review the agreement and determine if the proposed agreement complies with the provisions of this Agreement and applicable laws and regulations.
> The parties at the national level will independently notify their counterparts at the local level of the results of their reviews before the expiration of the thirty day time limit. The reviewing parties at the national level will serve on each other copies of their reviews as they are sent to the local level. At the end of the thirty-day review period, the local supplemental agreement will go into effect except for those provisions which have been found by either party to be in conflict with this Agreement, or applicable laws and regulations. Such conflicting provisions shall be stricken. [Emphasis added.]

In this case, it is undisputed that the Agency's disapproval of the local agreement provisions was served on the Union's Regional Vice President by certified mail on August 27, 1985. Moreover, based on the clear language of Article 9, Section d of the National Controlling Agreement, the Regional Vice President was the Union official the Agency was required to serve and not the National President as the Union asserts. There is no reference to the National President in the pertinent agreement provision and the Union fails to establish any basis for its assertion. Therefore, under sections 2424.3 and 2429.22 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, any appeal from the Agency's allegation of nonnegotiability had to be filed with the Authority no later than September 16, 1985, in order to be considered timely. Since the Union's petition for review was not filed until September 19, 1985, it is untimely and must be denied on that basis.

Accordingly, and apart from other considerations, the Union's petition for review is hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It concerns the negotiability of six provisions on travel and per diem.[1] The Agency head disapproved the provisions in reviewing a negotiated agreement under section 7114(c) of the Statute. The disapproval was limited to those aspects of the provisions which would allow payment of travel and per diem expenses for employee representatives. The disputed provisions follow:

[Provision 1]

ARTICLE V---UNION REPRESENTATIVES, GENERAL PROVISIONS

[1] The petition originally included four additional provisions on other subjects. The Union has since withdrawn its petition as to those four provisions.

Section A--Representatives:

The Chairman of the Council, the Presidents of the Regional Councils, the Presidents of affiliated Locals and designated plant representative or their designees are recognized as Union representatives at their respective organizational levels within the Service. . . . Similarly, the Local President(s) will designate to the appropriate area office one (1) plant representative for each plant having an assigned supervisor who will be expected to deal with the Service supervisor of that plant on day-to-day matters covered by this Agreement or applicable regional agreements. There will be no restriction upon the Local President with respect to whom he/she appoints as a plant representative. However, if a Local President appoints an individual who is located over twenty-five (25) miles from the plant to which he/she was appointed to serve as a plant representative, the entitlement to official time and expense shall be restricted to that which he/she would normally have received had he/she been located within the twenty-five (25) mile radius.

[Provision 2]

Section C--Official Expenses:

Per diem and travel expenses at official rates shall be paid Union representatives to attend meetings, and official proceedings, and to present grievances pursuant to paragraphs 1(a), (b), and (c) of Section B.

However, per diem and travel expenses not to exceed $150 shall be paid representatives to attend an oral conference pursuant to paragraph 1(c) of Section B.

[Provision 3]

ARTICLE XIII -- HEALTH AND SAFETY

Section J--Duty Time:

Each Union representative serving on a Health and Safety Committee shall be afforded official time to engage in such tasks. If such tasks involve travel, official travel allowances will be paid.

[Provision 4]

ARTICLE XXX -- DISCIPLINARY ACTION

Section D--Procedures:

Disciplinary actions shall be initiated and processed in accordance with applicable regulations. Grievances over disciplinary action decisions shall be processed in accordance with the provisions of Article XXXII, and of Article XXXIII if arbitration is invoked. It is further agreed by the Parties that:

. . . .

If the employee is not represented by the Union, the Union shall have the right to have an observer present at the oral conference, subject to a contrary determination by an oral conference officer when the employee objects on the grounds of privacy.

The Union observer shall be on official time and expenses for attendance at the meeting up to twelve (12) hours and $150. The Union shall be notified sufficiently in advance of the oral conference to permit attendance.

[Provision 5]

ARTICLE XXXII -- GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE

Section E--Role of the Union:

The Union shall be recognized as the representative of the aggrieved employee(s) unless such employee(s) wishes to personally handle the grievance and so informs the official to whom the grievance is being presented. No employee representative other than the Union will be recognized under these procedures.

If any employee presents a grievance on his/her own behalf, the Union shall have the right to have a representative present during the grievance proceeding on official time and expense.

[Provision 6]

ARTICLE XXXIII -- ARBITRATION

Section B--Arbitration Hearing:

1. The arbitration hearing will be held on Service premises or premises furnished by the Service during the regular day-shift hours of the basic workweek. The grievant(s), his/her Union representative and up to four (4) witnesses shall be allowed official time and expenses for the proceedings. All other witnesses deemed necessary by the arbitrator will be allowed official time for the proceedings.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency states that although the negotiated agreement was executed after the Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), the disapproved language was agreed to prior to that decision. It asserts that the disputed portions of the provisions are not within the duty to bargain for the following reasons:

a. They do not concern conditions of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute because payment of travel expenses is specifically provided for by law;

b. they are inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide regulation; and

c. they conflict with an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists.

The Union asserts that the provisions represent negotiation of a condition of employment about which the Agency has discretion, that is, whether to allow travel and per diem for travel occurring in the context of union representational activities. It contends that the Agency has not established a compelling need for Personnel Letter 711-10, the agency regulation which is claimed to bar negotiations.

III. Analysis

A. The Provisions Relate to Conditions of Employment

The Agency makes essentially the same "conditions of employment" argument as that made by the agency in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. March 27, 1986). The Authority rejected that argument in Customs Service and we reject it here for the same reasons as set forth in that case.

B. The Provisions Are Not Inconsistent with Federal Law or Government-Wide Rules or Regulations

Under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701 et seq., and the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), 41 CFR, Part 101-7, as interpreted by the Comptroller General,[2] agencies possess discretion to make determinations that travel in the context of union activity is sufficiently within the interest of the Government to constitute official business. Upon this determination, otherwise proper travel and per diem expenses may be paid from agency funds. Contrary to the Agency's argument, nothing in these authorities requires that this necessary determination be made only by management and only on a case by case basis. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2. The Agency here makes no argument that travel flowing from the particular types of activities and circumstances set forth in the provisions could not meet this required standard.[3] Additionally,

2/ 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966).

3/ Of course, if such a question should arise, the parties have access to their negotiated grievance procedure as a means of resolving the issue.

nothing in the provisions themselves or the parties' arguments suggests that these provisions would foreclose case by case determinations as to the appropriateness of specific travel and expenses which are proper under law and governing regulations. Given these circumstances, and for the reasons expressed in Customs Service, we reject the Agency's assertion that the provisions are inconsistent with law and Government-wide regulations.

C. The Provisions Do Not Conflict with an Agency Regulation for Which a Compelling Need Exists

The Agency argues, without further explanation, that these provisions conflict with Personnel Letter 711-10--an Agency regulation which meets the criteria for compelling need under section 2424.11(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Agency has made a similar argument in various other negotiability appeals before us. We have consistently found that the Agency failed to establish a compelling need for that regulation. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of Federal Grain Inspection Locals and U.S. Department of Agriculture, Federal Grain Inspection Service, 21 FLRA No. 21 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of Agriculture, Federal Grain Inspection Service v. FLRA No. 86-1295 (D.C. Cir. May 21, 1986); American Federation of Government Employees, Council of Meat Grading Locals, AFL-CIO and Department of Agriculture, Agricultural Marketing Service, Meat Grading and Certification Branch, 22 FLRA No. 38 (1986), and National Association of Agricultural Employees and U.S. Department of Agriculture, Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, 22 FLRA No. 45 (1986). There is no basis here for concluding differently.

IV. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that the provisions concern conditions of employment and are not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. The provisions are not barred from negotiations because they are inconsistent with an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. Therefore, they are within the duty to bargain.[4] [4] In finding that these provisions are within the duty to bargain, we make no judgment as to their merits.

---

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall rescind its disapproval of Provisions 1 through 6 which were bargained on and agreed to by the parties at the local level.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Martin E. Conway filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance was filed when the grievant's overall annual performance rating by his immediate supervisor was lowered from "outstanding" to "highly satisfactory" by the reviewing official. The grievance was submitted to arbitration on the issue of whether the reviewing official's action violated provisions of the collective bargaining agreement. The Arbitrator determined that the reduction of the rating by the reviewing official was inconsistent with the agreement. Primarily, he ruled that under the agreement it is not appropriate for someone who does not have daily knowledge of an employee's performance to reduce the employee's performance rating by the employee's immediate supervisor. He also found under the agreement that the reduction of the grievant's rating was not timely and properly communicated to him. Accordingly the Arbitrator sustained the grievance and ordered that the grievant's "outstanding" rating be reinstated and that the grievant be considered for a monetary award.

III. EXCEPTIONS

In its exceptions the Agency contends that the award is contrary to law and regulation. In particular, the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute because it interferes with management's right to assign performance appraisal review duties to the reviewing official and substitutes the Arbitrator's judgment for that of the Agency as to who has the authority to review and change performance appraisals.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

We agree with the Agency. In Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Kansas City, Missouri and National Treasury Employees Union, 17 FLRA 561 (1985), the arbitrator had interpreted the parties' collective bargaining agreement so as to preclude the performance appraisal reviewing official, an individual not in the bargaining unit, from lowering the performance appraisals of the grievants. In finding the award deficient, the Authority noted that bargaining proposals which prescribe duties to be performed by particular nonbargaining-unit personnel in the agency improperly interfere with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. We also stated that an arbitrator's award may not interpret or enforce a provision of a collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly deny the authority of an agency to exercise its rights under section 7106(a) of the Statute or result in the substitution of the arbitrator's judgment for that of the agency in the exercise of those rights. Accordingly, the Authority ruled that the award was contrary to management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign performance appraisal review duties to the reviewing official because it eliminated the discretion inherent in that right and because the arbitrator substituted his judgment for that of the agency in the exercise of the right. 17 FLRA at 562.

In this case, similar to SSA, Kansas City, we find that the Arbitrator has interpreted the parties' agreement to preclude the reviewing official, an individual not in the bargaining unit, from carrying out the assigned duty of reviewing performance appraisals and so as to deprive him of the discretion to change appraisals inherent in that duty. Thus, for the reasons set forth in greater detail in SSA, Kansas City, we conclude that the award improperly interferes with management's right to assign work and is deficient as contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the Arbitrator's award is set aside.*/

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed by the General Counsel to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The Respondent (AFGE) filed an opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions. The complaint alleged that AFGE violated section 7116(b)(8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by its refusal to comply with an Arbitrator's award. The refusal of AFGE to comply with the Arbitrator's award is conceded. The issue before the Authority is whether this proceeding is barred by section 7116(d) and/or section 7118(a)(4)(A) of the Statute.

II. Facts

A grievance over the posting by AFGE of alleged objectionable material on its Union bulletin board was filed by the Charging Party (the Activity) and the matter was eventually submitted to arbitration. On March 28, 1983, Arbitrator Raymond L. Britton issued his decision and award on the matter. He sustained the grievance and ordered AFGE "to remove the objectionable material from the Union bulletin board and to post a retraction and apology for a period of time equal to the posting of the letters which are the subject of this grievance."

On April 27, 1983, AFGE filed exceptions to the Arbitrator's award with the Authority. It did not request a stay of the award. On May 6, 1983, the Authority issued an Order dismissing the exceptions as untimely filed. U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Region VI, San Antonio Area, 12 FLRA 39 (1983). On May 11, 1983, the Activity requested AFGE to comply with the award and by letter dated May 16, 1983, AFGE responded, stating that it was appealing the Authority's Order.

By letter dated May 17, 1983, the Activity reminded AFGE that it was in violation of the parties' negotiated agreement, and in non-compliance with section 7122 of the Statute, by not complying with the arbitration award. The Activity's letter stated that AFGE should consider the letter an official grievance for the noted violation. On July 14, 1983, the Activity requested a panel of arbitrators from the Dallas, Texas office of the American Arbitration Association (AAA). In its letter to the AAA, the Activity stated that it was requesting the panel of arbitrators "so that one may be selected to hear a grievance concerning a violation of our national labor agreement." It stated further that the grievance concerned the Union's refusal to comply with Arbitrator Britton's March 28, 1983 Award. The Activity took no further action on the grievance.

AFGE filed a request for reconsideration of the Authority's May 6, 1983 Order. On August 3, 1983, the Authority granted the request and ordered that the case be reopened for consideration on the merits. On March 6, 1984, the Authority issued its decision denying AFGE's exceptions, on the basis that AFGE failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award was deficient on any of the grounds set forth in the Statute. Thereafter, AFGE again refused the Activity's request that AGFE comply with the arbitration award. On July 19, 1984, the Activity filed the charge in this proceeding alleging that AFGE violated the Statute by its failure and refusal to comply with Arbitrator Britton's March 28, 1983 award.

III. Administrative Law Judge's Decision

The Judge found that under Authority precedent, where there is a single issue, involving the same parties, section 7116(d) of the Statute allows an election of remedies; that the election is complete upon either the filing of a grievance or upon the filing of an unfair labor practice charge; and that, once the election is made, the aggrieved party may not thereafter elect to proceed under the other procedure. In support of this finding, the Judge cited several Authority decisions, including Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, Region VIII, San Francisco, California, 13 FLRA 631 (1984); Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 18 FLRA 855 (1985); and Federal Bureau of Prisons, 18 FLRA 314 (1985).

The Judge rejected the General Counsel's argument that the May 17, 1983 grievance was not a bar to this proceeding. He found that the Activity made its election to pursue the grievance procedure with full knowledge that AFGE was appealing the Authority's Order finding that AFGE's exceptions were untimely. He found further that the Authority's rescission of its Order did not resolve the underlying dispute of non-compliance alleged in the grievance and did not render the grievance moot. The Judge found that if the Activity had proceeded with the grievance to arbitration, the arbitrator could have ruled on the effect on the grievance proceeding of the Authority's decision to entertain AFGE's exceptions on the merits. Accordingly, he concluded that section 7116(d) precluded the proceeding in this case. He thus found it unneccessary also to resolve whether this proceeding was precluded by section 7118(a)(4)(A) of the Statute.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel asserts in its exceptions that the Judge's interpretation of section 7116(d) of the Statute was in error. It argues that the Authority's rescission of its May 6, 1983 Order in 12 FLRA 39 returned the parties to the positions they were in prior to that Order, and rendered the Activity's May 17, 1983 grievance a nullity. Thus, it argues, the grievance did not bar this unfair labor practice proceeding.

AFGE asserts in its opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions that the Judge was correct. That is, the Authority's reconsideration of its dismissal of exceptions had no practical or legal effect upon the election of the grievance procedure by the Activity. It argues that there is no dispute that the Activity chose to raise the enforcement issue in a grievance, and that the Activity's choice barred it from filing an unfair labor practice charge. Therefore, it asserts that the General Counsel's exceptions are without merit and the complaint should be dismissed.

V. Analysis

In agreement with the Judge and based on his rationale, except as noted below,[1] we find that the Authority's reopening of AFGE's exceptions to Arbitrator Britton's award for consideration of the exceptions' merits did not nullify the Activity's prior grievance election. It is undisputed that the Activity was aware of the Union's intention to appeal the Authority's May 6, 1983 Order when it chose to file a grievance on May 17, 1983, and that the Activity knew that the Union had filed a request for reconsideration with the Authority when it requested a panel of arbitrators from the AAA in July 1983. Further, as the Judge found, the Activity's pursuit of the grievance was not voided by the Authority's later decision to consider AFGE's exceptions on the merits, since an arbitrator could have proceeded to decide all issues concerning the Activity's grievance under the terms of the parties' agreement. Thus, the Authority finds that the Activity's election, on May 17, 1983, to pursue enforcement of Arbitrator Britton's March 28, 1983 award through the parties' negotiated grievance procedure barred it under section 7116(d) of the Statute from pursuing the same matter under the unfair labor practice procedures of the Statute.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the General Counsel's exceptions, the Respondent's opposition to the exceptions, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended dismissal of the complaint. We therefore conclude that this proceeding is barred by section 7116(d) of the Statute and shall dismiss the complaint.[2]

[1] We find it unnecessary to pass upon and specifically do not adopt the Judge's discussion at page 9 of his Decision concerning the effect of the Union's failure to request a stay of Arbitrator Britton's award under section 2429.8 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

[2] Based on this conclusion, the Authority finds it unnecessary to pass upon whether the unfair labor practice charge in this case would have been timely under section 7118(a)(4)(A) of the Statute, and we do not adopt the Judge's comments on the matter.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 6-CO-40016 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This proceeding, under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the United States Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.,[1] and the Final Rules and Regulations issued thereunder, 5 C.F.R. § 2423.1, et seq., concerns the refusal of Respondent, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3320 (hereinafter also referred to as "Local 3320"), to comply with an Arbitration Award.

[1] For convenience of reference, sections of the Statute hereinafter are, also, referred to without inclusion of the initial "71" of the statutory reference, e.g., Section 7116(b)(8) will be referred to, simple, as "§ 16(b)(8)."

The consistent and adament refusal of Local 3320 to comply with the arbitration award is both conceded and firmly established by the record. The sole issue is whether this proceeding is barred by: a) § 16(d); and/or b) § 18(a)(4)(A). For reasons more fully set forth hereinafter, I conclude that this proceeding is barred by § 16(d) of the Statute. In view of my conclusion that this proceeding is barred by the Charging Party's prior election of the grievance procedure, it is unnecessary to reach, and I specifically do not decide, the further issue as to whether the charge was untimely within the meaning of § 18(a)(4)(A) of the Statute.

This matter was initiated by a charge filed on July 19, 1984 (G.C. Exh. 1(a)) which alleged violations of §§ 16(b)(5) and (8) of the Statute as the result of Local 3320's refusal to comply with the Arbitrator's Decision of March 28, 1983. A first Amended charge was filed on January 11, 1985 (G.C. Exh. 1(d)), which alleged violation of § 16(b)(5) only. The Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on January 18, 1985 (G.C. Exh. 1(g) and set the Hearing for February 13, 1985. Subsequently, initially at the request of Local 3320 the hearing was rescheduled for April 9, 1985 (G.C. Exh. 1(h)); at the request of the General Counsel the hearing was rescheduled for May 21, 1985 (G.C. Exh. 1 (q)); and further at the request of General Counsel on May 21, 1985, was indefinitely postponed (G.C. Exh. 1(t)). By Order dated October 25, 1985, this matter was rescheduled for hearing on December 5, 1985, and pursuant thereto a hearing was duly held on December 5, 1985, in San Antonio, Texas, before the undersigned.

All parties were represented at the hearing, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved, and were afforded the opportunity to present oral argument, which each party waived. At the conclusion of the hearing January 6, 1986, was fixed as the date for mailing post-hearing briefs, which time was subsequently extended, upon timely motion of the General Counsel to which Respondent did not object, to January 13, 1986. General Counsel and Respondent each timely mailed an excellent brief, received on, or before, January 14, 1986, which have been carefully considered. Upon the entire record, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings and Conclusions

1. The United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (AFGE) are parties to a collective bargaining agreement which covers both professional and non-professional employees. The current collective bargaining agreement was effective November 7, 1983 (G.C. Exh. 3). The previous collective bargaining agreement was effective from November 10, 1979, until replaced by the current agreement (G.C. Exh. 2). Local 3320 is the local representative for AFGE at HUD's San Antonio Area Office.

2. On May 25, 1982, the Activity filed a grievance against Local 3320 alleging that Local 3320 had violated section 8.01(2) of the parties' collective bargaining agreement (G.C. Exh. 2) by the posting of certain letters. The grievance was processed through the parties' negotiated grievance procedure; an arbitration hearing was held on December 1, 1982; and, on March 28, 1983, Arbitrator Raymond L. Britton issued his decision and award, AAA Case No. 7130020082 (G.C. Exh. 5). The Arbitrator sustained the grievance and ordered Local 3320:

> ". . . to remove the objectionable material from the Union bulletin board and to post a retraction and apology for a period of time equal to the posting of the letters which are the subject of this grievance." (G.C. Exh. 5, p. 18).

On April 27, 1983, Local 3320 filed exceptions to the decision of the arbitrator with the Authority (G.C. Exh. 6). Local 3320 did not request a stay of the arbitration award. On May 6, 1983, the Authority issued an Order dismissing the exceptions as untimely filed. 12 FLRA No. 10, 12 FLRA 39 (1983) (G.C. Exh. 8).

3. On May 11, 1983, the Activity requested that Local 3320 comply with the arbitration award (G.C. Exh. 9) and by letter dated May 16, 1983, Local 3320 responded that it was, "appealing 12 FLRA No. 10" (G.C. Exh. 10).

4. By letter dated May 17, 1983, the Activity reminded Local 3320 that it was, ". . . in violation of Article 23, Section 23.09 Award, and in addition, in non-compliance with 5 USC Section 7122 by not complying with the Arbitrator's Award . . . ." (G.C. Exh. 11). The Activity's letter of May 17, 1983, further stated:

> "This is to inform you that this should be considered by you an official grievance for the above noted violation." (G.C. Exh. 11).

By letter dated July 14, 1983, to the Assistant Regional Director, American Arbitration Association, Dallas, Texas, the agency requested a panel of arbitrators, ". . . so that one may be selected to hear a grievance concerning a violation of our national labor agreement . . . ." (G.C. Exh. 12). The Activity further stated,

> "The grievance concerns a violation of the HUD-AFGE labor agreement, Article 23, Section 23.09. Management contends that the union violated the contract by its refusal to comply with Arbitrator Britton's Award of March 28, 1983, AAA Case No. 71 30 0200 82 . . . ." (G.C. Exh. 12).

The Activity's grievance was never withdrawn, although the activity took no action to select an arbitrator from the panel submitted by the American Arbitration Association (see, G.C. Exh. 21).

5. Local 3320 having filed a request for reconsideration of the Authority's Order of May 6, 1983, the Authority by Order dated August 3, 1983, rescinded its Order of May 6, 1983, and ordered the ". . . case reopended for consideration on the merits." (G.C. Exh. 13).

6. On March 6, 1984, the Authority issued its decision denying Local 3320's exceptions (G.C. Exh. 15). By letter dated March 16, 1984, the Activity again requested that Local 3320 comply with the arbitration award (G.C. Exh. 16); by memorandum dated March 23, 1984, Local 3320 responded and stated, ". . . we are going to court on FLRA decision . . . Also . . . the time frame for you to appeal my non-compliance has expired. Instead of following the proper appeal procedures to the FLRA, this office chose to ask for a second arbitrator, and in doing so allowed the time frame to run out. Therefore, your (sic) out of luck." (G.C. Exh. 17). By letter dated July 2, 1984, the Activity again requested that Local 3320 comply with the arbitration award (G.C. Exh. 18); and by memorandum dated July 10, 1984, Local 3320 refused to comply with the award (G.C. Exh. 19).

7. On July 19, 1984, the Activity filed a charge (G.C. Exh. 1(a)) and on January 11, 1985, a first Amended charge (G.C. Exh. 1(d)), each of which alleged that Local 3320 violated the Statute by its failure and refusal to comply with the Arbitrator's decision of March 28, 1983.

I. § 16(d)

Section 16(d) of the Statute provides, in relevant part, as follows:

> ". . . issues which can be raised under a grievance procedure may, in the discretion > of the aggrieved party, be raised under the grievance procedure or as an unfair labor practice under this section, but not under both procedures." (5 U.S.C. § 7116(d)).

Where there is a single issue, here the failure and refusal to comply with an arbitration award, involving the same parties, it has consistently been held that § 16(d) requires an election of remedies; that the election is complete upon either the filing of a grievance or upon the filing of an unfair labor practice charge; and that once the election is made, the aggrieved party may not thereafter elect to proceed under the other procedure. In Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, Region VIII, San Francisco, California, 13 FLRA No. 105, 13 FLRA 631 (1984), the Authority dismissed the complaint because the issue, which was the subject matter of the complaint, had, prior to the filing of the charge been the subject matter of a grievance, i.e., the Respondent's failure to disclose a crediting plan, notwithstanding that the grievance had not been pursued through all steps of the grievance procedure. In Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons, Federal Correctional Institution, Butner, North Carolina, 18 FLRA No. 100, 18 FLRA 831 (1985), the Authority held, in part, that, ". . . section 16(d) . . . does not bar this unfair labor practice proceeding, based on the finding by the Judge that the charge . . . was filed . . . prior to the filing of the grievance." 18 FLRA at 832). See, also, Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 19 FLRA No. 17, 19 FLRA 169, 170-171 (1985). In Headquarters, Space Division, Los Angeles Air Force Station, California, 17 FLRA No. 131, 17 FLRA 969 (1985) the Authority denied exceptions to an award of the arbitrator which had held portions of the grievance were precluded by an earlier-filed unfair labor practice charge, notwithstanding that the unfair labor practice charge had been withdrawn. In Federal Bureau of Prisons, 18 FLRA No. 40, 18 FLRA 314 (1985), the Authority set aside an arbitration award because of a prior filed unfair labor practice charge, notwithstanding that the Authority's Regional Director had refused to issue a complaint and the appeal from that decision had been denied by the Authority's General Counsel. The Authority stated, in part, as follows:

> "In sum, there was an election in the discretion of the aggrieved party to raise the issue in this case under the unfair labor practice procedures. The Authority has recognized that the clear purpose and effect of section 7116(d) is to prevent relitigation of an issue in another forum after a choice of procedures in which to raise the issue has been made by the aggrieved party . . .

> Thus, the matter raised by the filing of the grievance could not be relitigated under the grievance procedure and consequently the grievance was precluded by the Statute from consideration by the Arbitrator. For these reasons, the award is deficient as contrary to section 7116(d) and is set aside (footnote omitted)" (18 FLRA at 316).

To like effect, see also, Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Pacific Region, 17 FLRA No. 135, 17 FLRA 1001 (1985). In Department of Air Force, Griffiss Air Force Base, Rome, New York, 12 FLRA No. 50, 12 FLRA 198 (1983), a portion of a consolidated complaint (Case No. 1-CA-588) was dismissed, pursuant to § 16(d), because of a prior filed grievance (12 FLRA at 200, n. 5; ALJ decision 12 FLRA at 208). (Reversed and remanded on other grounds, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2612 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 739 F. 2d 87 (D.C. Cir. 1984)). In Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 18 FLRA No. 101, 18 FLRA 855 (1985), the Authority dismissed the complaint, pursuant to § 16(d), because the subject matter of the complaint had been raised by a previously filed grievance.

General Counsel states, in part, as follows:

> ". . . On May 17, 1983, the Activity filed a grievance over the Union's refusal to comply with the arbitration award. The General Counsel admits that the May 17, 1983 grievance was filed by the same aggrieved party and involved the same basic issue, the Union's refusal to comply with the arbitration award, as the unfair labor practice charge filed in this case on July 19, 1984. Under normal circumstances, the grievance would bar the processing of the subsequent unfair labor practice." (General Counsel's Brief at p. 9).

However, General Counsel argues that the prior filed grievance in this case is not a bar because, ". . . the intervening event of the Authority's August 3, 1983 recision of its earlier May 6, 1983 . . . mooted the May 17, 1983 grievance." (General Counsel's Brief, p. 9). General Counsel further argues that, "The Activity considered the grievance a nullity since the Authority had rescinded its previous ruling that the exceptions were untimely. The 1983 grievance was premature as the arbitration award was not considered final and binding until the Authority issued its decision on May 6, 1984 . . . ." (General Counsel's Brief, p. 9).

I do not agree that the May 17, 1983, grievance is not a bar to this proceeding; nor do I agree that Authority's August 3, 1983, recision of its May 6, 1983, decision that Local 3320's exceptions were untimely rendered the grievance moot. First, the aggrieved party, the Activity, in its discretion, made an election to raise the issue, of Local 3320's failure and refusal to comply with the arbitration award of March 28, 1983, through the grievance procedure. The Activity made this election with full knowledge (G.C. Exh. 10) that Local 3320 was "appealing 12 FLRA No. 10." As the Authority has consistently held,

> ". . . the clear purpose and effect of section 7116(d) is to prevent relitigation of an issue in another forum after a choice of procedures in which to raise the issue has been made by the aggrieved party . . . ." Federal Bureau of Prisons, supra, 18 FLRA at 316.

Second, the arbitrator, in his award of March 28, 1983, had resolved all aspects of the dispute being arbitrated; Local 3320 had failed and refused to comply with that award; and the Activity's grievance was based on the premise that Local 3320 was, ". . . in violation of Article 23, Section 23.09 Award . . . by not complying with the Arbitrator's Award . . . ." (G.C. Exh. 11). In its letter requesting a panel of arbitrators, the Activity further stated, "The grievance concerns a violation of the HUD-AFGE labor agreement, Article 23, Section 23.09. Management contends that the Union violated the contract by its refusal to comply with Arbitrator Britton's Award of March 28, 1983 . . . ." (G.C. Exh. 12). At the time of the Activity's election of the grievance procedure to resolve the dispute, Local 3320's exceptions on May 6, 1983, had been dismissed as untimely (G.C. Exh. 8); but the Authority's subsequent decision, on August 3, 1983, rescinding that order, i.e., its determination that Local 3320's exceptions had, in fact, been timely filed, and ordering the ". . . case reopened for consideration on the merits." (G.C. Exh. 13) did not resolve the dispute. Local 3320 had not complied with the Arbitration Award of March 28, 1983, and, because the underlying dispute had not been resolved, the Activity's grievance was not rendered moot. Local 74, United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners of America, AFL v. National Labor Relations Board, 341 U.S. 707 (1951). Indeed, on March 6, 1984, the Authority denied Local 3320's exceptions (G.C. Exh. 15). The Authority's decision, after the Activity's election of the grievance procedure, to entertain Local 3320's exceptions did not render the arbitration case a non-justiciable controversy, Hicklin v. Coney, 290 U.S. 169 (1933). Quite to the contrary, Article 23, Section 23.09 of the parties' Agreement provided that:

> "The arbitrator's award shall be binding on the Parties. Either party may file exceptions to the award with the Federal Labor Relations Authority." (G.C. Exh. 2).

Article 23, Section 23.05 of the parties' Agreement provided,

> "The arbitrator shall have the authority to make all grievability and/or arbitrability determinations. Questions of arbitrability shall be submitted to the arbitrator in writing and be decided prior to any hearing, unless otherwise mutually agreed upon." (G.C. Exh. 2).

Pursuant to Article 23, Section 23.05 and 23.09, of the parties' Agreement, the arbitrator plainly was given full authority to determine all questions of grievability and/or arbitrability. Presumably, Local 3320 would have raised, as an affirmative defense, the fact that its exceptions to the Award of March 28, 1983, were pending before the Authority, and, if the exceptions had not been decided at the time the matter was submitted to the arbitrator, the arbitrator would have had to make a decision; but, clearly, the Authority's decision of August 3, 1983, to entertain Local 3320's exceptions, did not render the dispute submitted to arbitration moot. The arbitrator might have concluded that, pursuant to the language of Article 23, Section 23.09, pendancy of exceptions was immaterial to arbitration of the issue of Local 3320's violation of the contract by virtue of its non-compliance with the Award of March 28, 1983. Compare, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3090 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 777 F. 2d 751 (D.C. Cir. 1985); or the arbitrator might have proceeded to arbitration on the issue of Local 3320's breach of contract but deferred any award pending disposition of Local 3320's exceptions; or the arbitrator might have proceeded to arbitration on the issue of Local 3320's breach of contract in failing to comply with the Award of March 28, 1983, because Local 3320 had not requested a stay of the Award of March 28, 1983 (discussed further hereinafter); or the arbitrator might have deferred arbitration pending disposition of Local 3320's exceptions; or the arbitrator may have taken other action. The significance is not what action the arbitrator might have taken, but, rather, that the Agreement of the parties lodged plenary power in the arbitrator to decide any question of grievability and/or arbitrability and that the arbitrator had a wide range of options in determining the effect, if any, of the Authority's decision to entertain Local 3320's exceptions.

Third, Local 3320 had not requested a stay of the Arbitrator's Award of March 28, 1983, and the Regulations of the Authority specifically provide, in part, that:

> ". . . the filing of an exception shall not itself operate as a stay of the award involved in the proceedings." (5 C.F.R. § 2429.8(a)).

Consequently the Authority's August 3, 1983 determination to entertain Local 3320's exceptions did not stay the Award of March 28, 1983, and without regard to whether the exceptions were ultimately sustained or denied (and they were, in fact, denied on March 6, 1984, G.C. Exh. 15), in the absence of a stay, the parties must comply with the Award of March 28, 1983, even though the Award was subject to review by the Authority. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3090 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, supra. Stated otherwise, the arbitrator could have proceeded to arbitration on the issue of Local's violation of the Agreement by virtue of Local 3320's failure to comply with the Award of March 28, 1983, because the Award had not been stayed and Local 3320 was then required to comply with the Award. Obviously, the Authority's determination on August 3, 1983, to entertain Local 3320's exceptions did not preclude the arbitrator from granting effective relief to the aggrieved party, the Activity, and, therefore, the arbitration was not rendered moot. Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. v. Schauffler, et al., 305 U.S. 54 (1938); United States v. Rock Royal Co-op, Inc. et al., 307 U.S. 533 (1939); National Labor Relations Board v. C.E. Atkins and Co., 331 U.S. 398 (1947); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3090 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, supra.

Of course, the controlling consideration under § 16(d) is the election of remedies. It is conceded that the Activity elected the grievance procedure on May 17, 1983. Having made that election, it is immaterial whether that remedy was wise or whether that remedy was pursued. For reasons set forth above, the Activity's grievance was not rendered moot by the Authority's subsequent determination to entertain Local 3320's exceptions.

II. § 18(a)(4)(A).

In view of my conclusion that this proceeding must be dismissed pursuant to § 16(d) of the Statute, it is unnecessary to reach the further question as to whether this proceeding is, or is not, precluded by § 18(a)(4)(A). Although I specifically do not decide whether the time for filing an unfair labor practice, pursuant to § 18(a)(4)(A), began to run either from the date of the arbitration award, here March 28, 1983, to which no stay was requested, or from the initial refusal to comply with that award, here, May 16, 1983, either date having been substantially more than six months prior to the date the charge was filed on July 19, 1984, attention is directed to: a) Section 2429.8(a) of the Authority's Regulations, which provides that the filing of an exception to an arbitration award ". . . shall not operate as a stay of the award . . . ."; and b) the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 777 F. 2d 751 (D.C. Cir. 1985), which held that the dismissal of an unfair labor practice complaint, initiated while exceptions to the arbitrator's decision were pending before the Authority but as to which no stay had been requested, was improper.

Conclusion

Having found that this proceeding is barred by § 16(d) of the Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7116(d), it is recommended that the Authority adopted the following;

ORDER

The Complaint in Case No. 6-CO-40016 be, and the same is hereby, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the Respondent. The complaint alleged that the U.S. Government Printing Office violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) when on March 23, 1983, it bypassed the Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, International Typographical Union, AFL-CIO, the exclusive representative of certain of its employees, by negotiating directly with a bargaining unit employee an informal adjustment of her Equal Employment Opportunity complaint.

II. Background

The facts are set out in detail by the Judge and are not in dispute. In sum, a bargaining unit employee applied for the position of Head Deskman-in-Charge and was determined to be one of five best qualified candidates. This position, while included in the bargaining unit, is a bridge position for consideration with respect to supervisory positions. Upon her nonselection for the position, the employee filed an Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) complaint alleging that she was not selected because of her race and sex. The employee did not choose the Union to represent her in her EEO complaint. On March 23, 1983, the employee entered into an informal adjustment of her EEO complaint with the Respondent which provided that she would be promoted to the next available vacancy of a Head Deskman-in-Charge position. Within a few days the Union learned of the settlement and requested a copy. The Respondent provided the Union with a copy of the settlement on April 1, 1983.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge concluded that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by negotiating directly with a bargaining unit employee an informal adjustment of her EEO complaint based on the fact that "the meeting and 'negotiations' . . . concerned an EEO complaint, pursuant to statutory procedures of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) . . . ." In response to the General Counsel's contention that the meeting with the employee constituted the adjustment of a grievance, the Judge relied on the Authority's holding in Bureau of Government Financial Operations, Headquarters, 15 FLRA 423, 429 (1984), rev'd sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 1181 (D.C. Cir. 1985), "that a grievance within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A) does not encompass a statutory appeal . . . ."

Although the bypass alleged in the complaint was related specifically to the direct dealings between the bargaining unit employee and the Respondent in settlement of the EEO complaint, the Judge concluded further "that 'bypass' is sufficiently broad as to include all aspects of the Respondent's duty to bargain with the Union . . . ." In the Judge's view, where a change in conditions of employment results from the resolution of an EEO complaint, an agency is obligated to provide notice to the exclusive representative not later than immediately after its resolution. As he viewed the informal adjustment of the bargaining unit employee's EEO complaint to have resulted in a change in conditions of employment which was more than minor and isolated in character, the Judge found that the Respondent's failure to provide immediate notice to the exclusive representative of that change in conditions of employment, even though the Respondent provided the Union with a copy of the settlement upon the Union's request not more than a week later, constituted a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel took the position before the Judge that where the resolution of a unit employee's EEO complaint has a substantive impact on the bargaining unit, the exclusive representative has the right to receive notice and attend the meeting at which the resolution was reached. Before the Judge, the Respondent argued essentially that no provision of the Statute establishes a right for the exclusive representative to be a party in the resolution of complaints filed as statutory appeals under the regulations of the EEOC.

In its exceptions, the Respondent contended that the violation found by the Judge was improper because it was neither alleged in the complaint nor litigated at the hearing. Specifically, the Respondent asserted that neither the language of the complaint nor the supporting arguments made by the General Counsel ever raised the issue that the Respondent bypassed the Union solely by its failure to afford the Union an opportunity to negotiate concerning the impact and implementation of the EEO settlement agreement. In the Respondent's view, the sole issue alleged, litigated and briefed by both parties was whether the Respondent bypassed the Union by dealing directly with the EEO complainant.

The Respondent also excepted to the Judge's finding of a violation on its merits, contending essentially that the General Counsel never established that any existing condition of employment was changed or that the settlement resulted in any foreseeable impact on bargaining unit employees. Additionally, the Respondent argued that the Union never requested bargaining after it had received a copy of the settlement.1/

1/ The Respondent also excepted to the Judge's statement that in some circumstances the provisions of the EEOC with respect to confidentiality, specifically the identity of the aggrieved person, might have to yield to the right of the exclusive representative to notice of a change in conditions of employment resulting from the resolution of an EEO complaint of discrimination. Since no issue is raised in this case concerning the disclosure of an EEO complainant's identity, the Authority finds it unnecessary to address the Respondent's exception to the Judge's statement. Nevertheless, the Authority would give little weight to this exception as it is predicated on the pre-complaint confidentiality requirements of the EEOC Regulations, 29 CFR § 1613.213(a), while the facts of this case concern the post-complaint settlement efforts of the parties involved and different confidentiality requirements, 29 CFR § 1613.217.

V. Analysis

A. The Judge's Conclusion that the Complaint was Sufficiently Broad to Encompass All Aspects of Respondent's Duty to Bargain in Good Faith.

The Judge concluded that the complaint was sufficiently broad to include all aspects of the Respondent's duty to bargain with the Union. The Authority disagrees. The complaint neither alleged, nor did the parties litigate at the hearing, whether the Respondent's failure to provide notice to the Union of the informal adjustment of the EEO complaint constituted an unfair labor practice. The clear basis for both the unfair labor practice charge and the complaint, as indicated in the positions taken by the General Counsel at the hearing and in the brief to the Judge, was that the Respondent violated the Statute by meeting directly with a bargaining unit employee and reaching a settlement with that employee with respect to her EEO complaint of discrimination, which the General Counsel characterized as the resolution of her grievance without the presence of the exclusive representative. Therefore, as the allegation that the Respondent failed to provide the Union with notice of the settlement and an opportunity to bargain was not encompassed by the complaint and thus was not before the Judge, the Authority concludes that the violation found by the Judge in this regard must be dismissed.

B. The Judge's Conclusion that Negotiating Directly with a Bargaining Unit Employee over the Informal Adjustment of an EEO Complaint did not Constitute a Bypass.

The Authority concludes, in agreement with the Judge, that the Respondent, by meeting directly with a bargaining unit employee and negotiating an informal adjustment of her EEO complaint, did not bypass the exclusive representative in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Thus, any employee is entitled to elect to pursue a complaint of discrimination pursuant to and under the regulations of the EEOC as provided by law.[2] These regulations provide for an informal adjustment process.[3/] The regulations of the EEOC also provide that at any stage in the presentation of an EEO complaint, "the complainant shall have the right to be accompanied, represented and advised by a representative of his own choosing."[4/] Nowhere in those regulations is there any provision for the exclusive representative's presence, unless the exclusive representative is the complainant's designated representative. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit recognized the rights of the employee victim of discrimination when it observed:

[2] 29 CFR § Part 1613 was promulgated by the EEOC pursuant to an express grant of authority contained in the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-16(b)(1976). See also section 7121(d) of the Statute.

> . . . Congress has explicitly decided that a conflict between the identifiable victims of discrimination and the interests of the bargaining unit must be resolved in favor of the former. . . . Similarly, a direct conflict between the rights of an exclusive representative . . . and the rights of an employee victim of discrimination should also presumably be resolved in favor of the latter. (citation omitted; emphasis in original).

National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 1181, 1189 n. 12 (D.C. Cir. 1985).[5/]

[3/] 29 CFR § 1613.217 provides that "The agency shall provide an opportunity for adjustment of the complaint on an informal basis after the complainant has reviewed the investigative file." The same EEOC regulation requires the agency to furnish the investigative file promptly to "the complainant and the complainant's representative . . . ."

[4/] 29 CFR § 1613.214(b).

[5/] For examples of similar conflicts in the private sector resolved in favor of the victim of discrimination over the exclusive representative, see Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co. 415 U.S. 36, 50-51 (1973), which held that the individual's right to equal employment opportunities may not be waived in a collective bargaining agreement; International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers v. NLRB, 648 F.2d 18, 26-27 (D.C. Cir. 1980), involving an individual EEO complainant's paramount right to the privacy and confidentiality of his or her EEO complaint over an exclusive representative's demand for a copy of the complaint and the employee's identity; and

Therefore, an unfair labor practice cannot be found based solely upon an agency's conduct in resolving an EEO complaint pursuant to the regulations of the EEOC. Moreover, as the theory of bypass is premised on a finding that agency management has dealt unlawfully with unit employees concerning a matter over which the exclusive representative has both the right and obligation to represent the employees,6/ no violation can be found in these circumstances. The bargaining unit employee had elected to pursue her complaint of discrimination as an appeal under the regulatory process of the EEOC, and the exclusive representative had no statutory rights or obligations to represent her in that process.

Furthermore, the Authority agrees with the Judge, as a statement of general principle, that while a union has no right to participate in the informal adjustment of an EEO complaint where a bargaining unit employee has elected to pursue the complaint of discrimination under the EEOC regulatory process,7/ it may have a role if the settlement gives rise to an impact on the bargaining unit. As the D.C. Circuit recognized in a different context with reference to rights under section 7114 of the Statute in National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, 774 F.2d at 1188, the resolution of such complaints could potentially affect all bargaining unit employees in important ways, since a benefit or opportunity granted to one employee can mean the loss of the same benefit or opportunity for other employees. Accordingly, if the adjustment of an EEO complaint results in a change of unit employees' conditions of employment, the agency would have an obligation under the Statute to give prompt notice of that change to the exclusive representative of the unit employees and provide it with an opportunity to bargain to the extent required by the Statute.[8] Of course, since Congress has determined that the rights of identifiable victims of discrimination must take priority over the interests of the bargaining unit (744 F.2d at n. 12), an exclusive representative's right to bargain upon receiving notice of an EEO complaint settlement cannot conflict with or overturn the substance of such settlements. Since there is no issue in this case concerning the exclusive representative's lack of notice and an opportunity to bargain over the EEO complaint settlement, it is unnecessary for the Authority to address Respondent's exceptions on these grounds.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order only to the extent consistent with the above. We therefore conclude that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by meeting directly with a bargaining unit employee and negotiating the settlement of her EEO complaint. We conclude further that the Judge's finding of a violation based on the Respondent's failure to provide the Union with notice of a change in conditions of employment must be reversed as that allegation was not encompassed by the complaint before the Authority. Accordingly, the complaint shall be dismissed in its entirety.

[8] Such prompt notice would also appear to satisfy a union's need to understand the agency's application of policies affecting members of the bargaining unit and to fulfill its role as the exclusive representative. Thus, as noted by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1345 v. FLRA, No. 85-1378 (D.C. Cir. 1986), "In order to fulfill this obligation [to represent bargaining unit employees], it is axiomatic that [the union] must be able to inform employees of the procedures to which they are entitled and to communicate its willingness to enforce compliance with the bargaining agreement." (footnote omitted) slip op. at 8. The Court also noted that since the union represents all the members of the bargaining unit and policies established in particular personnel actions may affect employees beyond those immediately involved, management must provide information that is relevant to the union's need to understand new policies or the application of old policies that may affect members of the bargaining unit. Slip op. at 8.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This proceeding, under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the United States Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.[1], and the Final Rules and Regulations issued thereunder, 5 C.F.R. § 2423.1, et seq., concerns whether the Government Printing Office (hereinafter also referred to as GPO or Respondent) violated § 16(a)(5), and derivatively § 16(a)(1), of the Statute by informally adjusting an EEO

[1] For convenience of reference, sections of the Statute hereinafter are, also, referred to without inclusion of the initial "71" of the Statute reference, e.g., Section 7116(a)(5) will be referred to, simply, as "§ 16(a)(5)."

Complaint of a bargaining unit employee without affording the exclusive representative notice of the change of conditions of employment which resulted therefrom and opportunity to negotiate concerning appropriate arrangements for bargaining unit employees adversely affected thereby. This case was initiated by a charge filed on April 26, 1983 (G.C. Exh. 1(a)), which alleged violations of §§ 16(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute; the Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on December 28, 1983 (G.C. Exh. 1(c)); the Complaint alleged violations only of §§ 16(a)(5) and (1) and set the hearing for February 14, 1984, pursuant to which a hearing was duly held on February 14, 1984, in Washington, D.C., before the undersigned.

All parties were represented at the hearing, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence bearing on the issues, and to present oral arguement. At the close of the hearing, March 14, 1984, was fixed as the date for mailing post hearing briefs which time was subsequently extended, upon timely motion of Respondent, with which the other parties concurred, for good cause shown, to April 16, 1984. Respondent and General Counsel each filed an excellent brief on April 16, 1984, which have been carefully considered. Upon the basis of the entire record, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings

The facts are not disputed and briefly are as follows:

1. The Columbia Typographical Union No. 101 (hereinafter referred to as the "Union") is the exclusive bargaining representative for a unit of GPO's employees, including Video Keyboard Operators assigned to the Electronic Photocomposition Division. GPO and the Union are parties to a collective bargaining agreement (Jt. Exh. 1(a)) and are also party to a second but separate agreement negotiated between GPO and the Joint Council of Unions of which the Union is a part (Jt. Exh. 1(b)).

2. Ms. Sylvan W. Curtis is assigned as a Video Keyboard Operator in the Electronic Photocomposition Division. In October, 1981, Ms. Curtis had bid for a posted vacancy of Assistant Group Chief (now Head Deskman-in-Charge) in the Video Keyboard Section; had been one of five best qualified candidates; but was not selected. On May 20, 1982, Ms. Curtis filed an equal employment opportunity (EEO) Complaint in which she alleged that she had not been selected for the position of Assistant Group Chief, now Head Deskman-in-Charge, because of her race and sex (Union Exh. 1).

3. Ms. Curtis selected as her personal representative Mr. Jerry Nash, an employee of GPO but neither a representative of the Union nor an official of the Union.

4. In accordance with the applicable EEO regulations, GPO Instruction 650.1c (Jt. Exh. 2) and 29 C.F.R. Part 1613 (Jt. Exh. 3), Ms. Curtis' complaint was investigated and processed under GPO's EEO procedures.

5. The Union was not given notice of Ms. Curtis' EEO Complaint.

6. On March 23, 1983, Ms. Curtis entered into an informal adjustment[2] agreement of her complaint (G.C. Exh. 4). The settlement agreement was signed by the Complainant, Ms. Curtis; by her representative, Mr. Jerry Nash; by Respondent's EEO Complaint Officer, Ms. Hazel Devers; and by Respondent's representative, Mr. Thomas O. Magnetti. The Union was not given notice of the settlement which, in part, provided that Ms. Curtis would be promoted to the next available vacancy of a Head Deskman-in-Charge position on any of the three shifts in the Video Keyboard Section (G.C. Exh. 4, Par. 2).

7. During the latter part of March, 1983, shortly after its execution, the Union learned of the settlement and by letter dated March 28, 1983 (G.C. Exh. 2) requested a copy of the "decision" which GPO furnished by letter dated April 1, 1983 (G.C. Exh. 3).

8. The Union did not, after notice of the settlement, request negotiations concerning the implementation or impact of the settlement agreement (Tr. 23). As of the date of the hearing, Ms. Curtis had not been promoted to the position of Head Deskman-in-Charge as there has been no further vacancy in the Video Keyboard Section.

Conclusions

The Complaint alleges, in relevant part, that:

> "On or about March 23, 1983, Respondent negotiated directly with an employee an Informal Adjustment Agreement to resolve the employee's complaint of discrimination." (G.C. Exh. 1(g), Par. 6).
> "The employee referred to in Paragraph 6 above occupies a position within the . . . unit . . . ." (id., Par. 7)
> "Respondent engaged in the conduct described in paragraph 6 above without acquiring the actual consent of the Union or an express waiver of its right under the Statute to exclusively represent bargaining unit employees." (id., Par. 8)

---

[2] Under the EEO regulations there is an informal complaint procedure (Jt. Exh. 2) or precomplaint procedure (Jt. Exh. 3) and if the allegation of discrimination is not resolved at this stage, a complaint must be submitted in writing. Once a complaint is filed, there is further provision for informal adjustment of the complaint (Jt. Exh. 2, Par. 6 h; Jt. Exh. 3, § 1613.217). Here, there was no adjustment at the informal or precomplaint stage; a complaint was filed in writing (Union Exh. 1); and the complaint was settled pursuant to the informal adjustment procedures.

> "By the acts and conduct described in paragraph 6 above, Respondent bypassed the Union and thereby failed or refused to negotiate in good faith with the Union." (id., Par. 9)
> "By the acts and conduct alleged above, Respondent has engaged in . . . unfair labor practices in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5). (id., Par. 10).

Although this case does not involve any allegation that the meeting of March 23, 1983, was a formal discussion concerning, inter alia, a "grievance", as set forth in § 14(a)(2)(A) and defind in § 3(a)(9) of the Statute[3], General Counsel, both at the hearing (see, for example, Tr. 72, 75) and by brief (see, for example, General Counsel Brief pp. 11, 12, 13), relied heavily on Internal Revenue Service, Fresno Service Center, Fresno, California, 7 FLRA No. 54, 7 FLRA 371 (1981), set aside, 706 F.2d 1019 (9th Cir. 1983), which was premised on § 14(a)(2)(A) and the definition of § 3(a)(9) of the Statute. Indeed, General Counsel asserts that,

[3] § 3(a)(9) "'grievance' means any complaint —

"(A) by any employee concerning any matter relating to the employment of the employee;

"(B) by any labor organization concerning any matter relating to the employment of any employee; or

"(C) by any employee, labor organization, or agency concerning —

(i) the effect or interpretation, or a claim of breach, of a collective bargaining agreement; or

(ii) any claimed violation, misinterpretation, or misapplication of any law, rule, or regulation affecting conditions of employment;" (5 U.S.C. § 7103(a)(9)).

§ 14(a)(2) "An exclusive representative . . . shall be given the opportunity to be represented at —

"(A) any formal discussion between one or more representatives of the agency and one or more employees in the unit or their representatives concerning any grievance or any personnel policy or practices or other general condition of employment;" (5 U.S.C. § 7114(a)(2)(A)).

". . . since the forum in the instant case remains within the jurisdiction of the Authority, the Internal Revenue Service case, supra, remains binding precedent." (General Counsel's Brief, p. 13; see, also, Tr. 72). After the hearing and after briefs were submitted, the Authority, on August 1, 1984, in Bureau of Government Financial Operations, Headquarters, 15 FLRA No. 87, 15 FLRA 423 (1984), reversed its analysis as set forth in Internal Revenue Service, supra, and held in relevant part (Member Haughton concurring in part and dissending in part) as follows:

> ". . . the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed a decision of the Authority in which the Authority held that a meeting to discuss an Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) complaint concerned a 'grievance' within the meaning of section 7114(a) since an EEO complaint fell within the broad definition of section 7103(a)(9) of the Statute (footnote omitted). In its decision, the Court, noting that the EEO complaint was filed pursuant to statutory procedures of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), decided that the EEO claim of discrimination did not constitute a 'grievance' within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A). In this regard, the Court stated, '. . . the EEOC procedures involved in this case are not controlled by 5 U.S.C. § 7114(a)(2)(A) because they are separate and distinct from the grievance process to which 5 U.S.C. §§ 7103 and 7114 are directed.' Thus, the Authority finds, based on the distinctions in the Statute and its legislative history noted above, and the Court decision in the IRS, Fresno, case, supra, that a grievance within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(a) does not encompass a statutory appeal (footnote omitted). In the instant case, the meeting was held solely in connection with a statutory appeal — namely, an MSPB appeal. Accordingly, the Authority concludes that the meeting did not concern a 'grievance' within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute." (15 FLRA at 429-430).

In this case, as the meeting and "negotiations" of March 23, 1983, concerned an EEO complaint, pursuant to statutory procedures of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), GPO did not violate §§ 16(a)(5) or (1) of the Statute by its failure to give the Union notice of the meeting, by its failure to provide the Union with an opportunity to be represented at the meeting, or by negotiating directly with an employee an informal adjustment of her EEO complaint. Nevertheless, Respondent GPO was not free to implement any change in established conditions of employment, albeit that here the change resulted from an agreement resolving an EEO complaint of discrimination, without giving the Union notice of the change and an opportunity to negotiate concerning appropriate arrangements for those employees adversely affected as a result of Respondent GPO's action. Stated otherwise, an agency is free to meet with an employee and/or his or her designated representative to resolve, or to attempt to resolve, pursuant to statutory procedures of the EEOC, an EEO complaint of discrimination without notice to the exclusive bargaining representative; but if the agency by its resolution of the EEO complaint[4] takes action which changes any established condition of employment of other bargaining unit employees, it must give the exclusive bargaining representative notice of the change of established condition(s) of employment and an opportunity to negotiate concerning appropriate arrangements for those employees adversely affected by its action. It is the agency's change of conditions of employment which requires notice to the exclusive bargaining representative and an agency may not change an established condition of employment, even though it lawfully may agree to do so pursuant to statutory procedures of the EEOC to resolve an EEO Complaint of discrimination, without notice of the change to the exclusive bargaining representative and affording the exclusive bargaining representative an opporunity to negotiate concerning the impact and implementation of said change, any more than an agency may not change an established condition of employment pursuant to a reserved management right without notice to the exclusive bargaining representative and opportunity to negotiate concerning the impact and implementation of the exercise of such management right. U.S. Government Printing Office, 13 FLRA No. 39, 13 FLRA 203 (1983); Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Jacksonville District, Jacksonville, Florida, 15 FLRA No. 187 (1984). Notice of change of an established condition of employment by the resolution of an EEO complaint of discrimination does not necessarily require that the agency reveal the identity of the aggrieved person (see, Jt. Exh. 2, p. 9, Par. 5 c); but to the extent that it does, or may, then the provisions of EEOC with respect to confidentiality must yield to the right of the exclusive bargaining representative to notice of any change of a condition of employment and its right, pursuant to the Statute, to negotiate concerning impact and implementation of such change.

The position of Head Deskman-in-Charge is within the bargaining unit represented by the Union and GPO's agreement to promote Ms. Curtis to the next available vacancy foreseeably results in impact upon the remaining bargaining unit members, as between 200 and 250 unit employees will be rendered ineligible to apply for the next vacancy of Head Deskman-in-Charge which, without posting, will automatically be awarded to Ms. Curtis. Promotion to the Head Deskman-in-Charge position is one of the few opportunities open to journeymen unit employees to move into better paying positions and ultimately to supervisory positions (Tr. 18-20). As General Counsel notes, "The fact that these positions are scarce is evidenced in that Ms. Curtis following almost twelve months after entering into the settlement agreement, still remains in the same position she held when she first applied for the head deskman-in-charge position in 1981 (Tr. 18, Un. Exh. No. 1)" (General Counsel's Brief, p. 4). Ms. Devers, Respondent's EEO Complaint Officer, testified that EEOC had given her verbal guidance that, > ". . . unless the settlement of the complaint is going to have an impact on the bargaining unit employee, then the union has no right to be present at meetings with the complainant if they are not the designated representative.

[4] It is immaterial whether such resolution occurs during the "Informal Complaint Procedure" or during the "Formal Complaint Procedure."

> "If the settlement of that complaint is going to result in a change of working conditions, employment, the terms of their employment, if it's going to affect more than one person than the individual who we're dealing with who filed the complaint, then there is no right, the union has no right to be there." (Tr. 46).

For reasons set forth above, the right of the Union to be present at meetings with an EEO Complainant is properly governed by EEO procedures (in passing, however, the record plainly shows that EEOC and Respondent recognize that confidentiality is not absolute vis-a-vis the exclusive bargaining representative). Here, we are concerned not with Respondent's right to resolve an EEO complaint of discrimination without the presence of the Union, but, rather, with the separate and distinct right of the Union to notice of any change of conditions of employment affecting other bargaining unit employees that results from such resolution. Ms. Devers' testimony also fully supports, and by direct inference concedes, General Counsel's assertion that resolution of an EEO complaint of discrimination which affects other bargaining unit employees results in an impact which is more than de minimis. cf. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Chicago Region, 15 FLRA No. 174 (1984). I conclude that Respondent's agreement to promote Ms. Curtis to the next available vacancy of a Head Deskman-in-Charge position changed an existing condition of employment and that the change resulted in an impact upon unit employees which was more than de minimis for the reason that, although only a single future vacancy was thus encumbered, the removal of a promotion opportunity from the established posting and bidding procedures impacted on the rights of all other bargaining unit employees.

Here, Respondent changed an existing condition of employment on March 23, 1983, when it agreed to promote Ms. Curtis to the next available vacancy of a Head Deskman-in-Charge position and Respondent, at that point, failed to give the Union notice of the change of a condition of employment. As Respondent lawfully resolved the complaint of discrimination pursuant to statutory procedures of EEOC, unlike the situation when an agency exercises a reserved management right pursuant to § 6 of the Statute where the agency is obligated to provide adequate prior notice to the exclusive representative, Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Jacksonville District, Jacksonville, Florida, supra, I conclude that where the change in condition of employment results from the resolution of an EEO complaint, the agency is obligated to provide notice to the exclusive representative not later than immediately after its resolution of an EEO complaint which results in a change of conditions of employment. This Respondent failed to do; however, sometime thereafter the Union learned of the settlement by overhearing a conversation among unit employees on the shop floor (Tr. 13-14), and the Union requested a copy of the settlement agreement on March 28, 1983, which Respondent furnished on April 1, 1983. Respondent violated its obligation when it failed to provide the Union notice of the change of a condition of employment resulting from its resolution of the EEO complaint immediately after entering into the settlement agreement and its violation is neither obviated nor absolved by the fact that the Union subsequently learned of the settlement by "shop talk" or by the fact that the agreement remained executory. But is the violation found encompassed by the Complaint? The Charge (G.C. Exh. 1(a)) alleged, inter alia, that Respondent violated the Statute, ". . . by bypassing . . . [the Union] by agreeing to promote Sylvan W. Curtis . . . in a manner inconsistent with . . .[the Union's] contract and with the Federal Merit Promotion Policy", which, in my opinion, encompassed the violation found, i.e., the failure to give the Union notice of a change of a condition of employment and an opportunity to negotiate concerning appropriate arrangements for those employees adversely affected. The Complaint, however, in quite different language alleges that, by negotiating directly with an employee an Informal Adjustment Agreement to resolve the employee's complaint of discrimination, ". . . Respondent bypassed the Union and thereby failed or refused to negotiate in good faith with the Union" (G.C. Exh. 1(c), Par. 9); and, as the Complaint proceeded on the theory that direct negotiation with an employee of a settlement of an EEO complaint of discrimination violated the statute, that by such conduct ". . . without acquiring the actual consent of the Union or an express waiver of the right under the Statute to exclusively represent bargaining unit employees" (G.C. Exh. 1(c), Par. 8), Respondent violated §§ 16(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Whether the violation found is encompassed by the allegations of the Complaint turns, therefore, on the allegation that by negotiating the Adjustment Agreement Respondent bypassed the Union and thereby failed or refused to negotiate with the Union. If construed strictly, one could conclude that the violation found was not encompassed by any allegation of the Complaint since the Complaint was premised on the theory that, because an EEO complaint was a "grievance" within the meaning of § 3(a)(9) of the Statute, the exclusion of the Union from the negotiation of the Adjustment Agreement violated the Statute. Although the bypass alleged by the Complaint was of the negotiation of the Adjustment Agreement, I conclude that "bypass" is sufficiently broad as to include all aspects of Respondent's duty to bargain with the Union and specifically that it encompassed Respondent's duty to give notice to the Union of any change of conditions of employment resulting from the resolution of the EEO complaint and an opportunity to negotiate concerning appropriate arrangements for bargaining unit employees adversely affected thereby. Accordingly, I find that Respondent violated §§ 16(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by its failure to give the Union notice of the change in conditions of employment on March 23, 1983, which resulted from its resolution of Ms. Curtis' EEO complaint, and affording the Union an opportunity to negotiate concerning appropriate arrangements for bargaining unit employees adversely affected thereby.

As Respondent violated §§ 16(a)(1) and (5) when it failed to give the Union notice of the change in conditions of employment at, or immediately after, its action which resulted in said change, the fact that the Union did not request negotiations after it learned of the Adjustment Agreement is not determinative with respect to whether a violation occurred. Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Austin Service Center, Austin, Texas, A/SLMR No. 1142, 8 A/SLMR 1188 (1978); Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and Brooklyn District Office, IRS, 2 FLRA No. 76, 2 FLRA 586 (1980); United States Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Southern Region, El Paso, Texas, 11 FLRA No. 27, 11 FLRA 90 (1983); Bureau of Land Management, Richfield District Office, Richfield, Utah, 12 FLRA No. 133, 12 FLRA 686 (1983); U.S. Government Printing Office, 13 FLRA No. 39, 13 FLRA 203 (1983); Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Jacksonville District, Jacksonville, Florida, 15 FLRA No. 187 (1984).

Respondent's agreement to promote Ms. Curtis to the next available vacancy remains executory, i.e., no vacancy has occurred and Ms. Curtis has, therefore, not been offered promotion to Head Deskman-in-Charge. Under the circumstances, General Counsel's request for an order requiring present negotiations, upon request of the Union, concerning appropriate arrangements for bargaining unit employees adversely affected by the change in conditions of employment resulting from Respondent's resolution of Ms. Curtis' EEO Complaint is appropriate and will be granted. Present negotiations will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute by assuring the Union's statutory rights and will provide a meaningful remedy for the violation found to have been committed. Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Jacksonville District, Jacksonville, Florida, supra.

Accordingly, having found that Respondent violated §§ 16(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, 5 U.S.C. §§ 7116(a)(1) and (5), it is recommended that the Authority adopt the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 18(a)(7) of the Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7118(a)(7), and § 2423.29 of the Regulation, 5 C.F.R. § 2423.29, the Authority hereby orders that the U.S. Government Printing Office shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to give the Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, International Typographical Union, AFL-CIO, the exclusive representative of its employees (hereinafter referred to as the "Union"), notice of any change of conditions of employment as the result of the settlement or adjustment, pursuant to the statutory procedures of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and/or Respondent's Equal Employment Opportunity Regulations, immediately upon resolution of any EEO complaint of discrimination which results in any change of conditions of employment of any other bargaining unit employee and affording the Union the opportunity to negotiate concerning appropriate arrangements for bargaining unit employees adversely affected thereby.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, we will negotiate with the Union concerning appropriate arrangements for employees who have been, or may be, adversely affected by the change in conditions of employment which resulted from the settlement, pursuant to statutory provisions, of the Equal Employment Opportunity complaint of Ms. Sylvan W. Curtis whereby Respondent agreed to promote Ms. Curtis to the next available vacancy of a Head Deskman-in-Charge position on any of the three shifts in the Video Keyboard Section.

(b) Post at all of its facilities wherein there are bargaining unit employees represented by the Union copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Public Printer, or his designee, and shall be posted and maintained for a period of 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that said Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director of Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing within 30 days from the date of this Order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of a single Union proposal.1/

II. Union Proposal

> Details for less than thirty-one (31) calendar days will normally be rotated among employees. Such details shall be documented with a memorandum to the detailed employee's OPF.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that because the Union's proposal would require the Agency, under normal circumstances, to rotate details of less than 31 days, it would subject

1/ In its appeal, the Union sought Authority review of a number of other proposals. However, in its response to the Agency's statement of position in the case, the Union withdrew its petition as to the other proposals. Accordingly, those proposals will not be considered by the Authority.

management's discretion concerning such details to review by the Union and third parties. The Agency argues that the proposal therefore would directly interfere with its right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute and its rights under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work and to determine the personnel by which Agency operations will be conducted.

The Union maintains that its proposal does not interfere with management's rights and that the proposal is fully negotiable. In support of its position, the Union contends that the proposal does not mandate that details of less than 31 days must always be rotated and that the requirement of the proposal that details "normally" will be rotated acknowledges that deviations may be necessary for a variety of reasons. The Union further contends that the proposal does not limit management's discretion to establish the qualifications needed to perform work on details or limit management's judgment in determining whether a particular employee meets those qualifications.

IV. Analysis and Conclusions

The Union's proposal expressly provides that details for less than 31 calendar days normally will be rotated among employees. Under this proposal, as interpreted by the Union, employees would, in normal situations, be selected for details of the prescribed duration by rotation. Management would fully retain the discretion to determine the qualifications necessary to perform any detail work and the qualifications of any employees to be detailed. Management would also retain the discretion to determine not to rotate details in other than normal circumstances. The Authority finds that the Union's interpretation of the proposal is consistent with the plain language of the proposal.

The Authority has held that when two or more employees have been determined by management to be equally qualified and capable of performing work, the selection of any one of those employees to perform the work is consistent with management's exercise of its discretion under section 7106(a) of the Statute. In such circumstances, a proposed procedure by which employees previously judged by management to be equally qualified will be selected to perform the work does not directly interfere with section 7106(a)(2)(A) or (B) of the Statute but, rather, is a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2). Laborers International Union of North America, AFL-CIO, Local 1276 and Veterans Administration, National Cemetery Office, San Francisco, California, 9 FLRA 703, 706-07 (1982).

In this case, the Authority finds that the disputed proposal, as interpreted by the Union, constitutes a negotiable procedure for the selection of employees to perform work on details, that is, selection by rotation among employees management has determined to be qualified to perform the work involved. The Authority therefore concludes, contrary to the Agency's position, that the proposal is consistent with management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute and is within the Agency's duty to bargain.[2]

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning the disputed proposal.

Issued, Washington, D.C., August 11, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of the following Union proposal:

> Section 13-6. The union is authorized to prepare, hang, and maintain signs at/near entrance to Gates 1, 3, 4, 6, and 10 of Fort Campbell, Kentucky. The signs will be restricted to three feet high and five feet wide. Words on signs will read as follows:
> WELCOME TO FORT CAMPBELL
> COURTESY OF
> AMERICAN FEDERATION OF > GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES
> LOCAL 2022

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it does not concern a matter affecting working conditions of bargaining unit employees, within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute. The Union argues that this proposal involves communication with its members through the use of Agency facilities which is a negotiable condition of employment.

III. Analysis and Conclusion

Under the statutory scheme established by sections 7103(a)(12), 7106, 7114 and 7117 a matter proposed for bargaining which is consistent with Federal law, including the Statute, Government-wide regulations or Agency regulations is outside the duty to bargain unless that matter directly affects the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees.[1] In Antilles Consolidated Education Association and Antilles Consolidated School System, 22 FLRA No. 23 (1986), the Authority stated that it will consider two basic factors in deciding whether a proposal involves a condition of employment of bargaining unit employees:

(1) Whether the matter proposed to be bargained pertains to bargaining unit employees; and

(2) The nature and extent of the effect of the matter proposed to be bargained on working conditions of those employees.

For the following reasons, we conclude that the proposal does not involve a condition of employment of bargaining unit employees.

Applying the first factor to the proposal we are not persuaded by the record that the proposal principally focuses upon or pertains to bargaining unit employees. See National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue

[1] Section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute defines "condition of employment" as "personnel policies, practices, and matters whether established by rule, regulation, or otherwise, affecting working conditions . . . ."

Service, 7 FLRA 275, 284 (1981). Rather, the sign would merely welcome all people, employees and non-employees alike, entering the specified gates and advise them of the Union's existence.

Even assuming that the proposed signs pertain to bargaining unit employees, we cannot conclude, applying the second factor, that hanging the signs at or near the Agency's entrances would directly affect those employees' working conditions. The fact that the Agency provided this service to the Union in the past does not, standing alone, make this a condition of employment subject to the duty to bargain. Maritime Metal Trades Council and Panama Canal Commission, 17 FLRA 890, 892 (1985). Further, contrary to the Union's categorical assertion, the use of agency facilities by a Union is not necessarily a condition of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute. The case the Union relies on to support this proposition, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3748 and Department of Agriculture, Science and Education Administration, Personnel Division, Hyattsville, Maryland, 11 FLRA 122 (1983), is distinguishable. In Department of Agriculture, the Authority found negotiable a proposal which provided the Union access to the agency's Federal Telecommunication System during negotiations in order to facilitate the collective bargaining process. Unlike this case, that proposal was intertwined with the collective bargaining process and had a clear and direct affect on working conditions of bargaining unit employees. Here, to the contrary, it is not apparent that hanging the proposed sign on Agency property would facilitate communication or in any other way directly affect the working conditions of bargaining unit employees.

For the foregoing reasons, the Union's proposal in this case concerns a matter which is not a condition of employment of bargaining unit employees and is outside the Agency's obligation to bargain.[2]

[2] In reaching this conclusion Chairman Calhoun wishes to emphasize his belief that disputes over proposals such as this one should and can best be resolved at the bargaining table. The issue here clearly should not be raised to the level of the Authority. Chairman Calhoun believes that resolution of this case and others which are similar require

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed by the Respondent to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The General Counsel and the Charging Party (the Union) filed oppositions to the Respondent's exceptions. The complaint in this case alleged a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by failing and refusing to execute and implement a memorandum of understanding (the agreement) reached by representatives of the parties at a negotiating session on February 14, 1985.

II. Background

The Union represents Internal Revenue Service (IRS) employees who work in the Brooklyn District. The parties had entered into a settlement agreement in October 1984, in which the Respondent agreed to negotiate concerning the impact and implementation of the relocation of Group 1117 employees whose post of duty was in Mineola, Long Island. After some effort, a negotiating session was set for February 14, 1985.

In prior negotiating sessions involving other matters, the Respondent took the position that its negotiators did not have final authority to bind the Respondent to an agreement and that such authority only resided with higher level management, the District Director. At the beginning of the February 14, 1985 session, there was a discussion concerning the extent to which the Respondent's representatives had the authority to bind the Respondent to any agreement which might be reached. The Union representatives who attended the negotiating session testified at the hearing that the Respondent's representatives left the room, apparently to make phone calls, and returned to announce that they now had full authority to bind the Respondent. The Judge, however, credited the Respondent's witnesses' testimony to the effect that they announced their lack of authority at the commencement of the meeting, that they never sought or announced a change in that position, and that they assumed that the Union's representatives acquiesced in that position in the interest of concluding an agreement subject to approval by the District Director.

In the course of the February 14, 1985 bargaining session, the parties reached agreement on all the outstanding issues presented by the move of Group 1117 employees. The Union left the session with the belief that it had a binding agreement. Subsequently, the District Director raised concerns about portions of the February 14, 1985 agreement and refused to execute the agreement. The Union refused to change the agreement reached at the bargaining table and filed the unfair labor practice charges that led to this complaint.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge concluded that the General Counsel had not established, by a preponderance of the evidence, that a final agreement was reached at the bargaining session held on February 14, 1985. The Judge based that conclusion on her finding that the Respondent's representatives indicated at the beginning of the session that they did not have the authority to bind the agency and that they did not waver from that position. The Judge found that the Union's President at the time of the incident was aware of the Respondent's past failure to send fully authorized representatives to bargaining sessions. Therefore, the conclusions reached at that session were, in effect, only tentative pending the approval of higher level management officials. Under those circumstances, the Judge concluded that the Respondent did not act in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, as alleged, when it failed to give final approval to, and implement, any agreement reached at the February 14, 1985 bargaining session.

The Judge also concluded that the Respondent failed to send representatives to the February 14, 1985 bargaining session who had the capability of binding the Respondent to an agreement, in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. In so concluding, the Judge acknowledged the Respondent's contention that the complaint did not specifically charge it with the misconduct which is the basis of the violation. However, the Judge concluded that the allegation that the Respondent failed to send fully authorized representatives to the February 14, 1985 bargaining session was inherent in the complaint and that the matter was fully litigated at the hearing. In that regard, the Judge found that the testimony at the hearing presented by the Respondent demonstrated that its representatives made clear to the Union's representatives at the outset of the session that they did not have the authority to bind the Respondent and that they consistently maintained that position. The Respondent's defense was that the Union understood the position of management's representatives and agreed to continue with the negotiating session on the terms set by the Respondent. The Judge concluded that any Union acquiescence to the continuation of bargaining without fully empowered management representatives was not so clear and unambiguous as to constitute a waiver of its statutory right to bargain with agency representatives who were fully empowered to commit the Respondent to an agreement. The Judge recommended that the Respondent be ordered to continue the negotiations of February 14, 1985, with duly authorized representatives.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent excepts to the Judge's finding that it violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by failing to send to the February 14, 1985 negotiations representatives who were fully empowered to represent the Respondent. The Respondent does not except to the substance of the Judge's finding, but rather to the Judge's conclusion that the complaint was sufficiently broad so as to encompass the activity she found to be violative and that the matter of whether or not there were fully empowered representatives was fully litigated at the hearing. The Respondent contends that the complaint was never amended to specifically allege that it violated the Statute by failing to provide fully empowered representatives.

The Respondent also excepted to the Judge's failure to strike and disregard the testimony of one of the witnesses for the General Counsel who had been shown, prior to the hearing, a document obtained by the General Counsel from the Respondent in the course of its investigation. The Judge found that it was a violation of 5 CFR § 2423.7(d) for the General Counsel's witness to have been shown the document in question, but she concluded that a sufficient remedy was for her to treat the matter as casting doubt on the credibility of the affected witness and the other Union witnesses with whom the affected witness was likely to have discussed the matter prior to the hearing. The Respondent contends that the Judge's action was insufficient as a remedy for such "egregious" conduct by the General Counsel.

Neither the General Counsel nor the Charging Party excepts to the Judge's decision. In their oppositions to the Respondent's exceptions, the General Counsel and the Charging Party essentially support the validity of the Judge's decision with respect to the matters to which the Respondent excepts.

V. Analysis

The Authority finds that the Judge's decision is correct and should be adopted. With respect to the question of whether the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by failing to provide representatives who were fully empowered to commit the Respondent to any agreement reached with the Union at their February 14, 1985 negotiating session, the Judge found that the matter was fully litigated at the hearing. The Authority concludes that this finding by the Judge, as well as the Judge's resolution of the issue of whether the Respondent was provided with adequate notice at the hearing that it was being charged with such misconduct, are supported by the record. Thus, in its opening statement, the Charging Party stated:

> The Union's post-hearing brief will show that the Authority case law clearly holds that failure to authorize representative at the table to commit the party to a > formal agreement or a final agreement. In the absence of mutual consent otherwise constitutes bad faith bargaining and violation of Sections (a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. (sic) (Transcript of Proceedings before the Judge, July 16, 1985, at 20.)

Further, the Charging Party's representative at the hearing repeated this contention in his closing argument, and the General Counsel supported this position as an alternative to the allegation that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by failing to bargain in good faith by failing to execute the agreement reached on February 14, 1985.

The Judge found that the General Counsel, by showing one of its witnesses, prior to the hearing, a document obtained from the Respondent in the course of its investigation, violated the policy set forth in section 2423.7(d) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. We conclude that the Judge, based on the reasoning set forth in her decision, acted appropriately in deciding that the actions cast doubt on the credibility of that witness' testimony, as well as the testimony of other Union witnesses with whom the affected witness was likely to have discussed the matter, rather than striking and disregarding their entire testimony as requested by the Respondent before the Judge and in its exceptions to the Judge's decision.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and affirms these rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the Respondent's exceptions to the Judge's finding of a violation, the oppositions to the Respondent's exceptions submitted by the General Counsel and the Charging Party, and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommended Order. We therefore conclude that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by refusing to bargain in good faith at the February 14, 1985 negotiating session with the Union by sending representatives who were not fully authorized to conclude an agreement as required by section 7114(b)(2) of the Statute. In agreement with the Judge, and noting that no exceptions were filed to this aspect of her conclusions, we also conclude that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by failing to execute and implement the agreement reached between the parties on February 14, 1985 because, as found by the Judge, no final agreement requiring execution and implementation was reached at that time. Accordingly, those aspects of the complaint shall be dismissed.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, it is ordered that the Internal Revenue Service, Brooklyn District shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. 7101 et seq. (1982), commonly known as the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, and hereinafter referred to as the Statute, and the rules and regulations issued thereunder and published at 5 CFR 2411 et seq.

Pursuant to a charge of an unfair labor practice filed by the Charging Party on April 8, 1985, the Regional Director of Region II of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (hereinafter, the Authority), investigated and, on May 31, filed the complaint initiating this proceeding.

In paragraph 8(a) of the complaint it is alleged that, on or about February 14, 1985, the Charging Party/Union and agents of Respondent "negotiated, reached agreement, and initialed off at the bargaining table on a written memorandum of understanding embodying the terms agreed to regarding the impact and implementation of the relocation at the Mineola post-of-duty." In paragraph 9 of the complaint it is alleged that "at all times thereafter, Respondent, by [its agent, District Director] John Jennings, failed and refused, and continues to fail and refuse, to execute and implement the memorandum of understanding . . . ." See General Counsel's Exhibit 9(c). It is then alleged, in paragraphs 10 and 11, that by the acts alleged in paragraph 9, Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.[1] The unfair labor practice charge filed by the Charging Party/Union also alleges a violation of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) by the specific act of the activity refusing to execute and implement a negotiated agreement entered into on February 14. See General Counsel Exhibit 9(a).

Respondent denies that the alleged violations occurred.

A hearing was held on July 16 and 17, 1985, in New York City. The parties appeared, adduced documentary evidence, and examined witnesses. Briefs were filed by the General Counsel and the Charging Party on September 9 and by the Respondent on September 10. Based upon the record made in this proceeding and the briefs, I enter the following findings of fact and conclusions of law, and recommend the entry of the following order.

[1] Section 7116 provides, in pertinent part, that:

> (a) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency -
> > (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter; . . . [or]
> > (5) to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with a labor organization as required by this chapter . . . .

Findings of Fact [2]

1. At all times material herein, the Charging Party has been, and is now, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 7103(a)(4) of the Statute.

2(a). At all times material herein, the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) has been, and is now, an agency within the meaning of Section 7103(a)(3) of the Statute.

(b). At all times material herein, IRS, Brooklyn District has been, and is now, a constituent entity within IRS and an agent acting on its behalf.

3. At all times material herein, the following named persons occupied positions in the IRS Brooklyn District as set forth below, opposite their names:

John Jennings - District Director

Donald Mitgang - Assistant District Director

Harvey Silverman - Chief, Examination Division

Gail Peck - Chief, Labor Relations

4. At all times material herein, the individuals named above in paragraph 3, have been, and are now, supervisors and/or management officials as defined in Section 7103(a)(10) and (11), respectively, of the Statute and have been, and are now, agents of Respondent acting on its behalf.

5(a). At all times material herein, the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) has been, and is now, the certified exclusive representative of a consolidated nationwide unit of certain employees of IRS, including all professional and nonprofessional employees employed in the District, Region and National Offices of IRS, excluding all management officials, supervisors, confidential employees, federal employees engaged in personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards and other employees not relevant herein.

[2] The following abbreviations will be used herein. "TR. I" refers to the transcript dated July 16. "TR. II" refers to the transcript dated July 17. "G.C. Exh." refers to the exhibits of the General Counsel and "R. Exh." to those of Respondent. "G.C. Br." refers to the brief of the General Counsel, "R. Br." to that of Respondent, and "C.P. Br." to that of the Charging Party/Union.

Corrections to the transcript are attached hereto and are made pursuant to 5 CFR 2423.19(r) and the unopposed motion of the General Counsel.

(b). At all times material herein, NTEU has delegated to its Chapter 53 authority to act as its representative for the purpose of collective bargaining for approximately 1200 of Respondent's employees, including those employed in the IRS, Brooklyn District, at Mineola, New York. Chapter 53's delegation has been recognized by Respondent. George Greenberg is President of Chapter 53.

6(a). On or about October 19, 1984 and October 26, 1984, the Charging Party and Respondent, respectively, entered into an informal settlement agreement which provided, in part, that IRS Brooklyn District would negotiate with NTEU over the impact and implementation of the relocation of bargaining unit employees in Group 1117 of IRS's Examination Division, Brooklyn District.

(b). On or about November 8, 1984, the agreement described above in paragraph 6(a) became, by its terms, effective. On December 11, 1984, NTEU made a demand to negotiate and submitted a set of proposals to Ms. Peck. No response was received and, on or about January 25, 1985, NTEU renewed its demand, resubmitted its proposals, and suggested specific bargaining dates. The afternoon of February 14, 1985, was finally set as the bargaining date at a labor-management meeting on February 1.

7(a). Prior to a February 14, 1985, bargaining session between Chapter 53 and Respondent over a relocation of Group 1117, these parties had had approximately five or six other negotiations. See TR. II. 99. Evidence was adduced as to three, in particular.

(b). One involved bargaining over the establishment of Revenue Agent Group 1103. Agreement was reached on this matter in November 1984. Mr. Mitgang signed for IRS and Mr. Greenberg for Chapter 53. Before the agreement was signed, David Krieg, Chief of Personnel and the supervisor of Ms. Peck, sent a "draft agreement" to Mr. Mitgang for his "OK" and, if "OK," it was to be sent out to NTEU "for review" (R. Exh. 10).

(c). Another involved bargaining over Taxpayer Delinquent Accounts (TDA). Negotiations began on this subject in or around July 1984. Final agreement was reached around July 1985. The delay was over an "outstanding issue" (TR. II. 206). Ms. Peck and Mr. Greenberg, as well as former Chapter 53 President, Peter Grimaldi, negotiated the TDA matter. Ms. Peck and Mr. Greenberg each kept bargaining notes. Ms. Peck's practice was to produce typed draft agreements from her bargaining notes and route a copy to the District Director for his approval. These drafts did not include items which the negotiators had put on "hold" or "impasse." There was no evidence that this practice was ever acquiesced in by, or communicated to NTEU. And it is not an express written rule, regulation or policy of the District. When Ms. Peck sent a copy of the TDA draft to Mr. Greenberg, it contained no changes made by the District Director. It was Ms. Peck's practice to forward a copy of her typed notes to Mr. Greenberg, who would check it for conformance with his bargaining notes. If there was a disparity, Mr. Greenberg could request further negotiations. Ms. Peck forwarded many such memoranda to Mr. Greenberg prior to reaching final agreement because the memoranda did not reflect items which the parties had agreed to hold or had come to impasse upon.

(d). Another involved bargaining over Employee Performance Folders (EPF). Ms. Peck, Mr. Greenberg and Mr. Grimaldi negotiated concerning EPF, with Ms. Peck and Mr. Greenberg each keeping bargaining notes. These sessions took place in July and September 1984. Mr. Greenberg noted "impasse" or "hold" next to items which reflected issues that were not agreed to during negotiations, as was his practice. After the negotiation session, a draft memorandum of agreement was transmitted to the District Director for his approval. Mr. Mitgang reviewed it for substance. On November 23, 1984, a copy of the "proposed" memorandum was sent by Ms. Peck to Mr. Greenberg for his acceptance, if agreeable to him (R. Exh. 4). On February 11, 1985, Mr. Greenberg wrote to Ms. Peck that:

> I have consistently told you that Chapter 53 wishes to negotiate the outstanding items before management broke off negotiations. We will not sign an agreement which you have unilaterally drawn up.

See R. Exh. 5 and see also TR. II. 213. Additional negotiations took place in February 1985. EPF negotiations were concluded in March 1985 and final agreement reached.

8. Mr. Mitgang has been Assistant District Director since September 1982. At one time, he participated in a negotiation over alternate work schedules ("AWS"), was the spokesperson, and had authority to bind the District at the bargaining table. The District Director signed the agreement at a later date.

9. Since the AWS negotiations, Mr. Mitgang has not participated at the bargaining table; and agency representatives at the table have had authority only to "discuss the proposals of NTEU and management and to arrive at a proposed tentative agreement for the director" (TR. II. 142 and see also 144). It has been the practice of Mr. Mitgang to review the draft memoranda of agreement reached at the table, discuss them with the District Director, and then discuss any problems detected with the management bargaining team. Prior to the agreement reached at the February 14 bargaining session, no changes in substance had ever been renegotiated, except for matters which had been declared as non-negotiable.3/

3/ Respondent's Chief of Labor Relations so testified and seemed certain. See TR. II. 208.

Mr. Mitgang testified that "changes" were made by him on "some" of the agreements reached at the bargaining table, but did not clarify whether they were of substance and seemed unclear on the point. See TR. II. 149.

10. On cross-examination, Mr. Mitgang conceded that, as a result of this hearing, he is "now aware" that the Statute requires management to send a team to the bargaining table which is fully authorized to enter into a binding agreement (TR. II. 196). He also conceded that the practice in issue in this case was inconsistent with management's obligation. See TR. II. 200.

11. Mr. Mitgang testified that "to [his] knowledge" the union was apprised of the fact that the agency bargaining team at the table had such limited authority (TR. II. 143) and that they were apprised of it through "various negotiations over the past period of time or two years or whatever it is" (TR. II. 144). Ms. Peck was also "confident" that the union knew of the tentative nature of agreements reached at the bargaining table and that they needed the approval of the Director (TR. II. 94). Mr. Mitgang admitted that there was no written policy on this limited authority; that no letter had been sent to George Greenberg, Chapter 53's President, about such authority; and that he had never personally notified Mr. Greenberg of it. See TR. II. 181 and 194 and also TR. II. 94-95. Peter Grimaldi, Chapter 53's President from June 1983 until September 1984, was unaware that the agency was sending unauthorized representatives to the bargaining table; but his experience was "limited in that area" because Chapter 53 and Respondent only "came to possibly one agreement" during his administration (TR. II. 218). At first, Mr. Greenberg indicated that he knew of the practice. See TR. I. 99-100 where he responded as follows to questions put by Counsel for the General Counsel at the hearing on July 16, 1985, about a meeting between Mr. Greenberg and Michael J. Wolf, Assistant Counsel of NTEU, just before the negotiation session in February 14, 1985, began:

> Q. What problems with management bargaining in the past did you express to Mr. Wolf during that meeting prior to the negotiation session?
> A. I expressed that I didn't understand why we could not -- in other words, in negotiations that I had with the Assistant Director, Donald Mitgang, he always went and made a big issue as to the fact that he was ready to sign agreements and commit the district, and was the union so ready to do. And I didn't know -- I didn't understand why in the interim period that wasn't happening with management, why we couldn't take the same position that I or someone on my team was authorized to sign, why wasn't management authorized. Why couldn't we have the same standard as the Assistant District Director of Brooklyn.
> And he [Mr. Wolf] seemed to feel that we could; and that that would be the thing that we would pursue.

See also TR. I. 97-98, where Mr. Greenberg testified that, at a February 1, 1985 labor-management meeting, the problem was discussed as to Mr. Jennings authorizing anyone from the management team, at negotiations, "to commit" (TR. I. 97-98).

When recalled as a rebuttal witness, on July 17, 1985, however, Mr. Greenberg responded as follows to questions put by Counsel for the General Counsel:

> Q. Mr. Greenberg, prior to the 1117 negotiations has any IRS representative ever told you at the negotiating table that they didn't have authority to commit the agency?
> A. No.
> Q. Have you ever been aware of any practice of the agency in sending negotiators to the table without authority to bargain prior to February 14, 1985?
>
> A. No.
> Q. So you've never agreed to that practice?
> A. No.

See TR. II, 204-205. Mr. Greenberg appeared to me to be candid and honest in the responding to the above-quoted questions put to him on July 16, and less so in responding to those put to him on July 17. Furthermore, Mr. Greenberg was not asked, on July 17, whether he was aware (as distinct from being told) of an agency practice of sending negotiators to the table without authority to commit and sign for the agency (as distinct from bargaining on its behalf). Thus his July 17 testimony is not necessarily in conflict with that given on July 16. Also, the Assistant Counsel for NTEU seemed aware that there was a "problem with [the District Director] authorizing people to negotiate for him" (TR. I. 97). Accordingly, I find that the current President of Chapter 53 was aware of the management practice of sending unauthorized representatives to the bargaining table, prior to the February 14, 1985, negotiations.

12(a). On February 14, 1985, bargaining teams from Chapter 53 and Respondent met to negotiate over the impact and implementation of a relocation of Group 1117 employees. Representing management were Gail Peck and Harvey Silverman. Ms. Peck has been Chief, Labor Relations, since 1982 and provides advice and guidance to managers, on labor matters. She also reviews union proposals and often participates in local negotiations with Chapter 53. Mr. Silverman has represented the Examination Division, as part of management's team, two to four times during the last two to three years. Representing Chapter 53 were Michael Wolf, Assistant Counsel for NTEU; George Greenberg, Chapter 53 President; and three Chapter 53 officers, Roslyn Haber, Gene Spitzer, and Peter Grimaldi. Prior to the meeting, Mr. Wolf and Mr. Greenberg agreed that Mr. Wolf would act as spokesperson and that unless the management team was "prepared to fully negotiate, to arrive at agreement," Chapter 53 would not negotiate until someone from Respondent was at the table "fully authorized" (TR. I. 35 and see also TR. II. 99-101). Nationwide, it is the practice of IRS and NTEU to send fully authorized representatives to the bargaining table. The contrary practice in the IRS Brooklyn District is an "anomaly" (TR. II. 87).

(b). As to what exactly transpired at the February 14 meeting, there is conflict. The two members of the management team testified, in agreement, that Ms. Peck was the "chief spokesman" for management and that she made it clear, at the outset of the meeting, and in response to a question put by Mr. Wolf, that her authority was limited and that final authority to sign rested with the Director. See the testimony of Ms. Peck at TR. II. 9, 100 and compare to that of Mr. Silverman at TR. II. 113-114, 122-123, 129, 131-133, who testified that Ms. Peck told Mr. Wolf that the agency's representatives lacked both the authority to sign and to commit the agency.

The union members of the team also testified; but their recollections of specifics varied in some important details. Mr. Wolf recalled that Mr. Silverman was the chief spokesman for the agency (TR. I. 34 and 82) and could not recall Ms. Peck making any statement, at the outset, about the limited authority of the management team (TR. I. 83). Mr. Greenberg and Ms. Haber affirmed that Ms. Peck made a statement, at the outset, that the management team could not commit to an agreement. See TR. I. 101, 147, and 184). This "so annoyed" Ms. Haber that she "wrote it down" (TR. I. 184). The other members of the union team could not recall the reply, if any, of Ms. Peck. See TR. I. 176 and 198). Generally, as to who from the management team was the chief spokesman, Mr. Greenberg affirmed that: "Basically, Mr. Silverman's response to [him] always is that he follows whatever he's told from Labor Relations is his standard response" (TR. I. 98).

Ms. Peck and Mr. Silverman impressed me as credible witnesses, and their testimony was basically consistent. While they had some difficulty in recollecting all the events of the three-hour meeting on February 14, their recollections seemed more firm and honest than those of the union witnesses. One problem with relying on the recollections of the witnesses from the union team as to what the management team said is that they were admittedly "quite a boisterous group" at the bargaining table (TR. I. 68) with "arguments going on" and "a lot of voices being heard" (TR. I. 193). Accordingly, I find that Ms. Peck, Chief of Labor Relations, was management's chief spokesman at the February 14 meeting and clearly stated at the outset, that the authority of the management team was limited, and it could not commit the agency.

(c). This announcement made the union team unhappy; and Mr. Wolf and Mr. Greenberg spoke out against it. See TR. I. 184-185 and TR. II. 123, 130 and 133. Mr. Wolf stated that such conduct constituted bad faith bargaining. Ms. Peck asked if they could not do business as usual. She did not explain what she meant by this statement. No one else recollected her making this statement.

(d). According to the witnesses from the union team, either Ms. Peck or Mr. Silverman, or both (the witnesses were in disagreement as to this) thereupon left the room and, upon their return, gave the impression that they had authority to bind the agency.

(e). Mr. Wolf recalled that both left the room and was "quite certain" that Mr. Silverman and not Ms. Peck made a phone call (TR. I. 37-38), to whom or about what he could not say (TR. I. 81); that upon their return to the room Mr. Silverman said something to the effect that: "I can bargain; let's go (TR. I. 38) or that "he was ready to bargain and that there was not a problem" (TR. I. 86) and that he had "verified his authority before coming to the table" (TR. I. 39) and "knew what his parameters were" and what he could agree to and what he couldn't agree to "and was prepared to come to an agreement" on everything, at least "if possible" (TR. I. 39).

(f). Mr. Greenberg testified that, upon returning to the room, Ms. Peck "announced that they spoke to Brooklyn and they now have the authority to commit the district to this agreement" (TR. I, 102 and see also TR. I. 121, 131 and 157).[4]

[4] Mr. Greenberg was the only union witness to have been shown a note written by Ms. Peck, in which she summarized the beginning of the February 14 meeting and noted that she had stated that no member of the management team had authority to sign for the agency. See R. 11. The note was apparently turned over to the Authority by Ms. Peck as part of its investigation. Ms. O'Connor showed the note to Mr. Greenberg prior to his testimony, asked him if he were aware of it, and discussed that there would be a difference of opinion as to what happened, preliminary to the negotiations. See TR. I. 138 - 141. Respondent argues that revealing this note to Mr. Greenberg violated 5 CFR 2423.7(d) and diminishes his credibility as a witness, as knowledge of it allowed him to fashion his testimony so that it would not conflict with this potential documentary proof and testimony of Ms. Peck.

Upon reflection, I conclude that revealing the note to Mr. Greenberg was in violation of Authority policy, as stated in 5 CFR 2423.7(d):

> The purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute can best be achieved by the full cooperation of all parties involved and the voluntary submission of all potentially relevant information from all potential sources during the course of the investigation.

(g). Mr. Spitzer testified that both Ms. Peck and Mr. Silverman stepped outside the room to make a phone call and came back and said they "had the authority to negotiate" (TR. I. 172 and see also TR. I. 176). He then testified that he "guess[ed] that Ms. Peck said this, but could not "really remember" (TR. I. 172).

(h). Ms. Haber testified that both Ms. Peck and Mr. Silverman left the room and, upon their return, Ms. Peck said that "they were now authorized" (TR. I. 185).

(i). Mr. Grimaldi testified that Ms. Peck left the room to make a telephone call and he "assume[d] that it was to confirm the fact that she had the power to sign for management" (TR. I. 98-199). He at first testified that Mr. Silverman stayed in the room and later testified he was not sure of this. See TR. I. 199 and 207. He could not recall the exact words of Ms. Peck upon her return, but inferred that she had the power to sign for management because the meeting continued (TR. I. 199).

> To this end, it shall be the policy of the Authority and the General Counsel to protect the identity of individuals and the substance of the statements and information they submit or which is obtained during the investigation as a manner of assuring the Authority's and the General Counsel's continuing ability to obtain all relevant information. (Emphasis added).

Respondent urges that the "only appropriate remedy is to strike the testimony of the General Counsel's witnesses and dismiss the complaint" (R. Br. 13). In the particular circumstances of this case, I believe the better remedy is to treat this matter as casting doubt on the credibility of Mr. Greenberg, and to resolve any conflicts between his testimony and that of Respondent's witnesses in favor of the latter. Since, as President of Chapter 53, Mr. Greenberg may have discussed with the other union witnesses, particularly Mr. Wolf who acted as counsel for the Chapter in this proceeding, the information as to how Ms. Peck would be likely to testify, some doubt is also cast on the credibility of the account of the February 14 meeting given by all the union witnesses.

In a prior instance where the General Counsel revealed documentary evidence to a union witness, before the hearing, the Authority declined to dismiss the complaint and, instead, held that "this impropriety affects the weight to be accorded" to the testimony of the union witness. See footnote 2 to Internal Revenue Service, Boston District Office, Boston, Massachusetts and Internal Revenue Service, Andover Service Center, Andover, Massachusetts, 5 FLRA 700, at 701.

(j). Neither Ms. Peck nor Mr. Silverman could recall leaving the conference room to make phone calls while they were meeting with Chapter 53 on February 14. See TR. II. 78, 126 and 134. Ms. Peck did think that at a midway point, the parties broke to get a cup of coffee and to use the lounge. See TR. II. 97.

(k). Based upon the testimony of Ms. Peck and Mr. Silverman, both credible witnesses, that they did not leave the conference room on February 14 to confirm their authority, and that both knew they had only the authority to reach a tentative agreement, I find that no such phone calls were made and that they never receded from Ms. Peck's statement, at the outset, that they had only limited authority. I find the testimony of the witnesses from the union bargaining team to be conflicting and not as credible as that of Ms. Peck and Mr. Silverman. Ms. Peck and Mr. Silverman testified to the effect that they believed that the union team acquiesced in their proceeding with limited authority because it did not break off negotiations. See TR. II. 80, 115 and 130.

13. Give-and-take negotiations took place on February 14, 1985, until agreement at the table was reached on each item. At the suggestion of Mr. Wolf, the parties initialled off on each item as agreement was reached on it. The parties were pleased with this process. One improvement was the fact that it eliminated the need and practice of the parties to keep separate bargaining notes. The negotiations concluded with good feelings all round. The initialling-off process avoided the problem of the participants reaching some kind of accord on the language of a particular proposal and then, later, disagreeing on what was actually agreed to and in what context. See TR. II. 117 and 139. The management team by initialling, did not intend to bind the agency. But the process may have misled some of the union negotiators into believing that the substance of the agreement reached was final, as this process had never been used before in Chapter 53 negotiations. Mr. Wolf conceded that he, however, had "great concerns" about the District Director and the "finality of the agreement" reached at the table, despite Mr. Silverman's apparent elation and his generous words about the negotiators' product at the conclusion of the bargaining session on February 14 (TR. I. 67). When Mr. Wolf emphasized to the management bargaining team that the NTEU expected an immediate signature from the District Director, Mr. Silverman responded that he had no control over the District Director.

14. Contrary to Ms. Peck's expectations, the agreement reached at the table did not meet the approval of the Assistant District Director or the Director. Several substantive concerns were expressed by them which Ms. Peck was asked to communicate to Mr. Greenberg. Mr. Mitgang found "unacceptable" to management items six, seven and eight of the agreement forwarded to him by Ms. Peck following the February 14 negotiations and discussed them with the District Director (TR. II. 173).

(a). Item six provides that: "The Agency will provide reasonable isolation from distracting noise and mechanical equipment to each employee. Reasonable effort will be made to provide each employee with a window and blinds" (R. Exh. 1). Mr. Mitgang explained that there were approximately 13 employees who were relocated into a single office type setup with only so many windows, so that it was "impossible" to provide each employee with a window (TR. II. 174). He also objected that the employees were not put into any position where isolation from mechanical equipment or noise was of any concern.

(b). Item seven provides: "Lack of access by revenue agents to conference room facilities can be used as a defense to any performance based actions brought against a revenue agent" (R. Exh. 1). Mr. Mitgang's objection to this item was that the employees had only moved from one floor to another and "still had access to all the conference rooms that they had access to prior to the move and [he] felt that putting that in the agreement was totally irrelevant to the agreement or the move itself" (TR. II. 175). He also felt that management could not accept lack of conference room facilities as a defense to any performance-based action.

(c). Item eight provides that: "No employee will be required to work in an area which fails to comply with all applicable health and safety requirements. Health and safety conditions including those specified in 29 C.F.R. 1960 _et al._, will be monitored by a joint team of two persons, one appointed by the union and one appointed by the agency. Unhealthy or unsafe working conditions which are not rectified by the agency once brought to its attention can be grieved" (R. Exh. 1). He objected to this item because there is already a joint labor-management safety committee, so a second would be "a duplication of effort" (TR. II. 178). He also objected because 29 CFR 1960 already requires Respondent to provide safe working conditions.

15. Mr. Greenberg has refused to change the agreement reached at the table. See TR. II, 21. The agreement has not been signed.

16. It is a common practice, throughout IRS, for District Directors to perform the ministerial task of formally executing agreements which have been earlier reached at the bargaining table.

17. The National Office of Respondent reviews all agreements reached by NTEU and its District Directors for legality and negotiability .

Discussion and Conclusions

I. It has not been established, by a preponderance of the evidence,[5] that a final agreement was reached at the bargaining table on February 14, 1985.

[5] This is the statutory burden of proof. See 5 U.S.C. §§ 7118(7) and (8).

The complaint alleges that Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when its Brooklyn District Director failed and refused to execute and implement a memorandum of understanding reached on February 14, 1985, by management and union agents at the bargaining table. Establishing this violation requires proof that agreement was reached by the bargaining agents at the bargaining table. Based upon the most credible evidence of record, I have found that final agreement was not reached; and therefore it was not an unfair labor practice for the District Director to refuse to execute the agreement.

The most that the General Counsel proved was that some members of the union bargaining team misinterpreted certain words and actions of the management team. In particular, they misunderstood the action of writing up and initialling off on each item as agreement was reached on it. This new process was suggested by the Assistant Counsel of NTEU and acquiesced in by the management team. The process worked well; and all parties were pleased with it. It eliminated the need for each side to keep bargaining notes. And it also eliminated the chance of the parties later disagreeing as to the language actually agreed upon. But by initialling off on an item the management team did not intend, and never said, that this meant that they were thereby binding the agency. The management team made clear, at the outset of the bargaining session, that it had authority only to reach a tentative agreement at the bargaining table. It never receded from this statement.

The problem the union bargaining team had with understanding what the management team was saying may have been caused by the fact that the union team was, admittedly, a boisterous group of individuals, given to a lot of argument, with a lot of voices apparently being heard at one time. See finding 12(b), above. I found nothing in the credited record to suggest that any misunderstanding on the part of the union team was induced by words or actions of the management team, as is argued. See C.P. Br. 18, 20 and 41.

And I find significant the fact that the NTEU Assistant Counsel, after the three-hour bargaining session concluded, had "grave concerns" about the finality of the agreement reached insofar as the District Director was concerned. See finding 13, above. His astuteness proved to be correct -- there was no final agreement.

II. It has been demonstrated, by a preponderance of the evidence, that Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when, on February 14, 1985, it failed to send representatives to the bargaining table with authority to commit it to an agreement.

It is not disputed that this management obligation is included in the duty of parties to bargain in good faith, as required by Section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute, and not to interfere with the statutory rights of employees, as required by Section 7116(a)(1). See National Treasury Employees Union, 13 FLRA 554, 556.

What Respondent argues is that this was not a specific act with which it was charged and "would be prejudicial to Respondent and would deny Respondent due process of law [to now rely on this act as constituting a statutory violation] as Respondent was not put on notice that this was a charge in the case" (R. Br. 24). Respondent's defense would apparently have been to show that "the Charging Party knew of Respondent's past practice in this area, knew of this limited authority of [its negotiators], yet acquiesced in this practice by negotiating with them" (R. Br. 25).

Under similar circumstances, the Authority has rejected arguments of a respondent that it was denied the opportunity to present a proper defense, if the matter was fully litigated at the hearing. See Social Security Administration, 16 FLRA 56, fn. 1.

I believe the matter was fully litigated here. It was shown that the President of Chapter 53 was aware that Respondent was sending representatives to the bargaining table who were not fully authorized to commit it to an argument. See finding 11, above. And Respondent had a full opportunity to show that the union team, on February 14, 1985, acquiesced in the practice. Counsel for Respondent was advised, in the opening statement of the NTEU Assistant Counsel, that he was raising this matter as an issue. See TR. I. 20. Respondent thereafter called, as witnesses, both management representatives who were present at the February 14 bargaining table. The management representatives testified that negotiations continued even after it was made clear to the union team that the management team had no authority to bind the agency. See findings 12 and 13, above. From these facts Respondent argues that the union team "acquiesced" in Respondent's sending unauthorized-to-bind representatives to the bargaining table (R. Br. 20). It is unlikely that Respondent could have proved more, had it received earlier notice of this act as a violation.

Respondent did not prove union acquiescence, however. Respondent's own witnesses testified that the union team was "unhappy" about the situation. See finding 12(c) and TR. II. 130 and also 123 and 133. The union team had had to go through a difficult, lengthy process in getting management to the bargaining table over the matter on the table on February 14. See finding 6, above. And the NTEU Assistant Counsel, who is based in Washington, D.C. and does not normally participate in local negotiations, was present to assist in those local negotiations. Under these circumstances, unhappy though it was, the union team proceeded with negotiations. But I cannot conclude from this set of circumstances that it truly acquiesced in bargaining with management representatives who could not commit the agency. When a union waives a statutory right such as the right to face a management representative at the bargaining table who is authorized to commit the agency, it must so appear more clearly and unmistakably than it does in this case. See, e.g., Harry S. Truman Memorial Veterans Hospital, Columbia, Missouri, 17 FLRA 408, 411 and Internal Revenue Service Service (District, Region National Office Units), 16 FLRA 904, 922-923.

III. As a remedy the General Counsel and the Charging Party propose, inter alia, that Respondent execute and fully implement the agreement reached at the bargaining table on February 14, 1985. See C.P. Exh. 1 and G.C. Exh. 8. I do not consider this to be appropriate, since I have found that Respondent did not intend for its negotiators to enter into a binding agreement. Furthermore, I conclude that the objections raised by the Assistant District Director to the agreement reached at the bargaining table are not frivolous ones. See finding 14, above.

Under all the circumstances, I believe a more appropriate order would be one requiring Respondent, upon request by NTEU, to bargain promptly and to send representatives to the bargaining table who are fully authorized to commit it to an agreement.

A cease-and-desist and a posting order is also deemed to be appropriate.

IV. Respondent continues to raise objections to the fact that the NTEU Assistant Counsel was allowed to participate in this proceeding as a witness and also as a counsel for NTEU. See R. Br. 14-15.

As stated at the hearing, I do not consider this practice to be a desirable one. See TR. I. 9-12. One undesirable feature is that credibility as a witness may suffer when the witness also assumes the role of advocate. Nevertheless, I allowed that NTEU Assistant Counsel to be the lead-off witness; and he did not attempt to take the stand as a rebuttal witness. Thus, NTEU gained no perceptible trial advantage from this procedure. The one possible advantage NTEU did gain was saving money by having its Assistant Counsel assume dual roles. In my view, reducing the cost to parties of administrative proceedings is a matter which is appropriately weighed in the circumstances such as this.

Since the credibility issues in this case have been resolved in favor of Respondent, it has no cause for further relief as to this matter.

In view of the above conclusions, other issues raised by the parties need not be resolved.

Ultimate Findings and Recommended Order

1. The General Counsel has not established, by a preponderance of the evidence, that Respondent committed the violative act named in paragraphs 8 and 9 of the complaint.

2. The General Counsel has established that Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, as alleged in paragraphs 10 and 11 of the complaint by failing to send representatives to the bargaining table, an February 14, 1985, who were fully authorized to commit it to an agreement.

Pursuant to Section 7118 of the Statute, and 5 CFR 2423.29, it is hereby ORDERED that:

1. Internal Revenue Service, Brooklyn District shall cease and desist from:

(a) Failing to bargain in good faith by refusing and failing to authorize a designated agency representative to negotiate fully upon proper demand by the National Treasury Employees Union and enter into a final and binding agreement, subject only to review by the Respondent's National Office for legality and negotiability.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfere with, restrain or coerce any employee in the exercise of rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Internal Revenue Service, Brooklyn District shall take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon proper demand by the National Treasury Employees Union for bargaining, promptly send a designated agency representative to negotiate fully and enter into a final and binding agreement, subject only to review by the Respondent's National Office for legality and negotiability, as to the relocation of the Group 1117 employees, Examination Division, Brooklyn District, Mineola, New York.

(b) Post in all offices and posts of duty of the Internal Revenue Service, Brooklyn District, copies of the Notice of All Employees, attached hereto as Appendix A, on forms to be furnished by the Regional Director, Region II, Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the District Director, Brooklyn District, and shall be posted and maintained by him for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to bargaining unit employees are customarily posted. The District Director shall take all reasonable steps to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region II, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing within 30 calendar days from the date of this order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DIGEST NOTES

The activity's conduct in making changes in the shift and rotation schedules of unit employees, during the pendency of a question concerning representation was not violative of § 7116(a)(1) and (5). The changes involved the exercise of management's § 7106(b)(1) rights and were necessary for the agency to perform its mission; that is, the changes were consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency. The agency is engaged in law enforcement activities. The changes were deemed necessary "to permit the [activity] to effectively police the border and to perform its duties most effectively."

The Authority adopted the Judge's findings and held that the activity did not refuse to negotiate on procedures to be observed in implementing changes and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such changes. The activity's changes in shift and rotation schedules did not necessitate bargaining because the record evidence indicated that a grievance was filed and processed relating to the first change, therefore, processing the same issue as an unfair labor practice is prevented by § 7116(d). As to the second change in shift and rotation schedules, the union never requested bargaining after the activity notified it of the change.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which provides that "all negotiations time, including travel to and from meetings, will be excludable for AUO [Administratively Uncontrollable Overtime] purposes," is not inconsistent with the provisions of 5 CFR § 550.151-550.164. Pursuant to these OPM regulations, the agency is given the discretion to determine the specific procedures by which computations as to appropriate rates of premium pay for AUO will be made. There is nothing in the OPM regulations cited which would preclude the agency from exercising its discretion regarding AUO computation by negotiations. Further, the agency's assertion that the proposed exclusion is nonnegotiable because it is not included within the specific exclusions, for AUO computation purposes, of 5 CFR § 550.162 was without merit. The provisions of 5 CFR § 550.162 directly concern the actual payment of premium pay when employees are on temporary assignments and leave with pay. They do not concern the determination of future eligibility for, and appropriate rates of, such pay. The agency also, did not show nor was it apparent that the proposal would necessarily result in an excess of payments in violation of 5 CFR § 550.152.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

A proposal which provides that "all negotiations time, including travel to and from meetings, will be excludable for AUO [Administratively Uncontrollable Overtime] purposes," is not inconsistent with an agency regulation for which there is a compelling need. The agency argued that the union's proposal would make payroll administration inefficient and ineffective. The Authority found that the agency failed to demonstrate how the addition of the union's proposed exclusion to the agency's already existing list of exclusions would render payroll administration inefficient or ineffective. The agency's argument that its regulation is necessary to the maintenance of merit system principles, that is, assure equal payment of overtime within its various bureaus, was also rejected. The agency failed to show that the regulation is essential, as opposed to helpful or desirable, in the achievement of its objective; that the procedures set forth in the regulation were the only means of achieving its objective; and that the regulation implements the principle of equal pay for work of equal value. Finally, there is nothing in either the law or the implementing OPM regulations governing premium pay for AUO which mandates that the discretion allowed agencies with respect to the administration of AUO must be sole and exclusive. The agency's regulation which embodies the exercise of that discretion does not constitute, in and of itself, the nondiscretionary implementation of a mandate to the agency under law or other outside authority.

A proposal which provides that "all negotiations time, including travel to and from meetings, will be excludable for AUO [Administratively Uncontrollable Overtime] purposes," is not inconsistent with § 7131(a). Section 7131(a) addresses entitlement to official time by employees who are representing a union in the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement. The union's proposal addresses how time spent in such negotiations will be treated for purposes of determining eligibility for, and the appropriate rate of, premium pay in the future. The proposal does not relate to actual compensation for time spent in contract negotiations. It concerns a subject which is separate and distinct for that covered by § 7131(a) and does not conflict with that provision.

DIGEST NOTES

The grievance involved a request by three union members for administrative leave to attend a training seminar for union officers. The activity denied the full request, granting each employee 24 hours. The activity maintained that certain sessions of the seminar involved matters of internal union business and that such training was not training for which administrative leave can be granted, and that § 7131(b) provides that such activity must be performed during the time the employee is in a nonduty status. The arbitrator ruled that § 7131(b) does not require that training of union members or officers in the proper conduct of the internal business of the union must be performed when the employees are in a nonduty status. The arbitrator therefore, sustained the grievance.

In its exception to the arbitrator's award the agency asserted that the arbitrator's ruling that § 7131(b) does not require that training of union members or officers in the proper conduct of the internal union business must be performed when the employees are in a nonduty status, was deficient and contrary to § 7131(b). The Authority held that the Statute requires that "any activities" by an employee relating to internal union business must be on nonduty time. "Any activities" must encompass training in the proper conduct of the internal business of a union, consequently, under the express terms of the Statute, such training must be performed when any employee is in a nonduty status. Since administrative leave constitutes an excused absence without charge to leave, an employee is not in a "nonduty status" within the meaning of § 7131(b) when the employee is on administrative leave. The Authority found the award deficient because the arbitrator misinterpreted and misapplied § 7131(b). The award was modified to assure that it was consistent with the Statute.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which requires an agency to add the time spent donating blood and traveling to the donation site to the four hours of excused absence allowed employees who donate blood, is not inconsistent with tne agency's right to assign work. The Authority found that the union's intent was that the agency could deny permission for employees to donate blood when the time necessary for such donation would interfere with the agency's work. Thus, the provision would not restrict the agency's right to deny an employees request when the agency needed the employee to perform work.

A proposal which requires an agency to add the time spent donating blood and traveling to the donation site to the four hours of excused absence allowed employees who donate blood, is not inconsistent with an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists under § 7117(a)(2). Although the agency established that the provision conflicted with its regulation, it failed to show that the regulation was "essential" or "necessary" and failed to support its assertion that the provision would raise costs to the agency by increasing the amount of time for excused absence for blood donation. The agency offered only generalized and conclusionary reasoning which was disputed by the union.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority held, contrary to the Judge, that the agency's conduct in questioning an employee about his protected activity, during an interview for a bargaining unit position, reasonably tended to interfere with the employee's rights under the Statute by communicating that time spent engaging in protected activity could adversely affect his chance for future job selection. The questions were asked of this labor organization representative during an employment interview. The questions concerned his position in the union, how may hours he spends in activities on behalf of the union, and how he would resolve hypothetical conflicts between work and his protected activities on behalf of the union. The Authority found that the context of the questioning established a connection between the protected activity and the employee's chance to be selected for the position.

In this consolidated case the Authority adopted the Judge's conclusion in Case No. 57-CA-50257, absent exceptions by the parties, that the agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) by refusing to bargain over a change in the starting and quitting times of a bargaining unit employee.

DIGEST NOTES

A grievance was filed challenging the agency's determination to contract out as violative of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The arbitrator found the grievance arbitrable, but denied the grievance on the merits. In its exception the agency contended that by finding the grievance to be arbitrable, the award is contrary to the agency's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to make determinations with respect to contracting out. The Authority found that the grievance sought to enforce through grievance and arbitration a provision of the parties' agreement that denies the authority of the agency to make contracting out determinations under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The provision expressly prohibited the agency from contracting out when "the regular staff" possesses the required specialized skills or knowledge or can obtain the required skills or knowledge through normal employment procedures. Although law or regulation may place limitations on management's discretion, the Statute precludes the negotiation of contractual limitations on management's right to contract out. The Authority concluded that the grievance was precluded by § 7106 from grievance and arbitration and set aside the award.

DIGEST NOTES

A grievance was submitted to arbitration protesting the activity's denial of retreat rights to the grievant (from a GS-7 position) to a GS-5 position. The activity denied the grievant retreat rights under FPM Chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b because it determined that the GS-5 position was not a position through which the grievant had been promoted; and that the GS-5 position was not substantially the same as any such position because it was not at the same grade level of any position from which or through which the grievant had been promoted. The arbitrator concluded that the intention of the FPM is to allow retreat to any entry level position in the situation where the employee had been appointed at the higher-grade level of a position series because of the employee's experience and where the duties of the position at the different grade levels are essentially the same. The arbitrator ruled that the grievant was entitled to have retreated to the GS-5 position, sustained the grievance and awarded the grievant backpay.

In its exception to the arbitrator's award the activity asserted that the award was deficient as contrary to FPM chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b. The activity asserted that the retreat rights provided by the regulation are narrow and specific and that the arbitrator improperly granted the grievant retreat rights to a GS-5 position which is not "substantially the same" as the position from which the grievant had been promoted. The Authority concluded that the award was deficient by granting the grievant retreat rights to the GS-5 position because the position was not one from which the grievant was promoted or a position essentially identical to or substantially the same as a position from which the grievant was promoted. The award is contrary to 5 CFR part 351, subpart G and FPM chapter 351 subchapter 4-3b. The Authority found that an employee is not promoted through the entry level position when the employee is appointed at a higher grade level. A position will be found to be substantially the same as a position from which an employee was promoted only when the positions are sufficiently alike so that they would be in the same competitive level. Under the cited regulations, the grievant had no right to retreat because the positions are not in the same competitive level since they are not at the same grade level.

A proposal which would set up a computational scheme for administratively uncontrollable overtime (AUO), which is different from the agency's scheme, does not conflict with 5 CFR § 550.151-550.164. The Authority found that neither the governing statute or the OPM regulations, either literally or as judicially interpreted requires absolute equity between Executive agencies or even between similarly situated employees within the agency. Rather, law and regulations leave agencies with discretion to decide how to arrive at individual AUO entitlements. The agency proffered no persuasive arguments that either the statutory or regulatory grants of discretion are limited so as to bar bargaining over the methods of computing AUO entitlements. (proposal 1)

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

A proposal which would set up a computational scheme for administratively uncontrollable overtime (AUO), which is different from the agency's scheme, is not an unauthorized attempt to bargain over rates of pay. It merely concerns the computation of AUO within the specific constraints set by law and implementing Government-wide regulations. The proposal is negotiable inasmuch as, the agency does not suggest that the proposal is inconsistent with regulatory guidelines nor does it assert that the proposal is an inherently inaccurate indicator of future uncontrollable overtime. The Authority further held that a portion of the proposal requiring recertification of employees at the same percentage of AUO for which they were certified prior to their detail, was negotiable, where the agency did not allege nor was it apparent the the proposal was nonnegotiable. (proposal 1)

A union proposal concerning the computation of administratively uncontrollable overtime does not conflict with an agency regulation for which there is a compelling need. The agency raised and the Authority rejected all of the agency's compelling need arguments in United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, 23 FLRA No. 11 (1986). (proposal 1)

A proposal which prevents an agency from assigning certain employees to details which would render them ineligible for AUO payments in nonnegotiable. The proposal conflicts with the agency's right to assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) because it would prevent the assignment of specified employees to certain types of details. Additionally, the detailing of employees in this case involved a change in work which is assigned to those employees. Therefore, management would also be prevented from assigning work for which AUO pay is not authorized. The provision is inconsistent with management's right, under § 7106(a)(2)(B), because if specifically prevents the agency from requiring employees to perform certain duties.

DIGEST NOTES

A union proposal stating opposition to an agency requirement for motorcycle rider training concerns a condition of employment. The Authority held that completion of the proposed motorcycle safety course is a prerequisite to the Agency's issuance of a motorcycle parking decal without which an employee would be denied access to the installation. The proposal concerned a condition of employment "because a nexus exists between the penalty imposed for failure to complete the training, i.e., the employee cannot park or drive on the installation without a decal, and the employee's job."

A union proposal stating opposition to an agency requirement for motorcycle rider training interferes with the agency's right to determine internal security practices. The explicit language of the proposal opposed any requirement of motorcycle rider training. The agency's right to determine internal security practices includes the right to determine policies and actions which are part of its plan to secure or safeguard its personnel and property. The proposal would conflict with a preventive safety measure taken by the agency to guard against harm to its property and personnel, hence, it would directly interfere with the agency's § 7106(a)(1) rights and place a substantive limitation on its decision as to whether and the circumstances under which a motorcycle decal granting the privilege of driving on the premises will be issued.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority based on exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the General Counsel and the American Federation of Government Employees, National Border Patrol Council, AFL-CIO, Local 2455 (the Union). An opposition to these exceptions was filed by the Respondent. The complaint, as amended, basically alleged two things: the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by failing to notify the Union and refusing to bargain over the procedures to be observed in implementing revisions in shift and rotation schedules and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such changes; and the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by refusing to maintain the existing shift and rotation schedules to the maximum extent possible during the pendency of a question concerning representation (QCR).

II. Background

The facts are fully set out in the Judge's Decision. Briefly, they indicate that during the time the events in this case occurred, a question was pending concerning representation of, among others, employees located at the Respondent's Laredo Station.

In April 1983, the Union learned that the Respondent was planning a change in the shift and rotation schedules for employees of the Laredo Station. The Union filed a grievance based on management's failure to provide it with timely notice of the change and allow it to present its views on the matter. The parties met, also in April, at which time various elements of the proposed change were discussed. The Union then requested bargaining, which request was denied, and the new schedule was implemented in May. Another shift and rotation change was implemented the following September. The Union received notification prior to this change but did not request bargaining.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge recommended dismissal of the amended complaint in its entirety. As to the failure to maintain existing conditions of employment during the QCR, the Judge cited the Authority's decision in United States Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, 9 FLRA 253 (1982), in which we determined that agency management is required to maintain existing conditions of employment, to the maximum extent possible, during the pendency of a QCR unless changes in those conditions of employment are required consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, on appeal, reversed certain of the Authority's unfair labor practice findings on the basis that the particular changes in that case involved the exercise of management's rights under the Statute, but stated that its decision "should not be read as invalidating the rule." United States Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service v. FLRA, 727 F.2d 481, 489 (5th Cir. 1984). Here, the Judge applied this rule to the particular circumstances of the case and found that the changes in shift and rotation schedules were required consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency and, also, were matters covered by section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute.[1] The Judge concluded, therefore, that there was no obligation to bargain over the substance of the changes. As to the other allegation of the complaint involving a refusal to bargain over procedures and appropriate arrangements of changes in the shift and rotation schedules, the Judge found that section 7116(d) of the Statute[2] barred processing of the unfair labor practice allegation concerning one of the changes and that the Union had failed to request bargaining over the other change.

---

[1] Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute provides:

> § 7106. Management rights
> (b) Nothing in this section shall preclude any agency and any labor organization from negotiating--

IV. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel excepted to a number of findings and conclusions of the Judge, specifically, the following: that the April meeting between the Respondent and the Union was a grievance meeting; that the grievance covered the May shift and rotation schedule changes; that the Union was given timely notice of the September change; and that section 7116(d) of the Statute bars processing of the unfair labor practice allegation concerning the May shift and rotation schedule changes. Rather, the General Counsel argues that the Respondent unlawfully refused to bargain over the impact and implementation of the May and September shift changes. Further, the General Counsel asserts that the changes were not consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency so that their implementation during the pendency of a QCR violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

The Union excepted to the Judge's finding that the Union was given reasonable notice of the changes, arguing that the Respondent breached the parties' contractual requirement that at least 10 days notice be given. The Union

> (1) at the election of the agency, on the numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to any organizational subdivision, work project, or tour of duty, or on the technology, methods, and means of performing work[.]

[2] Section 7116(d) of the Statute provides, in relevant part:

> [I]ssues which can be raised under a grievance procedure may, in the discretion of the aggrieved party, be raised under the grievance procedure or as an unfair labor practice under this section, but not under both procedures.

also argued that the subject of shift changes was within the duty to bargain. Finally, the Union expressed its disagreement with the Court's decision in Immigration and Naturalization Service v. FLRA.

The Respondent generally opposed the exceptions of the General Counsel and the Union. The Respondent also made certain arguments it wished the Authority to consider in the event the Judge's findings and conclusions were reversed.

V. Analysis

We find, as did the Judge, that the changes in the shift and rotation schedules which involved the exercise of management's section 7106(b)(1) rights were necessary for the Respondent to perform its mission; that is, the changes were consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency. As noted by the Judge in his Decision, the Respondent is engaged in law enforcement activities. The changes made were deemed necessary "to permit the Laredo Station to effectively police the border and to perform its duties most effectively." Therefore, the Respondent's conduct in making these particular changes during the pendency of a question concerning representation was not violative of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

We also adopt the Judge's finding that no violation of the Statute occurred with respect to the Respondent's alleged failure to bargain over the procedures to be observed in implementing the changes as well as on appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such changes. As to the change in shift and rotation schedules that were implemented in May, we find that section 7116(d) of the Statute bars processing of this portion of the complaint. Record evidence indicates that a grievance was filed and processed with regard to this change. Therefore, the Union selected the procedure it wished to pursue and processing of the same issue as an unfair labor practice is precluded.3/

3/ Compare Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 19 FLRA No. 17 (1985) and Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons, Federal Correctional Institution, Butner, North Carolina, 18 FLRA No. 100 (1985).

Finally, as to the change in shift and rotation schedules implemented in September, we find, as did the Judge, that the Union never requested bargaining after having received notice of the change. Therefore, the Respondent did not unlawfully refuse to bargain. U.S. Department of Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Philadelphia Service Center, 16 FLRA 749 (1984); General Services Administration, 15 FLRA 22 (1984).

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision and the entire record in this case, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order. The Authority therefore concludes that the complaint must be dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq., 92 Stat. 1191, (hereinafter referred to as the Statute), and the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA), 5 C.F.R. Chapter XIV, § 2410, et seq.

An unfair labor practice charge was filed on July 7, 1983 by Local 2455 American Federation of Government Employees, National Border Patrol Council, AFL-CIO[1] alleging that U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, U.S. Border Patrol (hereinafter called Respondent or Border Patrol) violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Based upon the foregoing on October 6, 1983 the General Counsel of the FLRA, by the Director of Region 6, issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing. Respondent filed a timely Answer denying that it had violated the Statute.

A hearing was held before the undersigned in Laredo, Texas. Respondent, Charging Party and General Counsel of the FLRA were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence and to argue orally. Post hearing briefs were filed and have been fully considered.

Based upon the entire record in this matter,[2] my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

At all times material the Council has been the exclusive collective bargaining representative for a unit of Respondent's employees that includes those assigned to the Laredo Border Patrol Station. The Council and the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service (hereinafter called INS) were parties to a collective bargaining agreement, covering the aforedescribed unit, which expired on September 30, 1978. On January 19, 1978 the International Brotherhood of Police Officers (IBPO) filed a representation petition with the FLRA and an election was conducted. The Council filed timely objections and the FLRA issued a decision in which the objections were sustained and a second election ordered. The FLRA was sustained by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. United States Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, 9 FLRA 253 (1982) affirm'd sub nom. United States Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service v. FLRA, 727 F.2d 481 (5th Cir., March 19, 1984). During the period the above described representation case was pending, the Council continued to represent Respondent's employees and the parties continued to give effect and operate under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement.

The INS is divided into regions, one of which is the Southern Region, which are in turn divided into sectors which are in turn divided into stations. One of the sectors of the Southern Region is the Laredo Sector which contains the Laredo Station, among other stations. Approximately sixty-seven bargaining unit employees were employed at the Laredo Station during 1983. At all material times, William Selzer held the position of Chief Patrol Agent (CPA) of the Laredo Sector and Miguel Vallina occupied the position of Assistant Chief Patrol Agent (ACPA). Joe Trevino held the position of Patrol Agent In Charge (PAIC) of the Laredo Station and James Fulgham was the Assistant Patrol Agent In Charge (APAIC).

[1] American Federation of Government Employees will hereinafter be referred to as AFGE, and the National Border Patrol Council will hereinafter be referred to as the Council.

[2] The General Counsel of the FLRA's unopposed Motion to Correct the Official Transcript is hereby granted.

The Council had a president and five vice-presidents. The vice-presidents had responsibility at the regional level. Below the regional level, there are local presidents that had responsibility at the sector level. At all times material herein, Benito Lopez was the President of AFGE Local 2455, which covers the Laredo Sector.

On April 20, 1983 AFGE Local 2455 President Lopez asked PAIC Trevino whether rumors which were circulating concerning a change in the shift schedules were accurate. Trevino stated that on May 1, 1983 the shifts would in fact be rolled back two hours.3/ Lopez noted that the union had not received prior official notice of the proposed change and that there was insufficient time prior to the implementation date of May 1 for the union to submit proposals. Trevino stated that the change would go into effect on May 1, 1983.

On April 21, 1983 AFGE Local 2455 filed a grievance under the collective bargaining agreement concerning management's failure to provide the union with timely written notice of the proposed changes and to allow the union to present its views on the matter.4/ AFGE Local 2455's grievance stated:

> In accordance with Article 32-Grievance Procedure in the negotiated agreement between the American Federation of Government Employees National Border Patrol Council and the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, I hereby submit this formal grievance on behalf of all union members and all Border Patrol Agents in the Laredo Station.

3/ At that time, the four established shifts were as follows: 8:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m., 4:00 p.m. - 12:00 a.m., 12:00 a.m. - 8:00 a.m., and a variable shift from 6:00 p.m. - 2:00 p.m.

4/ Article 36 of the collective bargaining agreement provides that the union will be provided 30 calendar days to present its views on proposed changes. In a memorandum of understanding between the Council and INS, dated June 10, 1977, the parties agreed that the local union would be allowed 15 days to submit proposals on changes made at the district and sector levels.

> On April 20, 1983 PAIC Joe Trevino, of the Laredo Station, advised me, upon my request, that all Border Patrol Agents in the Laredo Station would be divided into eight (8) units or squads headed by one supervisor. PAIC Trevino also advised me that all the shifts would be rolled back two (2) hours. The new Shifts would be from 6A-2P, 2P-10P, 10P-6A, 9P-5A. Implementation, as stated by PAIC Trevino, would be on May 1, 1983.
> PAIC Joe Trevino has violated Article 3 section G of the negotiated agreement between the American Federation of Government Employees National Border Patrol Council and the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service. Violations are that PAIC Trevino failed to notify in writing, The Union, of proposed changes in personnel policies, practices, or working conditions and that PAIC Trevino violated the same article by not allowing The Union, to present its views to the proposed change or its impact.

On April 22, 1983 Trevino and ACPA Vallina informed Lopez that they had reconsidered their decision to implement the change on May 1, 1983, and that there would be a meeting between management and the union on April 29, 1983, at 1 p.m. in Vallina's office to discuss the matter. During the afternoon of April 22, 1983, CPA Selzer gave the same information to Lopez. In addition, Selzer informed Lopez that since management did not intend to implement the change on May 1, he considered the grievance to be moot and did not intend to issue a written response to the grievance as is required by Article 32, Section E of the contract.[5]

On April 29, 1983 a meeting was held between Respondent and AFGE Local 2455, as scheduled. Present for AFGE Local 2455 were Lopez, AFGE Local 2455 Treasurer Joe Bradley, and Conrado Villanueva. Present for Respondent were Vallina, Trevino, and Fulgham. This was a meeting held to discuss the grievance pursuant to provisions of Article 32E, Step II of the collective bargaining agreement. Vallina stated that Respondent intended to begin operating on an eight shift system as opposed to the four shift operation that existed at the time. Vallina further stated that employees would be selected for the various shifts under a draft system comparable to that used in professional football. AFGE Local 2455 requested more specific details concerning the draft system and the implementation of the change, but Respondent responded that the details of the plan had not yet been finalized. At the meeting on April 29, 1983 AFGE Local 2455 was not advised of the details such as the hours of the various shifts, the exact way the draft would work and the names of employees assigned to these shifts. At the close of the meeting, the Union requested a written copy of the proposed shift change. Vallina stated that he would relay this request to Selzer. Later, Vallina informed Lopez that the Selzer had denied the request for a written copy without specifying any reason for the denial.

[5] Lopez' undenied testimony on this point was that he concurred with Chief Selzer and considered the grievance dropped. Respondent did not call Chief Selzer as a witness at the hearing. Accordingly, Lopez' testimony as to this conversation is fully credited.

By letter dated May 9, 1983 AFGE Local 2455 set forth examples of adverse impact of the changes and requested to bargain concerning the proposed changes. By letter dated May 16, 1983 Selzer denied the bargaining request and stated the new shifts would be implemented. The new shift schedule was implemented on May 29, 1983.

A few days before the implementation date, Lopez found a copy of the new schedule marked "union" and a blank scheduling form in his mailbox. Lopez did not know who had put them there. According to the schedule, the hours of the shifts in the actual order of rotation were as follows: 12:00 a.m.-8:00a.m., 5:00 p.m.-1:00 a.m., 10:00 p.m.-6:00 a.m., 4:00 p.m.-12:00 a.m., 2:00 p.m.-10:00 p.m., 6:00 a.m.-2:00 p.m. (signcutting),[6] 6:00 a.m.-2:00 p.m. (regular day shift), and 8:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m.

Because border patrol agents would rotate to a new shift every two weeks, under this new shift and rotation schedule agents were assigned to work ten weeks of consecutive night shifts. Under the prior four-shift system, employees worked six weeks of consecutive night shifts. The change to the eight-shift system might reasonably foreseeably have an adverse impact upon the health and personal situations of bargaining unit employees. Specifically, it might reasonably be anticipated that the increase in night shift assignments would cause employees to become fatigued and irritable, thereby decreasing their reaction time in critical situations and increasing their usage of sick leave. Further, the excessive night-shift work might reasonably create serious conflicts in employees' marital and family relationships. In addition, the reduced size of shifts might reasonably foreseeably cause hardships for employees who needed particular days off each week to attend college classes.[7] The new system might reasonably be foreseen to adversely affect employees who had been actively involved in religious, civic, and social functions.

[6] "Signcutting" involves searching outlying areas for signs or trails of illegal aliens and tracking them down.

[7] In this regard, the record established that the Respondent has, for years, encouraged employees to obtain college degrees and to otherwise further their education. Prior to the implementation of the eight-shift system, employees had no problems obtaining particular days off to attend college classes. However, after the change, there might foreseeably be an increased difficulty in obtaining requested days off; the burden was placed on these employees to find other agents who were willing to trade shifts and this might be more difficult under the new schedule and thus might interfere with the employees' ability to obtain the days off when classes were scheduled.

On or about August 27 or 28, 1983, Lopez found a copy of a routing slip dated August 26, 1983 in his mailbox which was addressed to all supervisors from APAIC Fulgham. The slip stated that effective September 4, 1983 the shift and rotation schedule would be further revised. Pursuant to this revision, the new shifts in the proper order of rotation were listed as follows: 11:00 p.m.-7:00 a.m., 3:00 p.m.-11:00p.m., 4:00 p.m.-12:00 a.m. or 5:00 p.m.-1:00 a.m., 7:00 a.m.-3:00 p.m., and 6:00 a.m.-2:00 p.m. (signcutting shift). Thus, this new five-shift schedule changed the former eight-shift schedule by eliminating the following three shifts: (1) 10:00 p.m.-6:00 a.m., (2) 2:00 p.m.-10:00 p.m., and (3) 6:00 a.m.-2:00 p.m. (regular day shift). Under this system, employees were assigned to work six weeks of consecutive night shifts and four weeks of day shifts. The new schedule was in fact implemented on September 4, 1983. Lopez testified that the slip had been put in his box sometime when he was on leave and that he did not discover it until on or about August 27 or 28, 1983. AFGE Local 2455 did not request to bargain and no bargaining occurred over the shift and rotation change that was implemented on September 4, 1983.

The record establishes that, prior to the May 29, 1983 and September 4, 1983 shift changes, Respondent had made changes and adjustments in shifts, including the establishment and removal of specific shifts (commando, train, etc.). However none of the previous changes or adjustments were of the magnitude nor so all affecting as the changes that are the subjects of the instant case.

The May 29, 1983 and September 4, 1983 shift changes were made by Respondent, pursuant to the best available intelligence, in order in its view, to intercept illegal aliens as effectively as possible.

Article 28 of the Collective bargaining agreement provides:

> ARTICLE 28 - Tours of Duty (Border Patrol Council)
> A. The parties to this agreement recognize that the Agency must, to carry out its mission, vary tours of duty. In the interest of good employee morale, it is agreed that changes in an employee's scheduled hours of duty shall be kept to the minimum necessary to accomplish the mission of the Agency.
> B. Assignment to tours of duty shall be posted five days in advance in the appropriate work area covering at least a two week period.
> C. Except in an emergency, the Agency agrees to schedule eight (8) hours between changes in shifts, and when practical will schedule more time between shifts.

D. Any employee may retain a carbon copy of his DJ-296 and/or Form I-50 if he so desires.

E. The Agency agrees that maximum effort will be made to assign consecutive days off duty.

F. The administrative workweek shall be seven consecutive days, Sunday through Saturday.

G. Breaks in working hours of more than one hour shall not normally be scheduled in any basic workday.

H. When practical, an employee shall be given 24 hours advance notice of individual shift changes. Exceptions to this provision may be made where there is mutual agreement between the employees and supervisors involved. Individuals involved in a change of tour should be notified of the reasons for the change.

I. Where mutually agreeable to all employees affected employees may trade shifts out of the normal rotation consistent with the needs of the Service.

Discussion and Conclusions of Law

General Counsel of the FLRA alleges that Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by implementing revisions and changes in shift and rotation schedules at the Laredo Border Patrol Station on May 29, 1983 and on September 4, 1983 without providing AFGE Local 2455 proper notice and without bargaining concerning the revisions and changes and without bargaining over the procedures to be observed in implementing the changes and appropriate arrangements for adversely affected employees.[8]

The General Counsel of FLRA recognizes that the establishment of a shift or tour of duty involves the "numbers, types and grades of employees or positions assigned to any organizational subdivision, work project or tour of duty" within the meaning of Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and is therefore negotiable only at the discretion of the agency. U.S. Customs Service, Region V, New Orleans, Louisiana, 9 FLRA 116 (1982). Thus it is recognized by the General Counsel of the FLRA that, absent more, the Border Patrol was not obliged to bargain concerning the substance of the substantial and far reaching shift changes made on May 29, 1983 and September 4, 1983.[9] General Counsel of the FLRA contends that Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by making unilateral changes in shift and rotation schedules of employees at the Laredo Station during the pending of a representation case, which changes were not "required consistent with the necessary functioning of the Agency." United States Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, 9 FLRA 253 (1982) enforcement denied sub nom. United States Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service v. FLRA, 727 F.2d 481 (5th Cir., March 19, 1984). In this case, involving the same parties as in the subject case, the FLRA held that during the pendency of the question concerning representation Respondent was obligated to maintain existing conditions of employment, except Respondent could make such changes as were required consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency. In that case the changes implemented concerned traffic check points and uniforms and the Administrative Law Judge concluded that the reasons for the changes were of long-standing origin and were merely desirable, rather than essential or necessary to the functioning of the agency, and further were made during the election period because management felt the election turmoil could weaken the union's response to the changes.[10] The Court of Appeals concluded that the changes made by the agency were management rights covered by Section 7106 of the Statute and that the pendency of the representation case did not negate management's right to make the changes.

[8] The Complaint and Notice of Hearing alleged the violations of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute with respect to the failure to bargain about the implementation and impact of the changes. The Complaint was amended at the hearing to allege that the Statute was also violated by Respondent's alleged refusal to bargain concerning the substance of the changes.

In the subject case I am constrained to follow the holdings of the FLRA[11] and in so doing I conclude that, in the subject case, the shift and schedule changes made by Respondent were "required consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency." In so concluding I rely on the facts that the Border Patrol is engaged law enforcement entrusted, inter alia, with intercepting illegal aliens attempting to cross our national borders.

[9] It is concluded that the shift changes made on May 29 and September 4, 1983 were so fundamental and basic that they more closely resemble the creation of a new shift than merely the changing the time an existing shift starts and ends. See U.S. Customs Service, Region V, New Orleans, Louisiana, supra. For example on May 29 when eightt shifts were substituted for four shifts it is difficult, if not impossible, to determine which of the eight shifts were new and which were the prior four with merely changed starting and finishing hours. It is noted, that such a distinction was recognized by the FLRA in U.S. Customs Service, Region V, New Orleans, Louisiana, supra.

[10] See United States Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, supra at 286.

[11] See also Immigration and Naturalization Service, 16 FLRA 80 (1984), Immigration Naturalization Service, 16 FLRA 88 (1984).

In the judgment of the Border Patrol the shift changes made in the subject case were perceived by Respondent as necessary in order to permit the Laredo Station to effectively police the border and to perform its duties most effectively. They were not just desirable changes, they were changes deemed necessary by Respondent's officials, based on the best intelligence available, to effectively stop the maximum number of illegal aliens. Thus, noting also the period of time during which the representation case was pending, it is concluded that the shift changes made on May 29 and September 4 were consistent with the necessary functioning of the Border Patrol as reasonably perceived by Respondent's officials. Further since the changes were, as discussed above, covered by Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, Respondent was not obligated to negotiate with the Council concerning the substance of the changes. Therefore Respondent's failure to bargain concerning the substance of the shift and schedule changes did not violate Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

Respondent defended its failure to negotiate concerning the substance of the scheduling changes on the grounds that the Council waived its right to negotiate concerning the schedule change by Article 28 of the collective bargaining agreement and that Section 7116(d) barred processing the complaint because a grievance was filed that allegedly covered the same issues. Because of the foregoing conclusions, I need not reach any conclusions with respect to these defenses.12/

12/ In the event the FLRA concludes my prior disposition of the issue of Respondent's alleged failure to bargain concerning the substance of the schedule changes, in an error, I would reject Respondent's contention that Article 28 of the collective bargaining agreement constituted a waiver by the Council of its rights to negotiate concerning the schedule change, but I would agree that Section 7116(d) of the Statute bars the finding of any violation with respect to the May 29, 1983 changes, but not with respect to the September 4, 1983 changes. The conclusions with respect to the contract waiver is based on the FLRA's decisions holding that the waiver of a statutory right must be "a clear and unmistakable waiver of bargaining rights." Cf. Immigration and Naturalization Service, 10 FLRA 202 (1982); Internal Revenue Service, 10 FLRA 182 (1982). Article 28 of the collective bargaining agreement, although recognizing that the Border Patrol will have to, on occasion, vary and change schedules, does not constitute a clear and unmistakable waiver of any rights the Council might have to bargain about such schedule changes.

Section 7116(d) of the Statute provides, in part, that "issues which can be raised under a grievance procedure may, in the discretion of the aggrieved party, be raised under the grievance procedure or as an unfair labor practice. . ., but not under both procedures." The grievance filed

Even though, as concluded above, Border Patrol was privileged, under Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, to refuse to bargain about the institution of the schedule changes, it nevertheless was obligated, pursuant to Section 7106(b)(2) and (3) of the Statute, to bargain over the impact and implementation of such changes. U.S. Customs Service, Region V, New Orleans, Louisiana, supra.

In the subject case, with respect to the May 29 changes, the Council raised the issue of these changes as part of the grievance and not only would that grievance reasonably have included the impact and implementation of the change, but at the April 29 meeting the Council specifically raised the adverse impact of the proposed changes. Accordingly it is concluded that, because the May 29 changes and their impact and implementation were issues raised in the grievance, Section 7116(d) of the Statute bars the finding of any unfair labor practice with respect to the issues raised in the grievance.

The General Counsel of the FLRA alleges, additionally, that Border Patrol failed and refused to bargain about the impact and implementation of the September 4 schedule changes. Respondent routed a notification of these changes to AFGE Local 2455 President Lopez. The routing slip was dated August 26, 1983 and Lopez' testimony as to when he actually received it is unclear; he apparently received it on August 27 or August 28, 1983.[13] Thus the notice was given and received some seven days before the anticipated changes. There is no showing that this notice was not given sufficiently in advance of the September 4 schedule changes so as to permit the union to request to bargain and to bargain about the impact and implementation of the changes. See Department of the Interior, U.S. Geological Survey, Conservation Division, Gulf of Mexico Region, Metairie, Louisiana, 9 FLRA 543 (1982). The Council, after the timely notification by the Local President Lopez on April 24, 1983 specifically raised the issue of the Laredo Station Border Patrol Agents being "divided into eight (8) units or squads headed by one supervisor". There was no explanation as to what these eight squads referred to except the eight new shifts. Although the record does not establish that Respondent advised AFGE Local 2455 about the eight new squads, the union could reasonably have learned about them in the same manner it learned about the change in shifts. Thus it would be found, if necessary, that the grievance did in fact, deal with the schedule changes effective May 29, 1983 and therefore Section 7116(d) of the Statute would require that no unfair labor practice can be found with respect to substance of the May 29, 1983 schedule changes.

13/ If Lopez did not receive the notification until after August 27 or 28 because he had been on leave, it was incumbent upon the union to designate someone to receive such notification and not just to await Lopez return.

was given, did not request to bargain about the September 4 changes[14] and accordingly I find Respondent did not refuse to bargain about the impact and implementation of the September 4, 1983 changes.[15]

In light of all of the foregoing I conclude that Respondent did not refuse to bargain with the Council concerning the May 29 and September 4, 1983 schedule changes or about the impact and implementation of the changes and therefore did not violate Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Accordingly, I recommend that the FLRA issue the following:

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 6-CA-30309 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Samuel A. Chaitovitz
SAMUEL A. CHAITOVITZ
Administrative Law Judge

Dated: February 20, 1985
Washington, DC

[14] Although the memorandum between the Council and INS provided for 15 days notice for changes at the local level, that was a contract provision and any breach of it should have been raised under the grievance procedure. The seven days notice that was given was sufficient notice under the Statute.

[15] In light of the foregoing conclusions I need not decide whether Article 28, Sections B-I of the contract constituted a waiver of the Council's right to bargain about the impact and implementation of schedule changes. If the FLRA were to determine that such a finding was necessary, I would conclude that these sections did not constitute a clear and unmistakable waiver of the Council's right to negotiate concerning the impact and implementation of major schedule changes; rather, these sections merely deal with the requirements when an individual employee's schedule is changed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the following Union proposal:

> All negotiations time, including travel to and from meetings, will be excludable for AUO purposes.

II. Background

This proposal arose in the context of ground rules for negotiations which were being conducted pursuant to an agreement between the parties in settlement of an unfair labor practice charge. AUO refers to "administratively uncontrollable overtime." Under the AUO concept, heads of agencies may, pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) at 5 C.F.R. § 550.151-550.164 and consistent with law,[1] authorize premium pay on an annual basis for an employee in a position for which the hours of duty cannot be controlled administratively and which requires substantial amounts of irregular, unscheduled overtime. In accordance with applicable regulations, AUO may be paid only if the amount involved would be less than the employee would be entitled to under regular overtime. Premium pay for AUO in the Agency is governed by a Department of Justice regulation, DOJ 1551.4A, which sets forth policies and procedures for the implementation of such payments within the Department. As relevant here, that regulation has established a system for the computation and payment of premium pay which consists of an ongoing, two-part process. Under the Agency's procedure, determinations of an employee's continuing eligibility for such pay and the rate appropriate are made during a 12 pay period interval referred to as the "computation period." The "computation period" ends 3 pay periods before the "eligibility period" for which the particular determination was made. The "eligibility period" is a 4 pay period interval during which an employee is compensated for AUO at the particular rate determined to be appropriate based on experience during the "computation period."

---

[1] 5 U.S.C. § 5545.

The proposal would exclude the days spent in the negotiations flowing from the settlement agreement from computations used to determine the "average" number of hours of AUO worked by employees representing the Union during the "computation period(s)" in which the negotiations occur. The proposal does not concern any payments or benefits for, or in connection with, such negotiations. Rather, it is solely concerned with minimizing or eliminating the future adverse economic impact on certain employees of spending time in connection with negotiations. In view of the regulatory restriction discussed above, the effect of the proposal would be to minimize the difference between the AUO and the amount an employee would receive if paid regular overtime.

III. Positions of the Parties

As a procedural matter the Agency contends, in essence, that the scope of the negotiations involved is strictly limited to the impact and implementation of assigning Border Patrol personnel to assist in the Cuban Refugee Program and that the proposal is beyond that limited scope. The Agency argues that this is particularly true in view of the existence of a question concerning representation (QCR) stemming from pending petitions for exclusive recognition (RO) and unit consolidation (UC). Substantively, the Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable because:

1. The proposal conflicts with a Government-wide rule or regulation, specifically the regulations issued by OPM which are found at 5 C.F.R. § 550.151-550.164;

2. The proposal is contrary to an Agency regulation, DOJ Order 1551.4A, for which there is a compelling need;

3. The proposal violates section 7131(a) of the Statute.

The Union disputes both the Agency's procedural contention that it has no obligation to bargain over the proposal and its substantive contentions.

IV. Analysis

A. Procedural Issue

The Authority has found that the negotiation of ground rules is an integral part of the collective bargaining process. Department of Health and Human Services, Region VII, Kansas City, Missouri, 14 FLRA 258 (1984); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, 15 FLRA 461 (1984) (Proposal 1). In the Authority's view, contrary to the Agency, the question of how an employee's participation in a particular set of negotiations will affect that employee's future eligibility for premium pay is appropriately within the scope of ground rules for those negotiations pursuant to the terms of the settlement agreement.[2] The Authority also rejects the Agency's contention that a UC petition raises a QCR. By definition a UC petition does not bring into question whether the existing exclusive representative will continue as such. It is limited to a determination of whether existing units will be consolidated, as specified in section 7112(d) of the Statute. Therefore, in view of the fact that the proposal relates to a subject which is appropriately encompassed within the scope of ground rules relating to the parties' negotiations, there is no merit in the Agency's position that the proposal is outside the scope of bargaining.

United States Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 727 F.2d 481 (5th Cir. 1984) for a discussion as to changes in conditions of employment during the pendancy of a QCR.

B. Substantive Issues

1. Proposal's Consistency with 5 C.F.R § 550.151-550.164

The Agency contends that 5 C.F.R. § 550.151-550.164 reserves to it the responsibility for authorizing and determining the appropriate rate of premium pay for AUO. The Authority finds that pursuant to the OPM regulations involved, the Agency is given the discretion to determine the specific procedures by which computations as to appropriate rates of premium pay for AUO will be made. It is well established that to the extent that an agency has discretion with respect to a matter affecting conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees and where the discretion is not intended to be sole and exclusive, the matter is within the duty to bargain. See, for example, National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 748 (1980). There is nothing in the OPM regulations cited which would preclude the Agency from exercising its discretion regarding AUO computation by negotiations.

Additionally, the Agency contends that the regulations set forth specific exclusions for AUO computation purposes and that because the exclusions proposed by Union are not among those specified by the OPM, proposal therefore conflicts with the regulation. The specific exclusions set forth in the OPM regulations are contained in 5 C.F.R. § 550.162. However, those provisions directly concern the actual payment of premium pay when employees are on temporary assignments and leave with pay. They do not concern the determination of future eligibility for, and appropriate rates of, such pay. As the regulatory provisions relied upon by the Agency concern not computation but actual payment of premium pay under AUO, the Agency's assertion that a conflict exists cannot be sustained.

Finally, the Agency contends that the proposal violates 5 C.F.R. § 550.152. That provision specifies that an agency may pay premium pay for AUO only if such pay would, over a period of time, be less than the premium pay to which the particular employee would otherwise be eligible if paid overtime pursuant to 5 U.S.C § 5542. According to the Agency, premium pay for AUO would exceed that to which the employees covered by the proposal would be entitled if overtime payments had been made pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5542, and, thus, the proposal would result in payments which exceed those permissible under the regulations. The Agency has not shown nor is it otherwise apparent that the proposal would necessarily result in excess payments in violation of 5 C.F.R. § 550.152. Moreover, the Union has specifically stated that in any instances where the operation of the exclusions proposed would result in excess payment the Agency could cease applying the exclusion. Noting particularly the Union's stated intent, which is not incompatible with the plain terms of the proposal, the Authority finds that the proposal is not inconsistent with the provisions of 5 C.F.R. § 550.152.[3]

2. Compelling Need for DOJ Order 1551.4A Under Section 7117(a)(2)

The Agency contends that there is a compelling need under section 2424.11(a),(b) and (c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations for its agency-wide regulation DOJ Order 1551.4A. However, the Agency has not demonstrated that DOJ Order 1551.4A meets the criteria for concluding that a compelling need exists for agency rules and regulations. Under section 2424.11(a), the Agency must demonstrate that its regulation is essential to the accomplishment of its mission in a manner consistent with the requirements of an effective and efficient government. While the Agency argues that the Union's proposal would make payroll administration inefficient and ineffective, the Authority notes that the record does not support this contention. DOJ Order 1551.4A, paragraph 11(c), provides for exclusion of days in certain circumstances, such as paid and unpaid leave, from the computation of weekly averages of AUO. The Agency has not demonstrated how the addition of another circumstance to an already existing list would render payroll administration inefficient or ineffective. Thus, the Agency has not established that the regulation cited is essential to the execution of its function. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2875 and Department of Commerce, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Marine Fisheries Service, Southeast Fisheries Center, Miami Laboratory, Florida, 5 FLRA 441 (1981) (Union Proposal 4).

[3] In view of these findings it is unnecessary to rule on whether 5 C.F.R. § 550.151-550.164 constitute Government-wide regulations within the meaning of the Statute.

The Agency further argues that DOJ Order 1551.4A is necessary to the maintenance of merit system principles, which is the compelling need criterion established by the Authority under section 2424.11(b) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.[4/] See, generally, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217 (1981). Specifically, it contends that the regulation is necessary to assure equal payment of overtime within the various bureaus of the Department of Justice which are subject to AUO payments. However, the Agency has failed to demonstrate that its regulation is essential, as opposed to helpful or desirable, in the achievement of the objective of providing equal pay for work of equal value. The Agency has not established that the procedures set forth in that regulation for the administration and implementation of premium pay for AUO are the only means of achieving that particular objective and, hence, has not established that the regulation is necessary to insure the maintenance of basic merit principles. Moreover, the Agency's argument

[4/] 5 U.S.C. § 2301(b)(3) provides:

§ 2301. Merit system principles

(b) Federal personnel management should be implemented consistent with the following merit system principles:

. . . .

(3) Equal pay should be provided for work of equal value, with appropriate consideration of both national and local rates paid by employers in the private sector, and appropriate incentives and recognition should be provided for excellence in performance.

that DOJ Order 1551.4A is a regulation which implements the principle of equal pay for work of equal value is not supported in the record. That regulation implements a system which is based on projections and prescribes the same payment for a range of average hours of AUO and, thus, is inherently inequitable. The Agency has not demonstrated that such a system constitutes an application of the concept of equal pay for work of equal value.

The Agency has not shown that the regulation implements a mandate of law or other outside authority which is essentially nondiscretionary, under section 2424.11(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. According to the Agency, DOJ Order 1551.4A implements 5 U.S.C. § 5545(c)(2) and 5 C.F.R. § 550.161. It characterizes this mandate as making the Agency head responsible for determining and reviewing AUO payments on a regular basis. As noted earlier, to the extent that an agency has discretion with respect to a matter affecting conditions of employment of its employees and such discretion is not intended to be sole and exclusive, the discretion is subject to negotiations with the representative. Contrary to the Agency's assertion, there is nothing in either the law or the implementing OPM regulations governing premium pay for AUO which mandates that the discretion allowed agencies with respect to administration of AUO must be sole and exclusive. Therefore, the Agency's regulation which embodies the exercise of that discretion does not constitute, in and of itself, the nondiscretionary implementation of a mandate to the Agency under law or other outside authority.

3. No Inconsistency with Section 7131(a)

The Agency's contention that the proposal is inconsistent with section 7131(a) of the Statute is similarly without merit. Section 7131(a) addresses entitlement to official time by employees who are representing an exclusive representative in the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement. The Union's proposal addresses how time spent in such negotiations will be treated for purposes of determining eligibility for, and the appropriate rate of, premium pay in the future. The proposal does not relate to actual compensation for time spent in contract negotiations. It concerns a subject which is separate and distinct from that covered by section 7131(a) of the Statute and does not conflict with that provision.

V. Conclusion

There is no merit in the Agency's procedural contention that the proposal is beyond the scope of negotiations.

Furthermore, the proposal does not conflict with 5 C.F.R. § 550.151-550.164 or with section 7131(a) of the Statute, nor is it contrary to an Agency regulation, DOJ Order 1551.4A, for which there is a compelling need. Therefore, the proposal is within the duty to bargain.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning the Union's proposal.[5]

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Ralph C. Barnhart filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case involved the request of three union members for an excused absence without charge to leave (commonly known as administrative leave) to attend a training seminar for union officers. Each individual had requested 40 hours of administrative leave, but was granted only 24 hours. A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration protesting the Activity's refusal to grant the full amount of the requests. Before the Arbitrator the Activity maintained that certain sessions of the training seminar involved matters of internal union business and that such training was not training for which administrative leave can be granted. Specifically, the Activity argued that under the provisions of section 7131(b) of the Statute, such training must be performed during the time the employee is in a nonduty status. The Arbitrator rejected the Activity's argument. He concluded instead that section 7131(b) does not require that training of union members or officers in the proper conduct of the internal business of the union must be performed when the employees are in a nonduty status. On this basis, he sustained the grievance, ruling that the requested leave should have been granted. Since no remedy was requested in the grievance, the Arbitrator stated that the only remedy available was "the bearing" his ruling may have on future requests for similar administrative leave.

III. EXCEPTION

The Agency contends that the award is deficient as contrary to section 7131(b) of the Statute.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority agrees with the Agency. The Statute requires that "any activities" by an employee relating to internal union business must be on nonduty time. Service Employees International Union, Local 556, AFL-CIO, 17 FLRA 862 (1985). Thus, contrary to the conclusion of the Arbitrator, we find that "any activities" must encompass training in the proper conduct of the internal business of a union. Consequently, under the express terms of the Statute, such training must be performed when an employee is in a nonduty status. Since administrative leave constitutes an excused absence without charge to leave, an employee is not in a "nonduty status" within the meaning of section 7131(b) when the employee is on administrative leave. See generally Long Beach Naval Shipyard, Long Beach, California and International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 174, AFL-CIO, 7 FLRA 362 (1981). In sustaining the grievance, the Arbitrator misinterpreted and misapplied section 7131(b) of the Statute, and therefore the award is deficient and must be modified to assure that it is consistent with the Statute.

The Arbitrator did not address the extent to which the training actually related to internal union business within the meaning of section 7131(b). Accordingly, we do not reach that issue and our modification of the award is intended to recognize that the grievance may be sustained only insofar as the training did not relate to internal union business.

V. DECISION

For the reasons stated above, the award is modified to provide as follows:

> The grievance is sustained only insofar as the training for which leave was requested and denied did not pertain to the proper conduct of the internal affairs of the Union.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review comes before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and presents issues concerning the negotiability of a single provision of an agreement disapproved by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute.

II. Provision

Article 22, Section 2--

> Employees who volunteer as blood donors will normally be authorized four hours of excused absence, insofar as scheduling of donors will allow, for recuperation following blood donation. In unusual cases, i.e. the unusual need for recuperation occurs, up to an additional four hours may be authorized (Ref: CPM 990-2, Book 630.S11). Such absence will not include time spent in donating blood, traveling from the site of donation nor will it include the employees' lunch hour. The scheduling of blood donation times will be the > function of the depot blood coordinator through the division office with times being equally rotated throughout the divisions. Employees who request, but are not scheduled for the quarterly bloodmobile visit, will be given an opportunity to donate in accordance with FPM Supplement 990-2, Book 630. Emergency donations will be handled on a case-by-case basis by the depot blood coordinator. [Only the underlined portion of the provision is in dispute.]

III. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the provision is inconsistent with (1) the Agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute; and (2) Department of Defense Regulation, Civilian Personnel Manual (CPM) 1400.25-M, CPM 990-2, 630.S11-5,[1] for which a compelling need exists under section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute and section 2424.11 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. In support of its first contention, the Agency argues that the granting of an employee's request for administrative leave in an amount in excess of four hours for the purposes of donating blood without regard to the necessity of the employee's service during the period covered by the request interferes with the Agency's right to assign work under the Statute. In support of its second contention, the Agency argues that the provision conflicts with its regulation by requiring more than four hours of administrative leave to be granted and that a compelling need exists for that regulation.

In response to the Agency's first contention, the Union maintains that its intent in using the language, "normally be authorized four hours of excused absence," is that the Agency can deny permission for employees to donate blood when the time necessary for such donation would interfere with the Agency's mission and, therefore, it does not interfere with the assignment of work. According to the Union, the provision applies only to those employees who can be scheduled by management for that time off. In response to the Agency's second contention, the Union argues that the Agency regulation (1) does not have a compelling need, and (2) is a guideline rather than a mandatory provision.

IV. Analysis and Conclusion

The disputed provision requires the Agency to add the time spent donating blood and traveling to the donation site to the four hours of excused absence for employees who donate blood.

Contrary to the Agency's contention, the provision, as interpreted by the Union, is not inconsistent with its right to assign work under the Statute. As noted, the Union's intent is that the Agency can deny permission for employees to donate blood when the time necessary for such donation would interfere with the Agency's work. Thus, the provision would not restrict the Agency's right to deny an employee's request when the Agency needed the employee to perform work. Accordingly, the provision is not inconsistent with the Agency's right to assign work.

The Agency's second contention is that the provision is inconsistent with Agency regulation, CPM 1400.25-M, CPM 990-2, 630.S11-5. In order for the Agency to establish that the provision is barred by an Agency regulation, it must (1) identify a specific agency-wide regulation; (2) show that there is a conflict between its regulation and the provision; and (3) demonstrate that its regulation is supported by a compelling need with reference to the Authority's standards set forth in section 2424.11 of its Regulations. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Madison Region, 21 FLRA No. 104 (1986) (Union Proposal 7). To establish compelling need the Agency must > necessary travel to and from the donation site. The maximum excusal time will not exceed 4 hours, except in unusual cases. When the employee must travel a long distance, or when unusual need for recuperation occurs, up to an additional 4 hours may be authorized.

demonstrate that its regulation is "essential" or "necessary" to achieve certain ends. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217, 220 (1981). Generalized and conclusionary reasoning is not enough to support a finding of compelling need. Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Madison Region, supra.

The first two requirements of the three part test have been met. The Agency has identified a specific Agency-wide regulation, CPM 1400.25-M, CPM 990-2, 630.S11-5 and the provision authorizes the grant of more than four hours of excused absence in situations other than those specified in the regulation. Thus, the provision conflicts with the Agency regulation.

As to the final requirement, the Agency argues that under criterion (a) of section 2424.11[2] the provision is not "consistent with the requirements of an effective and efficient government" because the provision would raise costs to the Agency by increasing at least 50% the amount of time for excused absence for blood donation. The increase, the Agency asserts, would be the result of additional time in giving blood and traveling to and from the donation site. The Union disputes these assertions, contending that the time taken in actually giving blood is only 10 to 15 minutes and that the time for traveling to the donation site is minimal since most donations are made at bloodmobiles on the military installation.

As noted in Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, supra, to establish compelling need the Agency must demonstrate that its regulation is "essential" or "necessary". In this case the Agency has not done so. The Agency has offered only generalized and conclusionary reasoning, which was disputed by the Union, in support of its assertion that there is a compelling need for the Agency regulation. With reference to the alleged increase in costs, the Agency has not shown that there would be any increase in the number of employees who donate blood or the number of hours of excused absence used by employees under the provision. Even assuming that the provision would result in an increase in the hours of excused absence, the Agency has not shown that the increase would be sufficient to justify a finding that the provision is inconsistent with an effective and efficient government. Since the Agency has not established a compelling need for the Agency regulation under section 2424.11 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Agency has not shown that the provision is barred by an Agency regulation. Therefore, the provision is within the Agency's duty to bargain under the Statute.

[2] Section 2424.11(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations contains the following criterion:

> (a) The rule or regulation is essential, as distinguished from helpful or desirable, to the accomplishment of the mission or the execution of functions of the agency or primary national subdivision in a manner which is consistent with the requirements of an effective and efficient government.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall rescind its disapproval of the disputed provision.[3]

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This consolidated unfair labor practice case is before the Authority because of exceptions filed by the General Counsel to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge, which are limited to the Judge's findings with respect to Case No. 57-CA-50265. No exceptions were filed by any party with respect to the Decision of the Administrative Law Judge concerning Case No. 57-CA-50257. The issue raised in the General Counsel's exceptions is whether questioning by an agent of the Respondent during a Union representative's interview for a bargaining unit position constituted interrogation and thus interference, restraint, or coercion in violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute).

II. Background, Judge's Decision, and Adoption in Part

The Judge concluded with respect to the allegations raised in Case No. 57-CA-50257, that the Respondent's refusal to bargain over its decision to change a bargaining unit employee's starting and quitting times constituted a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Noting the absence of exceptions, we adopt the Judge's conclusion and supporting rationale in Case No. 57-CA-50257.

With regard to the allegations raised in Case No. 57-CA-50265, the Judge noted in his findings that during the interview, the agent of the Respondent asked the Union representative "if he was chief union steward and how much time he spent on union activities." Also, he was asked "what would happen if . . . [he] . . . was needed at the warehouse at the same time he was needed by the union . . . [and] . . . what he would do if a truck needed to be unloaded and he was on official time performing union duties." Finally, he was asked "if his position was an elected or an appointed one."

The Judge viewed this questioning as permissible, concluding that it did not interfere with the employee's protected rights in violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. In reaching this conclusion, the Judge relied upon the Authority's holding in Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 20 FLRA No. 89 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. National Association of Government Employees, Local R7-23 v. FLRA, No. 86-1011 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 1, 1986). He viewed that decision as standing for the proposition that when conflicts arise between an employee's entitlement to official time for representational functions under section 7131 of the Statute and the entitlement of management under section 7106 of the Statute to manage, consistent with effective and efficient Government, the parties must recognize the need for and seek reasonable accommodations. In recognizing the need for accommodation, the Judge found that it was reasonable for an agency to "ask an employee the questions necessary to reasonably determine if a conflict exists and how accommodations can be achieved." The Judge concluded that the questioning by Respondent's agent here was directed at ascertaining whether there would be such a conflict concerning demands upon the employee's time in the warehouse position and was therefore relevant to reaching a permissible goal.

III. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel alleges that any statements or questions which suggest a relationship between an employee's protected activity and the employee's present or future employment status constitute interrogation and are violative of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. The General Counsel also contends that the Judge's reliance on Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, is misplaced. The General Counsel argues that the cited case, and the cases cited therein, all involve a specific problem with respect to the granting of official time or an employee's inability to perform certain duties, whereas the subject case involves the interrogation of a job applicant about his union duties prior to his selection.

IV. Analysis

As previously held by the Authority, conduct by an agency which may reasonably tend to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights under the Statute is violative of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. See Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Louisville District, 20 FLRA No. 77 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. National Treasury Union v. FLRA, No. 86-1015 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 8, 1986), and the cases cited at n.2. Contrary to the Judge, we find that this interrogation falls within that category. The questions were asked of this labor organization representative during an employment interview. The questions concerned his position in the Union, how many hours he spends in activities on behalf of the Union, and how he would resolve hypothetical conflicts between work and his protected activities on behalf of the Union. The context of the questioning establishes a connection between the protected activity and the employee's chance to be selected for the position. We conclude that this questioning reasonably tends to interfere with the employee's rights under the Statute by communicating that time spent engaging in protected activity could adversely affect his chance for future job selection.

We agree with the General Counsel that the Judge's reliance on Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, was misplaced. That case involved a specific ongoing conflict between an employee's right to use official time and the agency's right to manage effectively and efficiently. The Authority held that when such conflicts arise, the parties must recognize the need for and seek reasonable accommodation. The Authority viewed the statements made by the agency representative to the employee as an attempt to seek accommodation and, in the circumstances, should have been understood to have been made in that context by a reasonable employee. No such conflict has arisen in this case.

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations, to the extent consistent with the above. Thus, we adopt the Judge's conclusion in Case No. 57-CA-50257 that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by refusing to bargain over the change in starting and quitting times of a bargaining unit employee. However, contrary to the Judge's finding in Case No. 57-CA-50265, we find that the interrogation of the bargaining unit employee during his interview for a bargaining unit position about his protected activity constitutes interference, restraint and coercion in violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Veterans Administration, Washington, D.C. and Veterans Administration Medical Center and Regional Office, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, shall:

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq., 92 Stat. 1191 (hereinafter referred to as the Statute), and the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA), 5 C.F.R. Chapter XIV, § 2410 et seq.

[23 FLRA No. 14]

A charge against Veterans Administration, Washington, D.C. (hereinafter called VA), and VA Medical Center and Regional Office, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, (hereinafter called VA Sioux Falls),[1] was filed by American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1509, AFL-CIO, (herein called AFGE Local 1509), in January 21, 1985 in Case No. 57-CA-50257 and was amended on March 8, 1985. Pursuant to the above described charge and amended charge on March 12, 1985, the General Counsel of the FLRA, by the Acting Regional Director for Region V, issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing alleging that Respondents violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by unilaterally changing the duty hours of an employee.

A charge against the Respondents was filed by AFGE Local 1509 on January 31, 1985 in Case No. 57-CA-50265 and was amended on February 14, 1985 and was amended a second time on March 13, 1985. Pursuant to the above described charge, as twice amended, on March 13, 1985 the General Counsel of the FLRA, by the Regional Director for Region V, issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing alleging that Respondents violated Section 7116(a)((1) of the Statute by interrogating an employee concerning his union activities. By Order dated March 13, 1985, Case Nos. 57-CA-50257 and 57-CA-50265 were consolidated for the purpose of hearing. Respondents filed timely Answers denying that the Statute had been violated.

A hearing was conducted before the undersigned in Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Respondents, Charging Party and General Counsel of the FLRA were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce and to argue orally. Post-hearing briefs were filed and have been fully considered.

Based upon the entire record in this matter, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

At all times material herein American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE) has been recognized as the exclusive collective bargaining representative for an appropriate unit of VA employees, including the employees assigned to VA Sioux Falls that are the subject of this case. AFGE Local 1509 has been AFGE's representative on behalf of the employees at VA Sioux Falls.

At all times material VA and AFGE have been parties to a Master Collective Bargaining Agreement and VA Sioux Falls and AFGE Local 1509 have been parties to a Local Agreement.

[1] Collectively referred to herein as Respondents.

Case No. 57-CA-50257

The laundry crew was staffed with 12 employees[2] and, prior to December 23, 1984, all employees of the laundry worked from 7:00 AM to 3:30 PM Monday through Friday, except for one employee in the linen room worked from 8:00 AM to 4:30 PM. These hours were in effect during the entire year except during the summer months when all employees commenced work at 6:00 AM and worked to 2:30 PM, because of the extreme heat in the laundry.

By memorandum to "Patricia Niemann, President, AFGE 1509" dated November 15, 1984, VA Sioux Falls, proposed "a new tour of duty (6:00 AM - 2:30 PM) for employees in both the sanitation and the laundry sections. Half of the employees in the sanitation would be affected, and Raymond Ellis, Laundry Machine Operator, would be the only laundry employee who would start this tour."

On November 26, 1984, a meeting was held by representatives of VA Sioux Falls and AFGE Local 1509 to discuss the proposed change. After discussion AFGE Local 1509 agreed to the change in duty hours in the sanitation section. AFGE Local 1509 raised the problem that Ellis and his wife car pooled. VA Sioux Falls pointed out that Ellis' wife was on sick leave and might not return, but if she did she could work the same hours as Ellis. AFGE Local 1509 suggested that Ellis' hours of work, 7:00 AM - 3:30 PM, be maintained. Chief of Personnel Elmer Richards stated the hours were non-negotiable. The change in Ellis' hours was to be made so that Ellis could have a washing cycle completed so that the employees coming to work at 7:00 AM could immediately start drying, ironing, folding, etc.

By memorandum dated November 28, 1984, to VA Sioux Falls, AFGE Local 1509, stated that Ellis was happy with his existing hours (7:00 AM - 3:30 PM) and that the maintaining of two cars for car pooling was very expensive. The memo also stated "Mr. Elmer Richards stated, In our negotiating session on 11/28/84 that 'Raymond Ellis, new tour of duty 6 AM - 2:30 PM is non-negotiable.' Please reply within (3) days with your written answer stating if this new tour of duty 6 AM - 2:30 PM is non-negotiable."

By memorandum dated December 3, 1984, VA Sioux Falls responded to AFGE Local 1509 that the new 6:00 - 2:30 PM tour of duty for Ellis would commence pay period 26 and "management will not negotiate tours of duty." On December 23, 1984, the new duty hours for Ellis went into effect.

[2] Ten of these employees are WG-2 Laundry workers; One is a WG-3 Laundry Machine Operator; and one WG-5 Laundry Machine Operator, Mr. Raymond Ellis. The WG-3 Laundry Machine Operator ran the dryers and Ellis ran the washers.

Except for the change in Ellis' hours there has been no change in the number of employees in grades and in the types of employees working in the laundry section.

Case No. 57-CA-50265

At all times material herein, Gail Alexander, Assistant Chief, Supply Service, and Carl Meyerhoff, Chief of Storage and Distribution section and Chief of the Warehouse, were management officials and agents of VA Sioux Falls. Meyerhoff is Alexander's subordinate.

On December 24, 1984, a vacant position in Storage and Distribution was announced. In January 1985, Joe Turner, AFGE Local 1509 Chief Steward, applied for the vacant position, was one of five finalists and, as part of the promotional process, was interviewed.

On or about January 16, 1985 Turner was interviewed for the vacancy by Alexander and Meyerhoff. Alexander asked Turner if she could question him about his union activities. Turner agreed. During the interview Alexander asked Turner, inter alia, how Turner came to work at VA, what he thought the duties were of a warehouseman, etc. Alexander asked Turner if he was chief union steward and how much time he spent on union activities. Turner explained he was entitled to spend four hours of official time per week on union activities but that sometimes he was required to spend more than four hours per week on union business. Turner stated that he was occasionally called by personnel to discuss a problem or attend a meeting. Alexander asked what would happen if Turner was needed at the warehouse at the same time he was needed by the union; she asked what he would do if a truck needed to be unloaded and he was on official time performing union duties. Alexander pointed out that there were only limited people working in the warehouse. Turner answered it was no problem and that he had always been able to resolve such conflicts in his position in housekeeping. Alexander asked Turner if his position was an elected or an appointed one. Turner answered that he was appointed and had a right to keep the position as long as he wished.

Discussion and Conclusions

It is well settled that starting and quitting times of employees on an established shift is a condition of employment and an agency violates the Statute by not affording its employees' exclusive representative opportunity to negotiate fully on the decision to change the starting and quitting times. U.S. Customs, 9 FLRA 116 (1982) and Internal Revenue Service, Los Angeles District, 10 FLRA 653 (1982); See also Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 20 FLRA No. 107 (1985).

The FLRA has also concluded that the establishment of a new shift or tour of duty is negotiable only at the election of the agency because it involves "numbers, types and grades of employees or positions assigned to any organizational subdivision, work project or tour of duty" within the meaning of Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. U.S. Customs, supra, and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1461 and Department of the Navy, U.S. Naval Observatory, 16 FLRA 995 (1984) and Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, supra.

In the subject case, therefore, if the change in Ellis' hours constituted a change in Ellis' starting and quitting time, VA Sioux Falls was obligated to negotiate with AFGE Local 1509 concerning the substance of such a change. On the other hand, if the change in Ellis' hours constituted the establishment of a new shift, it would have involved rights reserved to VA Sioux Falls by Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and would have been negotiable only at the election of the agency. These distinctions drawn by the FLRA are very fine ones and somewhat arcane. Cf. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, 732 F2d 703 (1984).

In light of the distinctions drawn by the FLRA, I conclude that VA Sioux Falls changed Ellis' starting and quitting times and did not establish a new shift. In so concluding, I note that Ellis continued to work with the existing shift and employees. He was merely directed to come in earlier so that he could have a load of wash ready for the rest of his shift when it arrived an hour after Ellis. Ellis continued his duties with the established shift.[3] Further, VA Sioux Falls was willing to let Ellis' wife, who also worked in the laundry, keep the same hours as Ellis. Since she too worked on the same laundry shift, it is clear that VA Sioux Falls merely perceived this as involving a changing and adjusting of the starting and quitting times of Ellis, and his wife, and not the establishment of a new shift.

In light of the foregoing conclusion VA Sioux Falls was obligated to negotiate with AFGE Local 1509 concerning the decision to changing Ellis' starting and quitting times. Its refusal to do so therefore violated VA Sioux Falls' obligation as set forth in Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. U.S. Customs, supra and Internal Revenue Service, Los Angeles District, supra.

Case No. 57-CA-50265

The FLRA has recognized conflicts between employees' entitlements to official time for representational functions under Section 7131 of the Statute and the entitlement of management under Section 7106 of the Statute to manage, consistent with effective and efficient Government. When such conflicts arise the FLRA has stated that the parties must recognize the need for and seek reasonable accommodations. Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 20 FLRA No. 89 (1985) and the cases cited therein.

[3] In this regard, it is further noted that another member of the shift had a starting time one hour after the bulk of the shift arrived.

Recognizing this need to seek accommodations it seems only reasonable that an agency can ask an employee the questions necessary to reasonably determine if a conflict exists and how accommodations can be achieved. In the subject case, Alexander's questioning of Turner seemed directed at ascertaining whether there would be such a conflict concerning demands upon Turner's time in the warehouse position, and how Turner would deal with such a conflict. Such questioning, since it was relevant to reaching a permissible goal, and was clearly so stated, would not interfere with an employee's protected rights and would not violate Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.[4/] Although Alexander's asking Turner how he was chosen as Steward seem unrelated to the rest of questions, and, although, by itself it might seem suspicious, it is not, in light of the total conversation, sufficient to constitute an interference with Turner's protected rights. I conclude, in light of the foregoing, that Alexander's questioning of Turner did not violate Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

Having found and concluded that in Case No. 57-CA-50257 VA Sioux Falls violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute and that in Case No. 57-CA-50265 VA Sioux Falls did not violate the Statute, I recommend that the FLRA issue the following:

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Jacob Seidenberg filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration challenging the Agency's determination to contract out certain functions as violative of Article XVI[1] of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Arbitrator as his award found that the grievance was arbitrable, but denied the grievance on the merits.

[1] Article XVI of the parties' collective bargaining agreement pertinently provides:

> Section 1. With the approval of the Librarian of Congress, the Library may employ, in order to improve its service and operation, experts and consultants on a temporary basis in those situations when the regular staff does not possess the required specialized skills or knowledge which cannot practicably be obtained through normal employment procedures.

III. EXCEPTIONS

In its exceptions, the Agency contends that the award is contrary to law and regulation in several respects. In particular, the Agency contends that by finding the grievance to be arbitrable, the award is contrary to the Agency's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to make determinations with respect to contracting out.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority concludes that the award is deficient under the Statute. The plain language of section 7106 of the Statute provides that "nothing" in the Statute shall "affect the authority" of an agency to exercise the rights enumerated in that section. Thus, the Authority has expressly held that a matter cannot be grieved which would deny the authority of an agency to exercise its statutory rights under section 7106. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA 70, 79 (1981), aff'd sub nom. AFGE Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 926 (1983). Specifically, the Authority has held that proposals which would, as their sole effect, subject management's determinations concerning the identification of critical elements of a position and the content of performance standards to the grievance procedure and arbitral review constituted improper interference with management's rights. Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, (Proposal 4). In so holding, the Authority has noted that subjecting managerial evaluations concerning critical elements and performance standards to arbitral review would require an arbitrator to substitute his or her judgment as to how the agency should be run for that of management. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of Health and Human Services, Region 10, 13 FLRA 732, 734 (1982), aff'd sub nom. NTEU v. FLRA, 767 F.2d 1315 (9th Cir. 1985). Thus, the Authority has found that an arbitrator cannot determine that a grievance directly challenging an agency's identification of job elements or establishment of performance standards is grievable and arbitrable. Bureau of Prisons, Department of Justice and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 148, 21 FLRA No. 15 (1986); Bureau of Engraving and Printing, U.S. Department of the Treasury and Washington Plate Printers Union, Local No. 2, IPDEU, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 39 (1985). The Authority has also found an arbitration award deficient which enforced a collective bargaining agreement provision that imposed a substantive limitation on management's right to identify critical elements. The Authority concluded that by imposing such a limitation, the agreement provision prompted the interference by grievance and arbitration with management's rights because the provision provided the basis for the arbitrator's review of management's identification of an element as critical and permitted the substitution of judgment by the arbitrator for that of management as to how the agency should be run. National Treasury Employees Union and U.S. Customs Service, 17 FLRA 38 (1985). Of course, section 7106 provides that the exercise by management of the rights enumerated in section 7106(a)(2) must be in accordance with applicable laws and is subject to any procedures or appropriate arrangements that have been negotiated by the parties. In Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986), this principle was applied to a grievance alleging that a decision to contract out was not made in accordance with applicable procurement law and regulation governing such determinations. The Authority concluded that such a grievance was not contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute and was grievable and arbitrable.

The grievance in this case does not concern whether the disputed procurement action is in accordance with applicable laws. Similarly, Article XVI of the agreement does not constitute a negotiated procedure to be observed in, or an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by, the exercise by management of its right to make a determination to contract out. Instead, Article XVI expressly prohibits the Agency from contracting out when "the regular staff" possesses the required specialized skills or knowledge or can obtain the required skills or knowledge through normal employment procedures. By preventing the Agency from contracting out in these circumstances, the provision is inconsistent with section 7106(a)(2)(B) which reserves such determinations with respect to contracting out to management. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 31st Combat Support Group (TAC), Homestead Air Force Base, Florida, 6 FLRA 574 (1981) (Proposal 2), enforced sub nom. National Federation of Federal Employees v. FLRA, 681 F.2d 886 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

The Arbitrator's determination that Article XVI merely incorporated by reference the provisions of existing procurement laws and regulations, including specifically 2 U.S.C. § 166, does not alter this conclusion. As the Authority explained in Homestead Air Force Base, 6 FLRA at 577, incorporation into the collective bargaining agreement of specific terms of law or regulation would require management to comply with those terms during the period of the collective bargaining agreement regardless of whether the specific provisions from which they were derived might subsequently be revised or rescinded. Thus, the Authority concluded that incorporation of specific terms "would impose an independent contractual requirement upon management's discretion with respect to contracting out" and therefore "goes beyond contractual recognition of any external limitations and imposes substantive limitations in and of itself." In short, the Authority stated that although law or regulation may place limitations on management discretion, the Statute precludes the negotiation of contractual limitations on management's rights.

The grievance in this case sought to enforce through grievance and arbitration a provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreement that denies the authority of the Agency to make determinations with respect to contracting out under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. Consistent with established precedent pertaining to arbitral review of management's exercise of its rights in performance appraisal matters, we find that such a grievance is precluded by section 7106 from grievance and arbitration. Thus, the Arbitrator's award finding the grievance to be arbitrable is deficient as contrary to the Statute.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, paragraphs 2-3 of the award, finding the grievance arbitrable and resolving the grievance on the merits, are set aside.[2]

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Paul Barron filed by the Activity under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition and the Office of Personnel Management filed a brief as an amicus curiae.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case concerns the furlough of the grievant as the result of a reduction-in-force. A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration protesting the Activity's denial of retreat rights to the grievant to the position of agricultural commodity technician, GS-5. According to the Arbitrator, the grievant was initially appointed in the Federal service as an agricultural commodity technician, GS-7, and subsequently was promoted from that position. As a result of an earlier reduction-in-force, the grievant at the time of the disputed reduction-in-force held the position of agricultural commodity grader, GS-7. The Activity had denied the grievant retreat rights under FPM chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b which entitles an employee to retreat to a position from or through which the employee had been promoted or to a position substantially the same as a position from or through which the employee had been promoted. The Activity had determined that the position of agricultural commodity technician, GS-5, was not a position from or through which the grievant had been promoted. The Activity had also determined that the GS-5 technician position was not substantially the same as any such position because it was not at the same grade level of any position from or through which the grievant had been promoted.

The Arbitrator ruled that the grievant was entitled to have retreated to the position of agricultural commodity technician, GS-5, at the time of the reduction-in-force. He concluded that the intention of the FPM is to allow retreat to an entry level position in the situation, as in this case, where the employee had been appointed at the higher-grade level of a position series because of the employee's experience and where the duties of the position at the different grade levels are essentially the same. He stated that in a real sense the employee when appointed at a higher grade is promoted through the entry level position. The Arbitrator also rejected the Activity's argument under FPM chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b that in order to be substantially the same, positions must be at the same grade level. The Arbitrator noted that the argument was based on subchapter 4-3b(3)*/ essentially providing that in order to be substantially the same, the two positions must be enough alike that they would be "in the same competitive level if they were in the same competitive area." The Arbitrator acknowledged that in order to be "in the same competitive level," FPM chapter 351, subchapter 2-3 requires that they be at the same grade level. However, the Arbitrator rejected the contention that this competitive level limitation requiring positions to be at the same grade level applied in this case. He explained that the position comparison of subchapter 4-3b(3), incorporating the competitive level requirement, is between positions in different competitive areas and that there is no such requirement when the position comparison is between positions in the same competitive area as in this case. He observed that this interpretation was supported by the provision in subchapter 4-3b that described retreat rights in terms of a "substantially similar position" rather than a position that is "substantially the same" as a position from or through which the employee had been promoted. Accordingly, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance and awarded the grievant backpay for any wages lost as the result of his furlough.

*/ FPM chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b is set forth in full in the appendix.

III. EXCEPTION

A. Contentions of the Activity

The Activity contends that the award is deficient as contrary to FPM chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b. The Activity asserts that the retreat rights provided by regulation are narrow and specific and that the Arbitrator has granted the grievant retreat to a position contrary to the FPM. In particular, the Activity maintains that because the grievant was never promoted from the position of agricultural commodity technician, GS-5, the grievant would be entitled to retreat to that position only if it were "substantially the same," within the meaning of FPM chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b, as the position of agricultural commodity technician, GS-7, from which the grievant had been promoted. The Activity argues that in order to be substantially the same under subchapter 4-3b, the positions must be in the same competitive level which requires that they must be at the same grade level. Because the position of agricultural commodity technician, GS-5, and the position of agricultural commodity technician, GS-7, are not at the same grade level, the Activity argues that the grievant was not entitled to retreat to the GS-5 technician position. Moreover, the Activity argues that the Arbitrator therefore misinterpreted subchapter 4-3b when he held that the intent of the FPM was to allow retreat to entry level positions in situations such as presented in this case. The Activity also argues that the Arbitrator misinterpreted subchapter 4-3b when he held that the competitive level limitation, requiring that positions be at the same grade level to be substantially the same, only applies when the positions being compared are in different competitive areas. The Activity asserts that the requirement applies regardless of competitive area and that one instance of the use of an interchangeable term to "substantially the same" in subchapter 4-3b does not alter the requirement.

B. Opposition of the Union

In its opposition the Union contends that the award granting the grievant retreat rights in the circumstances of this case has not been shown to be contrary to any express provisions of FPM chapter 351. The Union maintains that the arguments presented in support of the exception are the same arguments presented to the Arbitrator and properly rejected by him.

C. Position of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM)

In agreement with the Activity, OPM maintains that the intent of the FPM is not to allow retreat to entry level positions in situations such as presented in this case. OPM specifically asserts, contrary to the ruling of the Arbitrator, that FPM chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b requires that positions must be in the same competitive level in order to be substantially the same, regardless of competitive area. OPM notes that in order to be in the same competitive level, positions must be at the same grade level. OPM also agrees with the Activity that the one instance of the use of the term "substantially similar" rather than "substantially the same" does not alter this requirement. OPM maintains that under FPM chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b, the grievant was not entitled to retreat to the GS-5 technician position because it was not a position from or through which he had been promoted and because it was not a position substantially the same as a position from or through which he had been promoted since it was at a lower grade level.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

We conclude that the award is deficient by granting the grievant retreat rights to the position of agricultural commodity technician, GS-5. For the reasons that follow, we find that this is not a position from which the grievant was promoted or a position essentially identical to or substantially the same as a position from which the grievant was promoted.

The Merit Systems Protection Board has repeatedly recognized that the right of retreat is narrow and specific. See Shell v. Department of Labor, MSPB Docket No. CH035184I0511 (March 25, 1985). Specifically, at all relevant times, an employee has been entitled under 5 CFR part 351, subpart G to retreat only to the same position or an essentially identical position previously held by the employee. The Board has noted that OPM has elaborated on retreat rights in FPM chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b, Johnson v. HUD, MSPB Docket No. DE03518310282 (August 2, 1984), and holds that in order for an employee to exercise the right of retreat, the employee must have been promoted from or through the position to which such right is claimed or promoted from or through a position that is substantially the same or substantially similar. See Berry v. Department of Energy, MSPB Docket No. DC035182I1433 (May 8, 1984) and Gallegos v. DoD, 9 MSPB 467 (1982). In addition, the Board has cited and applied the interpretation of these regulations that the Activity and OPM assert in this case. Thus, the Board has indicated that it will find a position to be substantially the same as a position from which the employee was promoted only when the positions are sufficiently alike so that they would be in the same competitive level. Lover v. HHS, MSPB Docket No. DC03518410189 (October 1, 1984). Similarly, the Board has also cited OPM's interpretation of these regulations to provide that appointments from OPM registers are not promotions and therefore may not be used when determining an employee's retreat rights. Shell v. Department of Labor.

In view of the consistent interpretation of these regulations by OPM, and in view of MSPB's adoption and application of this interpretation in resolving retreat right disputes in numerous reduction-in-force cases, we conclude that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to 5 CFR part 351, subpart G and FPM chapter 351, subchapter 4-3b. We find that there is no right of retreat to entry level positions in situations such as presented in this case. An employee is not promoted through the entry level position when the employee is appointed at a higher grade level. See Shell v. Department of Labor. We further find, contrary to the Arbitrator, that under these regulations the grievant was not entitled to retreat to the GS-5 technician position because it was not a position essentially identical to or substantially the same as the GS-7 technician position. Under the regulations there was no right to retreat because the positions are not in the same competitive level since they are not at the same grade level. Consequently, the award is deficient.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons, the award is set aside.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case comes before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of two Union proposals.

II. Background

These proposals were offered by the Union during negotiations held as the result of a settlement agreement between the parties resolving an unfair labor practice (ULP) charge filed against the Agency. The settlement agreement obligated the Agency to bargain over the impact and implementation of detailing bargaining unit employees to work at sites used for detention of illegal Cuban and Haitian aliens. The proposals specifically address the fact that unit employees lose their eligibility under Agency regulations for administratively uncontrollable overtime (AUO) while on detail to the detention centers.

The purpose and method of computing AUO is fully explained in National Border Patrol Council, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, 23 FLRA No. 11 (1986). In accordance with applicable regulations, AUO may be paid only if the amount involved would be less than employees would be entitled to under regular overtime. These proposals seek to mitigate the effect upon employee entitlements to AUO payments which results from the details. In essence, the proposal would minimize the difference between AUO and the amount the employee would receive if paid regular overtime.

Union Proposal 1

> The initial ten (10) working days of a detail to the Cuban/Haitian Refugee Program will be considered excludable for AUO purposes and immediately upon return to his official duty station, the employee will be certified for the same percentage of AUO for which he was certified prior to detail to the Cuban/Haitian Refugee Program.

A. Positions of the Parties

As a procedural matter, the Agency asserts that the Union's negotiability appeal should be dismissed for failure to comply with section 2424.5 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. That is, the Agency asserts that the Union filed a ULP charge against the Agency concerning the same matter as Union Proposal 1, yet did not select, as required by section 2424.5 of the Rules, which procedure (the ULP charge or the negotiability appeal) the Authority should process first.

The Agency further argues that it has no duty to bargain on Union Proposal 1 in the circumstances of this case because, in essence, the proposal falls outside the scope of the parties' settlement agreement.

Substantively, the Agency argues that Union Proposal 1 is nonnegotiable because:

> 1. The proposal violates law and/or Office of Personnel Management (OPM) regulations. In particular, the proposal conflicts with 5 C.F.R. § 550.151 to .164 which was issued pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5545(c);
> 2. The proposal constitutes an attempt to negotiate rates of pay in violation of law; and

3. The proposal violates an Agency regulation, DOJ Order 1551.4A, for which there is an asserted compelling need.

The Union contends that a negotiability determination is warranted because the issues present in the ULP proceeding cited by the Agency are distinguishable from the issue raised in its proposal. Substantively, the Union asserts that the matter of excluding days from AUO computation is within the discretion of the Agency and, therefore, is within its duty to bargain.

B. Analysis

1. Procedural Issue

The ULP charge, which the Agency claims concerns the same issue as Union Proposal 1, was closed by the Regional Director without any substantive determination having been made on the underlying issue shortly after the Agency filed its Statement of Position in the negotiability appeal. Thus, even assuming that the Union failed to make the election required by section 2424.5 of the Rules as to which procedure (the ULP charge or the negotiability appeal) should be processed first, such procedural issue has been rendered moot.

2. Duty to Bargain

When a union files a negotiability appeal under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Statute, section 7117(c) entitles it to a decision on the negotiability issues in the appeal. To the extent that there are factual issues in dispute between the parties in the circumstances of a case, such issues should be resolved in other appropriate proceedings. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 (1984). Hence, the Agency arguments that under the circumstances it has no duty to bargain on the disputed proposal are not relevant in the context of a negotiability appeal.

3. Substantive Issues

a. Conflict with Law and Government-wide Regulation

While the Agency concedes that the development of a formula for establishing AUO entitlements is left to agencies' discretion, it contends that the law and regulations implicitly require all similarly situated employees within an agency to be treated in like manner. In support, the Agency relies on two decisions of the Court of Claims, namely, Byrnes, et al. v. United States, 330 F.2d (Ct. Cl. 1964) and Fix, et al. v. United States, 368 F.2d 609 (Ct. Cl. 1966).

The Agency's reliance on the two Court of Claims decisions is misplaced. Those cases dealt with agency attempts to exclude certain employees from eligibility for overtime pay in violation of statutory eligibility criteria. The cases did not specifically examine the agencies' methods of computing AUO overtime pay. In fact, the court in the Fix case noted that an agency does have discretion in the calculation of overtime pay under an AUO statute. 368 F.2d at 614. Further, the court in the Fix case stated that a "necessary consequence" of the AUO scheme is that "some will get the same pay for much more work." 368 F.2d at 615.

The Agency contends that its own regulations are applicable throughout the entire Department of Justice and ensure the required uniform treatment of all Justice employees. The Agency argues that Union Proposal 1 would set up a different computational scheme for unit employees detailed to the detention centers, which would result in higher subsequent AUO payments to covered employees than those received by non-bargaining unit employees assigned to other details of similar length for which AUO pay is also not authorized.

The Authority finds that neither the governing statute nor the related OPM regulations, either literally or as judicially interpreted, requires absolute equity between Executive agencies or even between similarly situated employees within an agency. Rather, the law and regulations leave agencies with discretion to decide how to arrive at individual AUO entitlements. To the extent that an agency has discretion respecting a matter sought to be bargained affecting conditions of employment within a bargaining unit and where the grant of discretion is not sole and exclusive, the matter is within the duty to bargain. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 758 (1980). In this case, the Agency has proffered no persuasive arguments that either the statutory or regulatory grants of discretion are limited so as to bar bargaining over the methods of computing AUO entitlements.

b. Negotiation over Pay Rates

The Agency's view that Union Proposal 1 constitutes an unlawful attempt to bargain over rates of pay is based on the fact that exclusion of the first ten days of a detail to the detention centers, as required by the proposal, would result in the concerned employees receiving a higher rate of AUO upon return to their regular assignments than otherwise would be granted under the Agency regulation. This proposal, however, merely concerns the computation of AUO within the specific constraints set by law and implementing Government-wide regulations. That is, 5 U.S.C. § 5545(c)(2) establishes that an employee eligible for AUO payments may receive "not less than 20 percent nor more than 25 percent, of such part of the rate of basic pay for the position as does not exceed the minimum rate of basic pay for GS-10, by taking into consideration the frequency and duration of irregular unscheduled overtime duty required in the position." The Agency has not alleged, nor is it otherwise apparent, that this proposal seeks to circumvent these statutory limitations.

The OPM regulations issued pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5545(c) state, at 5 CFR § 550.161(d) (1986), that determinations as to AUO payments ". . . shall be based on consideration of available records of the hours of irregular or occasional overtime work required in the past, and any other information bearing on the number of hours of duty which may reasonably be expected to be required in the future." The Agency does not suggest that the proposal is inconsistent with the quoted regulatory guidelines nor does it assert that the proposal is an inherently inaccurate indicator of future uncontrollable overtime work. In fact, the Agency states, at 20 of its Statement of Position, that it does not "claim that there is a specific . . . need to include or exclude the first 10 days of an assignment to 'other duties' within the meaning of 5 CFR § 550.162(c)(1)."

c. Compelling Need for the Agency's Regulation

The Agency argues that its regulations governing AUO computations meet the criterion for compelling need set forth at section 2424.11(b) and (c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. Both of these compelling need arguments were raised in United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, 23 FLRA No. 11 and were rejected by the Authority. For the reasons fully stated in that case, they are likewise rejected here.

d. Recertification After Return from Detail

In the Agency's assertion of nonnegotiability it contended that the portion of the proposal requiring recertification of employees at the same percentage of AUO for which they were certified prior to their detail is moot. The Agency has not argued that this portion of the proposal is nonnegotiable, nor is it otherwise apparent that it is inconsistent with any law, rule or regulation. In fact, this portion of the proposal appears to be consistent with the Agency's regulation, as modified by the first part of the proposal, concerning the calculation and payment of AUO for employees returning from a detail. Thus, the Authority finds this portion of the proposal to be within the duty to bargain.

C. Conclusion

The proposal is properly before the Authority and does not conflict with 5 U.S.C. § 5545(c) or 5 C.F.R. § 550.151 to .164. Further, the Agency has not demonstrated that negotiation of the proposal is barred by an Agency regulation, DOJ Order 1551.4A, for which a compelling need exists. Consequently, Union Proposal 1 is within the duty to bargain.

IV. Union Proposal 2

> The Service agrees where possible to attempt to avoid assigning employees who are within three years of retirement to details which have the effect of reducing the employees' compensation for their "high three" years (for retirement purposes).

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is inconsistent with management's rights to assign employees and work, under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute.

The Union characterizes the proposal as being "hortatory rather than mandatory" and, thus, within the duty to bargain.

B. Analysis

In effect, Union Proposal 2 prevents the Agency from assigning certain employees to details which would render them ineligible for AUO payments. A provision similar in effect was before the Authority in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 14 FLRA 243 (1984). Provision 2 in that case sought to prevent the agency from rotating details among employees to avoid compensating them at a higher level. Finding that the provision imposed substantive restrictions on management's right to assign employees by limiting its discretion to determine which particular employees would be assigned, the Authority held the provision to be inconsistent with section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. In like manner, Union Proposal 2 would prevent the Agency from assigning the specified employees to certain types of details.

The detailing of employees in this case involves a change in the work which is assigned to those employees. In this case management would be prevented from assigning to certain employees work for which AUO pay is not authorized. In National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1622 and Department of the Army, Headquarters, Vint Hill Farms Station, Warrenton, Virginia, 16 FLRA 578 (1984), Union Provision 2 required management, "insofar as possible," to refrain from assigning to employees work which was inappropriate to their positions or qualifications. The Authority determined that the provision was inconsistent with management's right, under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, to assign work because it specifically prevented the agency from requiring employees to perform certain duties.

Further, this analysis is not altered by the inclusion of the qualifying term "to attempt" in the proposal. An argument that qualifying words made a proposal nonmandatory, similar to that urged by the Union here, was addressed in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 943 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters Keesler Technical Training Center, Keesler Air Force Base, Mississippi, 19 FLRA No. 113 (1985) (Union Proposal 2). In that case, the union suggested that the proposal only required management to "attempt" to undertake certain actions which were otherwise within the realm of management rights. The Authority determined that the import of the proposal was that, where management determined that the prescribed actions were possible, it was obligated to take them. Consequently, the qualification did not cure the proposal's inconsistency with management's rights. Based on the reasoning and cases cited in Keesler Air Force Base, the Union's position in this case cannot be sustained.

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 2 substantively violates the rights to assign employees and work reserved to management by section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. It is, therefore, outside the duty to bargain.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposal 1.*/ IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the petition for review, as it relates to Union Proposal 2, be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and presents an issue concerning the negotiability of a single Union proposal.

II. Union Proposal

Motorcycle Rider Training

> [The Union] is opposed to any requirement for motorcycle rider training.

III. Positions of the Parties*/

The Agency contends that the proposal concerns a matter which is not a condition of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(12) of the Statute. Rather, the Agency asserts that the motorcycle safety program is an exercise of the installation commander's general police powers pursuant to the mandates of Highway Safety Program Standards - Applicability to Federally Administered Areas, 23 CFR § 1230. The Agency also contends that its motorcycle safety training program is an exercise of its right to determine internal security practices, and since the proposal opposes any training, it thereby interferes with management's right pursuant to section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute to determine its internal security practices.

*/ The Union did not file a Reply Brief in this case.

In its petition for review, the Union argues that the Agency has erroneously decided that the above mentioned Highway Safety Program Standards as delineated in a Department of Navy Instruction, OPNAVINST 5100.12B, apply to commuters when in actuality they only apply to those employees who use motorcycles while performing work for the Agency. The Union also argues that there is no compelling need for the proposed training program and that it does not implement a mandatory, Government-wide regulation.

IV. Analysis and Conclusion

The threshold issue in this case is whether the Union's proposal concerns a condition of employment as described under section 7103(a)(14) of the Statutue. As noted by the Union and in the absence of any alternative explanation by the Agency, completion of the proposed motorcycle safety course is a prerequisite to the Agency's issuance of a motor cycle parking decal without which an employee would be denied access to the installation. Further, the proposal in this case relates to safety training which may or may not be given during working hours. Consequently, the Authority finds that this proposal concerns a condition of employment because a nexus exists between the penalty imposed for failure to complete the training, i.e. the employee can not park or drive on the installation without a decal, and the employee's job. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2302 and U.S. Army Armor Center, and Fort Knox, Fort Knox, Kentucky, 19 FLRA No. 95 (1985) (Proposal 1); National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1363 and U.S. Army Garrison, Yongsan, Korea, 15 FLRA 134 (1984); National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 70 and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Atlanta Service Center, Georgia, 8 FLRA 37, 40 (1982) (Proposal 5). Therefore, contrary to the Agency's contention, the Union's proposal does concern a matter which is a condition of employment within the meaning of the Statute.

The Agency's remaining contention is that the Union's proposal interferes with the Agency's right to determine its internal security practices. The explicit language of the proposal opposes any requirement for motorcycle rider training. The Authority has held that an agency's right to determine internal security practices includes the right to determine policies and actions which are part of its plan to secure or safeguard its personnel and physical property. See Defense Logistics Council of American Federation of Government Employees Locals and Defense Logistics Agency, 20 FLRA No. 19 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. Defense Logistics Council of American Federation of Government Employees Locals v. FLRA, No. 85-1743 (D.C. Cir. Nov. 13, 1985). In agreement with the Agency, the Authority concludes that the proposal at issue in the present case would conflict with a preventive safety measure taken by the Agency to guard against harm to its property and personnel and, hence, would directly interfere with the Agency's right to determine its internal security practices. The proposal would, by precluding the implementation of any motorcycle rider training program, impose a substantive limitation on management's exercise of its right to determine its internal security practices, in particular the decision as to whether and the circumstances under which a motorcycle decal granting the privilege of driving on its premises will be issued. The proposal would therefore directly interfere with the Agency's right under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute to determine its internal security practices, and is thus outside the duty to bargain.

V. Order

Pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

The case is before the Authority on a motion for reconsideration filed by the Union on July 8, 1986, seeking reconsideration of the Authority's Order of June 30, 1986, dismissing the Union's exceptions (22 FLRA No. 33 (1986)). For the reasons set forth below, the Union's motion must be denied.

The Union's exceptions to the arbitrator's award were dismissed on the basis that the exceptions were untimely. It was found that the arbitrator's award was served on the parties by mail on or about April 23, 1986. Therefore, under Section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended,[1] and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended,[2] and sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of time limit here involved, the exceptions had to be filed in the National Office of the Authority not later than the close of business on May 27, 1986. However, the exceptions were not filed at the National Office until June 6, 1986. In this regard, the record established that the Union mailed the exceptions to the Authority's Atlanta Regional Office at its former address on May 22, 1986. The Atlanta Regional Office received them on June 2, 1986, and exercised due diligence in forwarding the exceptions that same day. However, they were not received by the Authority's national office until June 6, 1986. Therefore, the exceptions were untimely filed.

[1] Section 7122(b) of the Statute was amended by the Civil Service Miscellaneous Amendments Act of 1983 (Pub. L. No. 98-224, § 4, 98 Stat. 47, 48 (1984)) to provide that the 30-day period for filing exceptions to an arbitrator's award begins on the date the award is served on the filing party.

[2] 49 Fed. Reg. 22623 (1984).

In its motion for reconsideration, the Union argues that the Arbitrator received a copy of the Union's exceptions prior to May 29, 1986, and that the Atlanta Regional Office should have also received the exceptions prior to May 29, 1986. The Union also enclosed a copy of a letter dated May 29, 1986, from the Arbitrator. In addition, the Union contends that it was unaware that an unfair labor practice and an exception to an arbitrator's award had to be filed at different addresses.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, effective September 10, 1981, provides in pertinent part:

> 2429.17 Reconsideration.
> After a final decision or order of the Authority has been issued, a party to the proceeding before the Authority who can establish in its moving papers extraordinary circumstances for so doing, may move for reconsideration of such final decision or order. The motion shall be filed within 10 days after service of the Authority's decision or order. . . .

The Union's arguments do not demonstrate the existence of extraordinary circumstances within the meaning of section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. Under sections 2429.21 and 2429.24 of the Rules and Regulations, when a document is required to be filed with the Authority, the document must be received in the National Office of the Authority before the close of business on the last day of the prescribed time limit. See Bremerton Metal Trades Council, United Association, Local 631 and Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, 9 FLRA 1094 (1982); request for reconsideration denied June 24, 1982. While the Union did mail the exceptions on May 22, 1986, presumably in sufficient time to be timely received if properly addressed, exceptions to an arbitrator's award cannot be filed at a Regional Office.

Since the inception of the Authority in 1979, applicable regulations have required that exceptions to arbitration awards filed with the Authority be filed at the National Office. See The Panama Canal Commission and Maritime Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, 21 FLRA No. 38, n.5 (1986); request for reconsideration denied April 16, 1986.

Accordingly, since the Union has failed to establish the existence of extraordinary circumstances warranting reconsideration of the Authority's decision, the Union's motion is hereby denied.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator L. Lawrence Schultz filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Agency's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

Proposals concerning the agency's "Cooperative Agreement" (nonunit) employees also concern the conditions of employment of unit employees and are negotiable. The Authority held that although the subject employees were not members of the bargaining unit, knowledge of when, where and how the employees work in relation to bargaining unit employees was directly related to conditions of employment of unit employees. The Authority noted that it was common to fill unit vacancies with "Cooperative Agreement" employees, thereby reducing the size of the unit, which in turn reduces promotion or reassignment opportunities for unit employees. Further, "Cooperative Agreement" employees worked side-by-side with and were often trained by unit employees. Because the unit and nonunit employees were jointly engaged in furtherance of a common agency objective--the accomplishment of the cooperative project--the information sought by the union was necessary so that unit employees could be properly evaluated on training assignments and on their overall performance of the cooperative project. The Authority rejected the agency's contention that the information was not maintained and therefore, not agency records. It did not show nor did it appear that local management could not provide the information or that providing the information was inconsistent with Government-wide regulation. (proposals 1 and 2)

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

A proposal which requires an agency to comply with OMB Circular A-76 and all other applicable laws and regulations on cooperative agreements was nonnegotiable. The Authority held that the proposal was inconsistent with OMB Circular A-76, a Government-wide regulation, because OMB A-76 does not regulate the use of cooperative agreements. The union stated that it did not intend the proposal to require the application of OMB A-76 to cooperative agreements. The Authority concluded that if the proposal was revised to precisely reflect the union's stated intent of requiring decisions to contract out or to enter into cooperative agreements merely to comply with applicable laws and regulations, it would be negotiable. However, the union's stated intent was inconsistent with the plain language of the proposal which expressly required the application of OMB A-76 to cooperative agreements. (proposal 2)

A proposal requiring the payment of travel and per diem expenses for union representatives is negotiable. Since the parties filed their statements of position, the Authority has found in U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), that a proposal requiring payment by an agency of travel and per diem expenses of union representatives using official time, to be within the duty to bargain. The Agency made no argument that this proposal did not meet the statutory and regulatory standards discussed in U.S. Customs Service. In view of the Authority's decision, finding certain aspects of travel and per diem negotiable, certain court precedent, issued prior to the Authority's decision does not constitute a "mandate" to sustain a compelling need for the agency regulation issued pursuant to the precedent.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable, which provides that when a employee's within grade increase or ladder promotion is pending, the last audit on record will be used to assess the employee's qualifications and no further audits will conducted. The Authority held that the proposal was inconsistent with 5 CFR § 531.404(a)(1), governing within-grade increases. The proposal would require that an agency use an employee's last audit on record in determining whether the employee merits a within-grade increase. The proposal would also require that no further audits be conducted after the last audit of record. However, 5 CFR § 531.404(a)(1) specifies that "when a within-grade increase decision is not consistent with the employee's most recent rating of record a more current rating of record must be prepared." Under the proposal if there were an inconsistency between a management official's decision to grant (or deny) a within-grade increase and the results of the employee's most recent rating of record, the official would be precluded from conducting any additional audits in preparing a more current rating of record. The proposal is therefore outside the duty to bargain under § 7117(a)(1). (proposal 1)

Proposals establishing procedures relating to the assignment of cases during an audit and which seek to ameliorate the adverse effects of management's decision to change its auditing procedures are nonnegotiable. The Authority found that all of the proposals would place restrictions and impose conditions on the exercise of management's right to evaluate its employees and, hence, to assign work. The Authority has held that proposals which require an agency to sample employees work in a particular way in order to audit employees' ongoing work performance interfere with management's rights to direct employees and assign work. Section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) encompass the right to determine the quantity, quality and timeliness of employees' work, the aspects of employees' work which will be evaluated in connection with the preparation of employee performance appraisals, and the right to audit employees' work by the methods management deems most appropriate. The proposals were not appropriate arrangements because each proposed amelioration would totally preclude the agency from exercising the various aspects of the right to assign work. (proposals 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6)

A proposal which provides that employees will be credited for having processed two cases in the event of a "dual-entitlement" case, is negotiable. The Authority determined that the proposal merely established procedures for counting the work accomplished by employees in a manner which the representative believed would result in an equitable and accurate measure of each employee's quantity of production. The agency had already determined, at its sole discretion to assign work and to direct employees to accomplish the work through the establishment of performance standards. In addition, the agency retained the right to adjust the performance standards to accommodate the manner in which work was to be counted. The proposal does not directly interfere with the agency's right to assign work, but constitutes a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2). (proposal 7)

A proposal which requires that employees be provided formal training when a deficiency trend is discovered as a result of an audit is nonnegotiable. Proposals which require an agency to provide training to bargaining unit employees are outside the duty to bargain because the assignment of training constitutes an assignment of work. The union intended that the proposal impose the requirement that management provide training for employees who display deficiency trends. The proposal would require certain other employees to perform such training. In both aspects the proposal conflicts with management rights to assign work within the meaning of § 7106(a)(2)(B) by requiring the assignment of training to certain employees to the exclusion of other responsibilities. Further, the proposal did not constitute merely a remedial procedure leading to the fair and equitable application of of audit results. (proposal 8)

DIGEST NOTES

The grievance concerned management's determination to contract out telephone operator functions and alleged that the activity had violated the parties collective bargaining agreement by not providing a copy of the bid solicitation package. The arbitrator found that the activity had violated the parties' agreement by not providing a copy of the solicitation package. As a remedy, the arbitrator ordered that the procurement action be cancelled until the provisions of the parties' agreement were fulfilled.

In its first exception to the arbitrator's award, the agency contended that the award was deficient as contrary to law and regulation in finding the grievance arbitrable. The union contended, with respect to the procurement action, that had the agreement not been violated, the activity's determination to contract out might have been precluded by applicable procurement law and regulation. The Authority held that a grievance claiming that a procurement action was not in accordance with applicable procurement law and regulation is grievable and arbitrable under the Statute and is not precluded by law or regulation. Because the grievance challenged the propriety under procurement law and regulation of the disputed procurement action, the grievance was arbitrable.

In its second exception to the arbitrator's award the agency asserted that the award ordering cancellation of the procurement action was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(B). In Blytheville AFB, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986), the Authority held that under the Statute and procurement law and regulation, arbitrators are not authorized to cancel a procurement action. Arbitrators are authorized to sustain grievances challenging a decision to contract out and direct agencies to reconstruct the action only on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. The arbitrator did not make the required finding in this case, therefore he was not authorized to cancel the procurement action or to sustain the grievance to the extent that it directly challenged the procurement action, and he could not have properly directed reconstruction. The award was found deficient under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The Authority noted that nothing in Blytheville AFB prevented the arbitrator from finding, as he did, that the activity violated the parties collective bargaining agreement. Nor was the arbitrator precluded from sustaining the grievance to the extent of the claimed violation of the agreement and from awarding a proper and appropriate remedy for that violation. The Authority concluded that the award should be modified because the arbitrators remedy was designed without the guidance of Blytheville AFB , and ordered that the activity abide by the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement.

DIGEST NOTES

The grievance concerned management's determination to contract out telephone operator functions and alleged that the activity had violated the parties collective bargaining agreement by not providing a copy of the pertinent statement of work and other acquisition information prior to the issuance of the bid solicitation. The arbitrator found that the activity had violated the parties' agreement by not providing a copy of the specification of contractor wages. As a remedy, the arbitrator ordered the activity to cease contracting out the disputed functions and implementing a reduction-in-force because of the contracting out until the activity complied with the requirements of the parties' agreement. The arbitrator further ordered the activity to restore to their jobs any employees affected by a reduction-in-force caused by the procurement action.

In its first exception to the arbitrator's award, the agency contended that the award was deficient as contrary to law and regulation in finding the grievance arbitrable. The union contended with respect to the procurement action that had the agreement not been violated, the activity's determination to contract out might have been precluded by applicable procurement law and regulation. the Statute and is not precluded by law or regulation. Because the grievance challenged the propriety under procurement law and regulation of the disputed procurement action, the grievance was arbitrable.

In its second exception to the arbitrator's award the agency asserted that the award ordering cancellation of the procurement action was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(B). In Blytheville AFB, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986), the Authority held that under the Statute and procurement law and regulation, arbitrators are not authorized to cancel a procurement action. Arbitrators are authorized to sustain grievances challenging a decision to contract out and direct agencies to reconstruct the action only on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. The arbitrator did not make the required finding in this case, therefore he was not authorized to cancel the procurement action or to sustain the grievance to the extent that it directly challenged the procurement action, and he could not have properly directed reconstruction. The arbitrator's order that the activity cease contracting out telephone services constituted a cancellation of the procurement action and therefore was deficient under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The award directing the activity to cease any RIF is also deficient because it follows directly from the cancellation. The Authority noted that nothing in Blytheville AFB prevented the arbitrator from finding, as he did, that the activity violated the parties collective bargaining agreement. Nor was the arbitrator precluded from sustaining the grievance to the extent of the claimed violation of the agreement and from awarding a proper and appropriate remedy for that violation. The Authority concluded that the award should be modified because the arbitrator's remedy was designed without the guidance of Blytheville AFB, and ordered that the activity abide by the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal to reestablish a committee, and to add equal numbers of labor representatives, is nonnegotiable because it interferes with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The duties of the committee involved the deliberative process of the agency in making decisions and resolving problems "with funding, priorities, or implementation of specific projects." The proposal to require union representatives on such a committee constituted an assignment of work to individuals not chosen by management.

A proposal to reestablish a committee, and to add equal numbers of labor representatives interfered with management's right to determine its organization. The committee was created by regulation to address and resolve problems in the agency's safety and health deficiency abatement program. The decision to deestablish the committee and redistribute its functions determines the manner in which these agency responsibilities will be accomplished. The proposal's requirement to reverse that decision, and to add union representatives, interferes with management's decision as to the formal organizational structure by which it makes decisions. Therefore, the proposal directly interfered with management's rights under § 7106(a)(1).

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which requires management to make "every conceivable attempt" to avoid requiring an employee to take annual leave or leave without pay is nonnegotiable. The proposal effectively could require management to forego its plan to partially close down if more employees wanted to work (rather than take leave) than were called for by the management plan. The proposal could result in depriving management of its rights to require employees to take leave, and ultimately prevent the closing of operations, contrary to management's rights to assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The "every conceivable attempt" language does not limit the proposal because the Authority has held that proposals requiring an agency to make an effort to accomplish an objective which is outside the duty to bargain are themselves nonnegotiable. The proposal excessively interferes with management's rights and is not an appropriate arrangement. (proposal 1)

A proposal which requires an agency to assign work "for which the employee is qualified" is not nonnegotiable on that ground alone. The Authority rejected the agency's argument that such language could result in the assignment of an over-qualified employee at higher pay than necessary. As long as the agency can set qualifications, there is nothing to preclude it from limiting its definition of "qualified" to those employees who are not over-qualified or whose work would not require the agency to pay a higher rate than normal for the job. Thus, management's discretion to select and assign employees based on job related characteristics is not limited by the language of the proposal. (proposal 1)

A proposal providing that annual leave or leave without pay will not be denied unless there is an emergency or "work demands leave no other alternatives;" and that such leave requests will not be denied where there are other qualified employees who want to work, is negotiable. The agency's right to determine when work will be performed was unaffected because there was no indication that the phrase "unless . . . work demands leave no other alternatives" was intended to restrict management's control over deciding and defining what are the demands of work. As long as management can determine what constitutes "work demands," it controls completely any decision as to scheduling or delaying all aspects of accomplishment of its mission, consistent with any decision to close during holiday periods. Further a proposal to allow qualified volunteers to work in lieu of other employees does not interfere with management's right to make work assignments. So long as management can determine the qualifications for a given assignment, such a proposal constitutes a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2). The proposal merely provides that selection among equally qualified employees, as defined by management, will take into account volunteers rather than require another employee to work who prefers to take available leave. (proposal 3)

A proposal is negotiable, which provides that prior to forcing employees to take annual leave or leave without pay, where there are more employees desiring to work than there is work available, work assignments will be given to qualified employees with the greatest seniority. The Authority held that so long as the proposal does not limit management's right to define the "demands of work, it does not interfere with management's authority to decide what work will be performed. By preserving management's right to define the category and qualifications of employees to do a job, the proposal to give seniority preference to employees desiring to work rather that take forced leave is negotiable as long as those on the seniority list are determined to be equally qualified under criteria determined by management. ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Justin C. Smith filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reasons that follow, it has been determined that the Agency's exceptions must be dismissed as untimely.

This case involves a dispute submitted by the parties to the Arbitrator concerning official time for representational activities. By agreement of the parties, a two-phase arbitration process was established to resolve the basic dispute and the resulting numerous individual grievances. The first phase involved the interpretation of the official time provisions of the Statute and the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In the second phase, the Arbitrator held hearings to resolve, by bench decisions when practicable, specific grievances pending in the various regions of the Agency. The exceptions in this case have been filed to bench decisions of the Arbitrator rendered on May 16, 1985, in which he awarded travel time and preparation time for representatives in the Agency's Boston field office. In December 1985, the Agency requested that the Arbitrator clarify whether his bench decisions were to be considered final awards. The Arbitrator responded to the Agency's request by letter of January 22, 1986, essentially reiterating his position as originally announced in January 1984, that bench awards were to be considered final on the day they were rendered. The Agency then filed its exceptions with the Authority on March 4, 1986.

Under section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended,1/ section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended,2/ which amendments are applicable to these exceptions, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of the time limit involved in this case, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award of May 16, 1985, had to be filed with the Authority by the close of business on June 14, 1985.

The Authority has repeatedly indicated that a party's request for clarification of an award does not operate to extend the time limit for filing exceptions. Portsmouth Naval Shipyard and Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, 15 FLRA 181 (1984). Only when an arbitrator in response to a clarification request modifies an award and the modification gives rise to the deficiencies alleged in the exceptions has the Authority held that the filing period for exceptions began with the arbitrator's response to the request for clarification. See U.S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management, Eugene District Office and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1911, 6 FLRA 401, 403 n. 2 (1981). In this case, however, it is clear that in his response of January 22, 1986, the Arbitrator did not modify his bench decisions of May 16, 1985, so as to give rise to the deficiencies alleged by the Agency. To the contrary, the Arbitrator essentially confirmed his January 1984 announcement that bench decisions were to be final when rendered and nothing in his January 22 letter constitutes a clarification of any decision regarding the individual grievances. Thus, the Agency is in effect seeking Authority review of the May 16, 1985, awards and the exceptions filed on March 4, 1986, are clearly untimely. Moreover, from the record before the Authority it is apparent that the Agency considered other related bench awards of this Arbitrator in the parties' official time dispute to be final when rendered and ripe for filing exceptions with the Authority. See American Federation of Government Employees and Social Security Administration, 21 FLRA No. 14 (1986); U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 22 FLRA No. 16 (1986).

1/ Section 7122(b) of the Statute was amended by the Civil Service Miscellaneous Amendments Act of 1983 (Pub. L. No. 98-224, § 4, 98 Stat. 47, 48 (1984) to provide that the 30-day period for filing exceptions to an arbitrator's award begins on the date the award is served on the filing party.

2/ 49 Fed. Reg. 22623 (1984).

Accordingly, and apart from other considerations, the Agency's exceptions are dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of three Union proposals.

II. Background

Two of the three Union proposals concern Cooperative Agreements which are devices used by the Agency to accomplish certain projects. According to the Agency, a Cooperative Agreement may be one of several types of agreements providing for mutual undertaking and contribution between a Federal agency and a cooperator to perform research, extension, information or education service or work. In this case, cooperators are State Land-Grant colleges and universities or State Agricultural Experiment Stations.

There are three types of such Cooperative agreements commonly used by the Agency:

A Broadform Cooperative Agreement is an agreement between the Agricultural Research Service (ARS) and other parties covering a broad area of cooperative research, extension, information or education work where specific details are planned jointly as the project proceeds. Such an agreement may cover a broad area and deal with numerous individual research problems. Federal and State resources may be brought to bear on a problem by mixing funds, personnel, equipment, lab space, soil plots and computer use.

A General Cooperative Agreement is also an agreement between the ARS and other parties. It describes in detail a particular research, extension, information or education program usually of long duration and funded on a fiscal year basis.

A Specific Cooperative Agreement is similarly an agreement between ARS and other parties, describing in detail a specific research, extension, information or education project. The duration may be short or could extend up to five years.

Broadform agreements are a means of providing nonprofessional personnel to support research programs. The other two types of agreements make available professional as well as nonprofessional personnel.

Subsequent to the statements of positions by the parties summarized below, the Agency distributed a memorandum to all employees of the Agricultural Research Service dated September 1985, and notified the Union by letter dated November 15, 1985, announcing discontinuance of use of Broadform Cooperative Agreements by October 1986. In the letter to the Union, the Agency stated that it had already discontinued the use of General Cooperative Agreements. As these two types of agreements would no longer be used, the Agency stated that the issues giving rise to the Union's concerns no longer applied and asked the Union to withdraw its petition with respect to the two proposals involving Cooperative Agreements. By letter of December 17, 1985, the Union declined to withdraw the petition as "not in the best interest of the Union."

There is no basis for a finding that the Agency's announced intention to discontinue some or all of the Cooperative Agreements has rendered Union Proposals 1 and 2 moot. In any event, the continued existence of such agreements is not itself a prerequisite to finding negotiable proposals like the ones involved here which require that, to the extent Cooperative Agreements exist, they will be administered in accordance with applicable laws and regulations and the identity of Cooperative Agreement employees will be furnished to the Union. Accordingly, we proceed to consider the parties' contentions concerning the negotiability of those proposals.

III. Union Proposals 1 and 2

Proposal 1:

> Section 4 Upon request, location management will provide the union President with an updated list of Cooperative Agreement Employees.

Proposal 2:

> Section 6 Area and location management agree to comply with OMB Circular No. A-76 and all other applicable laws and regulations on contracting out and cooperative agreements. [Only the underlined portion of this proposal is in dispute].

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Proposal 1 is nonnegotiable because "it does not have custody over the requested information and it does not maintain lists of cooperative agreement employees in the regular course of business. Further, it is the Agency's position that the information cannot be considered 'agency records' subject to disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act." Agency Statement at 6. Finally, the Agency contends that the Proposal 1 does not concern a condition of employment of unit employees and that it thus has no bargaining obligation under the Statute.

The Union's position is that Proposal 1 concerns conditions of employment of unit employees, and that the Agency's arguments regarding its records and the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) are irrelevant.

The Agency's position as to Union Proposal 2 is that, like Proposal 1, it is nonnegotiable because it does not concern conditions of employment of unit employees. In addition, the Agency asserts the proposal is inconsistent with Government-wide rules and regulations. The Union takes issue with both arguments.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Union Proposal 1

Whether Union Proposal 1 is negotiable depends, first, on whether a proposal for management to give the Union a list of Cooperative Agreement employees concerns conditions of employment of unit employees.

Although Cooperative Agreement employees are not members of the bargaining unit, we agree with the Union that knowledge of when, where and how these employees work in relation to unit employees is directly related to conditions of employment of unit employees. Specifically, and without contravention by the Agency, the Union points out that it is common to fill unit vacancies with Cooperative Agreement employees, thereby reducing the size of the unit, which in turn reduces promotion or reassignment opportunities for unit employees. Further, Cooperative Agreement employees "work side-by-side with and are often trained by unit employees." Union Reply Brief at 3. Because Cooperative Agreement employees and unit employees are jointly engaged in furtherance of a common agency objective--the accomplishment of a cooperative project--the information sought by the Union is necessary so that unit employees can be properly evaluated on training assignments and on their overall performance of the cooperative project. As the Authority concludes that Union Proposal 1 does affect working conditions of unit employees, it is necessary to review the other bases for the Agency's assertion that the proposal is nonnegotiable.

As to the Agency's arguments that it does not maintain the data sought and that such information cannot be considered Agency records subject to disclosure under the FOIA, the Agency does not contend, nor does anything in the record establish, that local management could not provide such information. Further, the Agency does not assert, nor does it otherwise appear, that providing this information would be inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. We therefore reject these Agency arguments as bases for finding the proposal nonnegotiable.

In view of the foregoing, the Authority finds that the proposal that "upon request, location management will provide the Union President with a list of Cooperative Agreement employees" is negotiable.

2. Union Proposal 2

For the reasons set out above in the discussion of Proposal 1, the Authority finds that Proposal 2 concerns conditions of employment of unit employees. The Agency also asserts that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it is inconsistent with Government-wide rules and regulations. Essentially, it argues that an agreement to "comply with OMB Circular No. A-76 and all other applicable laws and regulations on contracting out and Cooperative agreements" is nonnegotiable as to the underlined phrase because Circular No. A-76 does not regulate the use of cooperative agreements. The Union states that since the reference to OMB Circular No. A-76 is clearly followed by "and all applicable laws and regulations," it "does not intend, and the proposal does not require, OMB A-76 to be applied to the administration of cooperative agreements." Union Response at 4. Rather, it states that the proposal was inclusive because of the Union's "legitimate interest in [assuring] the employer's compliance with applicable procedures when it exercise[s] either the right to contract out or to enter a cooperative agreement." Id. at 4-5.

If this proposal were revised to more precisely implement the Union's stated intent of requiring decisions to contract out or to enter into cooperative agreements merely to comply with applicable laws and regulations, it would be negotiable. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of EEOC Locals and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 10 FLRA 3 (1982) (Proposal 1), enforced sub nom. EEOC v. FLRA, 744 F.2d 842 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. dismissed, 54 U.S.L.W. 4408 (U.S. April 29, 1986) (per curiam). However, the Union's stated intent is inconsistent with the plain language of the proposal which expressly requires OMB Circular A-76 to be applied to cooperative agreements.

Consequently, although we find that Union Proposal 2 concerns conditions of employment of unit employees, we conclude that to the extent the proposal requires OMB Circular No. A-76 to be applied to Cooperative Agreements, it is inconsistent with that Government-wide regulation and therefore outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

IV. Union Proposal 3

> Section 17 Any union representative required to represent an employee at a location other than his own will be given official time, travel, and per diem. [Only the underlined portion of this proposal is in dispute].

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable because (1) there is no entitlement to travel and per diem expenses for Union representatives either by law or collective bargaining and (2) it is inconsistent with a published Agency regulation for which there is a compelling need.

The Union disputes in detail the Agency's argument regarding the legality of negotiated provisions for travel and per diem expenses for Union representatives, and argues that the Agency has not established a compelling need for its published regulation under the rules and regulations of the Authority.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

Since the parties filed their statements of position in this case, the Authority has found a proposal which would require payment by an agency of the travel expenses of Union representatives using official time to be within the duty to bargain. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986).

In Customs Service, the Authority found that agencies have discretion, under the Travel Expense Act and implementing regulations, to determine whether and under what circumstances travel related to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the primary interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for which employees may receive appropriate expenses from Federal funds. The exercise of that discretion was held to be subject to the negotiation process. The Agency here makes no specific argument that this proposal concerning the circumstances under which otherwise appropriate travel expenses would be payable does not meet the statutory and regulatory standards discussed in Customs Service. Moreover, the proposal does not preclude case-by-case determinations as to the appropriateness of specific travel and expenses which are necessary and proper under law and governing regulation. See also American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National EPA Council and Environmental Protection Agency, 21 FLRA No. 80 (1980) (Union Proposal 1). For the reasons stated in those cases, the Authority concludes that Union Proposal 3 is negotiable, unless it conflicts with an Agency regulation for which there is a compelling need.

The Agency issued Personnel Letter No. 711-10 on May 16, 1984, "to establish procedures for agencies as a result of the . . . decision of the Supreme Court" in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 464 U.S. 89 (1983) (BATF), and OPM guidance contained in FPM Letter 711-162. The Personnel Letter stated as background that travel and per diem payments to Union negotiators are nonnegotiable and that such payments could only be made unilaterally by the Agency. The letter also set out various procedures regarding payment of travel and per diem as determined by the Agency. In its statement of position, the Agency asserts that a compelling need exists for this regulation because it implements a "mandate" to the Agency flowing from the Supreme Court's decision in BATF, cited above. The "mandate," according to the Agency, is that agencies comply with the requirements of a decision of the Comptroller General, 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966), cited in BATF. However, in view of the Authority's decisions subsequent to BATF finding that certain aspects of travel and per diem are negotiable, BATF does not preclude negotiating over travel and per diem expenses, nor would it constitute a "mandate" to sustain a compelling need for the Agency's regulation under section 2424.11(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. See National Federation of Federal Employees and U.S. Department of the Interior, U.S. Geological Survey, Eastern Mapping Agency, 21 FLRA No. 127 (1986) (Provision 3). Therefore, Union Proposal 3 is found to be negotiable.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review, as it relates to Proposal 2, found to be nonnegotiable, be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain on Union Proposals 1 and 3.*/

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of eight Union proposals in connection with changes made by the Agency in its procedures for evaluating employees.

II. Union Proposal 1

1. 6-If an employee's Within-Grade Salary Increase (WIGI) or ladder promotion is pending, the last audit on record will be used to assess the employee's qualifications for as long as the audit record is maintained in the SF-7B Extension File. No further audits will be conducted.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal conflicts with Office of Personnel Management (OPM) regulations, as stated in the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM), Chapter 531. The Agency also contends that the proposal would require promotion decisions to be based on a single audit record which would be the sole criterion for the decision.

The Union contends that the proposal is fully consistent with the requirements of law and that the Agency's position reveals that it has misunderstood the nature of the proposal. The Union asserts that the proposal falls within the Agency's duty to bargain under section 7106(b)(2) and (3) of the Statute.

B. Analysis

5 U.S.C. § 4302 requires agencies to establish performance appraisal systems under Office of Personnel Management (OPM) prescribed Government-wide regulations,[1] which, among other things, shall provide for recognizing and rewarding employees whose performance so warrants. 5 U.S.C. §§ 5335 and 5336 specifically govern the granting of within-grade increases. Subsequent to the filings in this case, OPM revised its regulations implementing these sections of title 5. OPM's revised regulations concerning within-grade increases appear at 5 C.F.R. § 531.404 ("Earning within-grade increase."). Generally speaking, management decisions regarding such increases are made according to an OPM-approved Performance Management Plan (PMP). Under OPM guidelines, each agency is required to establish performance standards against which an employee's work is measured. An employee's performance evaluation results in a written "rating of record." In order to receive a within-grade increase, the employee's performance of the duties and responsibilities of his or her assigned position must be at an acceptable level of performance, which is defined elsewhere in the regulations as "Fully Successful."

In terms of this proposal, the audits to which it refers must be a part of an OPM-approved PMP for evaluating employees' performance or it would conflict with Government-wide regulations. That is, if audits are not part of an OPM-approved PMP, they cannot legally be used for making within-grade or ladder promotion determinations. Moreover, assuming that the audits referred to in the proposal are part of the Agency's OPM-approved performance appraisal system, the Authority finds that the proposal is inconsistent with 5 C.F.R. § 531.404(a)(1) of OPM's revised regulations governing within-grade salary increases. The proposal would require that an agency use an employee's last audit on record in determining whether the employee merits a within-grade salary increase. The proposal would also require that no further audits be conducted after the last audit on record. However, 5 C.F.R § 531.404(a)(1) specifies that "when a within-grade increase decision is not consistent with the employee's most recent rating of record a more current rating of record must be prepared." This means, for example, that if the management official responsible for determining whether an employee merits a within-grade increase decides that the increase should be granted (or denied), the decision must be consistent with the employee's most recent rating of record. That is, the decision to grant such an increase (or to deny such an increase) must be validated by the results of the employee's most recent performance evaluation in order for the within-grade increase to be approved (or to be disapproved). If there is an inconsistency between what the management official believes the employee should receive and the results of the employee's most recent rating of record, the regulation requires that a more current rating of record be prepared to be used as the basis for an acceptable level of competence determination for the within-grade increase.

[1] The Authority has previously determined that Office of Personnel Management requirements codified at title 5 of the Code of Federal Regulations are Government-wide regulations within the meaning of section 7117(a) of the Statute. Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, AFL-CIO and Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 4 FLRA 232, 233 (1980).

Under the proposal, if there were an inconsistency between a management official's decision to grant (or to deny) a within-grade increase and the results of the employee's most recent rating of record, the official would be precluded from conducting any additional audits in preparing a more current rating of record. However, under the assumption that audits are a part of the Agency's OPM-approved performance appraisal system, 5 C.F.R. § 531.404(a)(1) requires the Agency to perform a new audit in the evaluation of the employee to prepare a more current rating of record. Therefore, the proposal is inconsistent with this section of the C.F.R.

C. Conclusion

The audits referred to in Union Proposal 1 must be part of an OPM-approved performance appraisal system or the proposal conflicts with OPM regulations. Moreover, assuming that the audits referred to in the proposal are part of an OPM-approved performance appraisal system, for the reason cited above, the proposal is inconsistent with 5 C.F.R. § 531.404(a)(1). Therefore, Union Proposal 1 is outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute. In view of this holding, section 7106(b)(2) and (3) are not applicable. See, for example, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and Department of the Army, Kansas City District, Corps of Engineers, 21 FLRA No. 31 (1986).

III. Union Proposals 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6

2. 8-On the day prior to the first day of the audit, the authorizer will be supplied with cases.

3. 9-The authorizer will be given cases only from his/her terminal digit area to maintain the integrity of the terminal digit system.

4. 10-Employees will not be required to work out-of-module cases during the audit.

5. 17-To ensure uniformity, each employee will receive the same number of the same types of cases.

6. 30-Awards will be distributed on a terminal digit basis and may be selected before or after screening.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that all of these proposals conflict with its right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. In addition, the Agency contends that Union Proposal 2 also violates section 7106(b)(1).

The Union, on the other hand, disagrees with the Agency's view that these proposals violate management's right to assign work. Rather, the Union contends that it is attempting to negotiate either procedures relating to the assignment of cases during an audit or the impact and implementation of that assignment.

B. Analysis

1. Right to Assign Work Under Section 7106(a)(2)(B)

Section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute reserves to management the right to assign work. It is well established that proposals which place restrictions on the exercise of management's right to assign work are outside the duty to bargain. Specifically, the Authority has held that proposals which require an agency to sample employees' work in a particular way in order to audit employees' ongoing work performance interfere with management's right to "direct employees" and "assign work." In so holding, the Authority has stated that section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) encompass the right to determine the quantity, quality, and timeliness of employees' work, the aspects of employees' work which will be evaluated in connection with the preparation of employee performance appraisals, and the right to audit employees' work by the methods management deems most appropriate for such purposes. See Social Security Administration, Northeastern Program Service Center, 18 FLRA No. 60 (1985) (Union Proposals 1, 2, 5 and 7); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 603, 631 (1980) (Union Proposal XVI), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982).

All the proposals here would place restrictions and impose conditions on the exercise of management's right to evaluate its employees and, hence, to assign work. Specifically, Union Proposal 2 would require management to assign cases prior to an audit rather than the day of the audit and unduly restricts management in the exercise of its right to assign work when it chooses to do so. Union Proposal 3, which would restrict the assignment of cases to those in the employees' terminal digit area, would prevent management from assigning cases outside the terminal digit area. Union Proposal 4 would preclude the assignment of a certain type of case ("out-of-module") to employees undergoing an audit. Union Proposal 5 would prevent management from assigning different types or numbers of cases to employees subject to an audit. While the Union claims that this proposal merely requires that the Agency exercise its right to assign work in a fair manner, the proposal would in reality require the assignment of the same number and types of cases to employees undergoing an audit, thereby clearly interfering with that right. Finally, Union Proposal 6 would require the assignment of certain types of claims ("awards") on a terminal digit basis, that is, based on a claimant's social security number, again limiting management in the distribution of work assignments.

2. "Appropriate Arrangements" Under Section 7106(b)(3)

Whether a proposal constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute depends upon whether the proposal "excessively interferes" with the exercise of management's rights. A threshold question is whether a proposal is in fact intended to be an arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of its rights. National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 slip op. at 8, (1986).

On the basis of the record, the Authority finds that Union Proposals 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 are intended as arrangements for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's rights. Specifically, these proposals are intended by the Union to ameliorate the adverse effects on employees as a result of changes made by the Agency in the auditing procedures by which employees are evaluated, pursuant to the Agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. However, the Authority finds that in each case the proposed amelioration would totally preclude the Agency from exercising the various aspects of the right to assign work covered by the proposals. A proposed amelioration which totally abrogates the exercise of a management right clearly does not constitute an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3). See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782 v. FLRA, 702 F.2d 1183, 1188 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981).

3. Union Proposal 2 and Section 7106(b)(1)

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 2 violates section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute by proposing "how" and "when" work will be performed. However, the Agency fails to demonstrate in what respect the proposal concerns the technology, methods and means of performing work so as to be negotiable only at the election of the Agency. Therefore, the Authority finds that the Agency's contention in this regard must be denied.

C. Conclusion

Union Proposals 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 directly interfere with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, and therefore do not constitute negotiable procedures under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. Moreover, the proposals excessively interfere with management's right to assign work, so as to make them inappropriate as arrangements, under section 7106(b)(3), for employees adversely affected by the Agency's exercise of that right. In addition, the Agency has failed to demonstrate that Union Proposal 2 violates section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. The Authority concludes, for the reasons and cases cited above, that the Agency is under no obligation to bargain concerning these proposals.

IV. Union Proposal 7

> 7. 21-In the event of dual-entitlement cases, the authorizer will be given credit for having processed two cases.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency states that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with the right to assign work. The Agency further contends that it is under no obligation to bargain over this proposal because there has been no change in its practice of crediting a dual-entitlement case as one case.

The Union asserts that there is no merit to the Agency's statement that the proposal interferes with the assignment of work. In addition, while not disputing the Agency's contention that no change has taken place in its practice of crediting dual-entitlement cases, the Union nevertheless claims that this is not a basis for finding the proposal to be outside the duty to bargain.

B. Analysis

1. Assignment of Work Under Section 7106(a)(2)(B)

The Authority has previously held that the right to assign work, under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, includes, among other things, the right to determine what work shall be done, how it shall be done, by which employee it shall be done, and to determine the quantity, quality and timeliness of work required of an employee. See National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 7 FLRA 235, 238 (1981). The Authority has also held that proposals which substantively restrict management in its establishment of performance standards are inconsistent with section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute because they improperly interfere with management's right to direct employees and to assign work. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769 (1980), aff'd sub nom. NTEU v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982). The issue in terms of this proposal is whether, by requiring the Agency to give employees performing the work associated with dual-entitlement cases credit for having processed two cases, the proposal would in any way infringe upon management's right to assign work. In agreement with the Union, the Authority finds that it does not.

In Department of the Treasury, 7 FLRA 235 at 238, the Authority determined that five union proposals relating to the counting of work for purposes of employee evaluation were within the duty to bargain. In that case, as here, the proposals merely established procedures for counting the work accomplished by employees in a manner which the representative believed would result in an equitable and accurate measure of each employee's quantity of production. The Agency had already determined, at its sole discretion, to assign work and to direct employees to accomplish the work through the establishment of performance standards. In addition, the agency retained the right to adjust the performance standards to accommodate the manner in which work was to be counted. For the same reasons that the proposals in that case were found to be negotiable, the Agency's contention here that Union Proposal 7 interferes with management's right to assign work, under section 7106(a)(2)(B), must be denied.

2. The Duty to Bargain

The Authority will decide here only the negotiability issues raised under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Statute. Insofar as the Agency questions its obligation to bargain over this proposal because of its belief that there has been no change in its practice of crediting a dual-entitlement case as one case, the resolution of this question may be pursued in the context of other appropriate proceedings. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 at 306, n. 6 (1984).

C. Conclusion

The Authority concludes, for the reasons and cases cited above, that Union Proposal 7 does not directly interfere with the Agency's right to assign work, but constitutes a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. Moreover, insofar as the parties disagree concerning their mutual obligation to bargain over the proposal, such a disagreement may be pursued in the forum most appropriate for its resolution.

V. Union Proposal 8

> 8. 31-If deficiency trends are noted by the Technical Assistant as a result of the audit, the employee responsible will be subject to formal training by EDTS personnel, if the employee so desires, prior to being placed on any partial or 100% audit The parties agree, of course, that the intent of the audit is positive, not punitive; that it is a method to determine the need for, and extent of, additional training or re-training.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal interferes with the right to assign work, under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, because it would require management to provide training to its employees. In addition, the Agency states that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it does not address management's implementing procedures or any identifiable adverse impact of management's decision regarding the selection of cases for audit.

The Union states that the proposal is intended as a remedial procedure to insure that the auditing of particular employees will be fair and equitable, and that the application of particular audits to employees would be grievable. The Union also states that the clear intent of the proposal is to authorize training to employees who display deficiency trends, which would be conducted by employees in the Employee Development and Training Section (EDTS).

B. Analysis

It is well established that proposals which require an agency to provide training to bargaining unit employees are outside the duty to bargain because the assignment of training constitutes an assignment of work. See, for example, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Local 121 and U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C., 8 FLRA 188 (1982) (Proposal 1); International Association of Fire Fighters, AFL-CIO, CLC, Local F-116 and Department of the Air Force, Vandenberg Air Force Base, California, 7 FLRA 752 (1982). By its own admission, the Union intends this proposal to require the training of employees who display deficiency trends. The proposal also would require EDTS employees to perform such training. In both respects the proposal conflicts with management's right to assign work within the meaning of section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute by requiring management to assign a specific type of work (training) to certain employees to the exclusion of other responsibilities management might wish to assign to such employees. Contrary to the Union's contention, therefore, the proposal does not constitute merely a remedial procedure leading to the fair and equitable application of audit results. Rather, the proposal would directly interfere with management's statutory right to assign work. See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Madison Region, 21 FLRA No. 104 (1986) (Union Proposal 4).

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 8 directly interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, and therefore is not a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2). Accordingly, the Agency is under no obligation to bargain concerning the proposal.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposal 7.[2] Further, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review as to Union Proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 8 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C. August 15, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Lloyd L. Byars filed by the Department of the Army (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute before the Arbitrator concerned management's determination to contract out telephone operator functions. The grievance alleged that the Activity had violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement by not providing a copy of the bid solicitation package, which included a prevailing wage determination, to the Union at the time the package was sent to prospective contractors. The Union argued that it was deprived of a meaningful opportunity to affect the decision of whether to contract out. In support of its argument, the Union claimed that if it had received the bid solicitation package when the package was sent to the contractors, the Union might have persuaded the Department of Labor to direct a new prevailing wage survey which could have precluded the Activity's decision to contract out. The Arbitrator found that the Activity had violated the parties' agreement by not timely providing the Union a copy of the solicitation package. With respect to a remedy, the Arbitrator rejected the Activity's argument that to cancel the procurement the Union had to establish that but for the Activity's failure to timely provide the Union with a copy of the solicitation package, the decision of whether to contract out would have been different. The Arbitrator stated that it was impossible to know what the result would have been if the agreement had not been violated. Instead, he determined that it was sufficient for the Union to establish that the Activity violated the parties' agreement. The Arbitrator therefore sustained the grievance and, as a remedy, ordered that the procurement action be cancelled until the provisions of the parties' agreement were fulfilled.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception, the Agency contends that by finding the grievance to be arbitrable, the award is deficient as contrary to law and regulation.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that the Agency fails to establish that by finding the grievance to be arbitrable, the award is deficient. To the extent that the grievance claimed a violation of the collective bargaining agreement, the Agency fails to establish that the matter of the Activity's compliance with the terms of the agreement was not properly grievable and arbitrable. To the extent that the grievance subjected the disputed procurement action to arbitral review, the Agency likewise fails to establish that the award is deficient. As noted, the Union ultimately contended with respect to the procurement action that had the agreement not been violated, the Activity's determination to contract out might have been precluded by applicable procurement law and regulation.

The Authority has previously indicated that a grievance claiming that a procurement action was not in accordance with applicable procurement law and regulation is grievable and arbitrable under the Statute and is not precluded by law or regulation. See General Services Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 236, 22 FLRA No. 84 (1986); Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986); American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1904, AFL-CIO and United States Army Communications and Electronics Materiel Readiness Command, 16 FLRA 358 (1984); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of EEOC Locals and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 10 FLRA 3 (1982) (Proposal 1), enforced sub nom. EEOC v. FLRA, 744 F.2d 842 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. dismissed, 106 S. Ct. 1678 (1986) (per curiam). Further, our decision in Congressional Research Employees Association and The Library of Congress, 23 FLRA No. 15 (1986), where we found a grievance challenging a procurement action on the basis of a provision of the collective bargaining agreement not to be arbitrable, is distinguishable. In contrast to that case, the Union in this case is not seeking to enforce a provision which is inconsistent with the Activity's right to contract out. Accordingly, because the grievance challenged the propriety under procurement law and regulation of the disputed procurement action, the grievance was arbitrable.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception, the Agency primarily contends that the Arbitrator's award ordering cancellation of the procurement action is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986), the Authority addressed for the first time the remedial authority of an arbitrator in resolving grievances disputing determinations by agencies to contract out agency work. In sum, the Authority held that under the Statute and procurement law and regulation, arbitrators are not authorized to cancel a procurement action. We also held that arbitrators are authorized to sustain grievances challenging a decision to contract out and direct agencies to reconstruct the actions on specific grounds only.

Applying our decision in Blytheville AFB to this case, we conclude that the Arbitrator was not authorized either to cancel the procurement action or to sustain the grievance to the extent that it directly challenged the action. The Arbitrator's order that the Activity cancel the procurement action is clearly deficient under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. We also find that the Arbitrator was not authorized to sustain the challenge to the disputed procurement action and could not have properly directed reconstruction in this case. The Union essentially claimed that had it been timely provided with the prevailing wage determination, it might have been able to preclude, in accordance with procurement law and regulation, the Activity's determination to contract out. However, the Arbitrator stated that it was impossible to conclude whether the contracting out of telephone services could have occurred consistent with procurement law and regulation if the agreement had not been violated. Accordingly, his award sustaining the challenge to the procurement action is deficient.

We decided in Blytheville AFB, slip op. at 6, that an arbitrator can sustain a challenge to a procurement action and order reconstruction only on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. Since the Arbitrator made no such specific finding in this case, he was not authorized to sustain the grievance to the extent that it directly challenged the procurement action, and he could not have properly directed reconstruction.

We note, however, that nothing in Blytheville AFB precluded the Arbitrator from finding, as he did, that the Activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement by not timely providing the Union a copy of the solicitation package. Nor was the Arbitrator precluded from sustaining the grievance to the extent of the claimed violation of the agreement and from awarding a proper and appropriate remedy for that violation. Because the Arbitrator awarded a remedy for this violation without the guidance that has now been provided by Blytheville AFB, we find that the award should be modified to provide an appropriate remedy. The Activity bargained and agreed to these provisions as part of the collective bargaining agreement. We admonish the Activity to abide by these provisions and will order a remedy accordingly.

V. DECISION

For the reasons stated above, the Arbitrator's award is modified to provide as follows:

> The grievance is sustained to the extent of the claimed violation of Article 65, Section g of the applicable collective bargaining agreement. The Activity shall cease and desist from failing to comply with the requirements of that section.

Issued, Washington, D.C., August 15, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Jack Clarke filed by the Department of the Army (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute before the Arbitrator concerned management's determination to contract out telephone operator functions. The Union filed a grievance claiming that the Activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement by failing to provide the Union with a copy of the pertinent statement of work and other acquisition information prior to issuance of the bid solicitation. The Union alleged that this failure deprived it of any viable and meaningful opportunity to affect management's determination of whether to contract out. In particular, the Union contended that had it been timely provided with the specification of contractor wages, it might have been able to preclude the Activity's determination to contract out. The Arbitrator found that the grievance was arbitrable and that the Activity had violated the parties' agreement by not providing the Union president or her designee timely access to the statement of work involved in the commercial activities review of telephone services. In discussing a remedy, the Arbitrator stated in response to the arguments of the Union that it could not be concluded that but for the breach of the collective bargaining agreement, the contracting out of telephone services could not have properly occurred. He also rejected the argument of the Activity that the procurement action could not be cancelled. He noted that this argument presumed that contracting out was more economical, and he stated that until the agreement is complied with, the correctness of this assumption cannot be known. Accordingly, as a remedy, the Arbitrator ordered the Activity to cease contracting out the disputed functions and implementing a reduction-in-force because of the contracting out until the Activity complied with the requirements of the collective bargaining agreement. The Arbitrator further ordered the Activity to restore to their jobs any employees affected by a reduction-in-force caused by the disputed procurement action.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception the Agency contends that by finding the grievance to be arbitrable, the award is deficient as contrary to law and regulation.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that the Agency fails to establish that by finding the grievance to be arbitrable, the award is deficient. To the extent that the grievance claimed a violation of the collective bargaining agreement, the Agency fails to establish that the matter of the Activity's compliance with the terms of the agreement was not properly grievable and arbitrable. To the extent that the grievance subjected the disputed procurement action to arbitral review, the Agency likewise fails to establish that the award is deficient. As noted, the Union ultimately contended with respect to the procurement action that had the agreement not been violated, the Activity's determination to contract out might have been precluded by applicable procurement law and regulation.

The Authority has previously indicated that a grievance claiming that a procurement action was not in accordance with applicable procurement law and regulation is grievable and arbitrable under the Statute and is not precluded by law or regulation. See General Services Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 236, 22 FLRA No. 84 (1986); Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986); American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1904, AFL-CIO and United States Army Communications and Electronics Materiel Readiness Command, 16 FLRA 358 (1984); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of EEOC Locals and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 10 FLRA 3 (1982) (Proposal 1), enforced sub nom. EEOC v. FLRA, 744 F.2d 842 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. dismissed, 106 S. Ct. 1678 (1986) (per curiam). Further, our decision in Congressional Research Employees Association and The Library of Congress, 23 FLRA No. 15 (1986), where we found a grievance challenging a procurement action on the basis of a provision of the collective bargaining agreement not to be arbitrable, is distinguishable. In contrast to that case, the Union in this case is not seeking to enforce a provision which is inconsistent with the Activity's right to contract out. Accordingly, because the grievance challenged the propriety under procurement law and regulation of the disputed procurement action, the grievance was arbitrable.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception, the Agency primarily contends that the Arbitrator's award ordering cancellation of the procurement action is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986), the Authority addressed for the first time the remedial authority of an arbitrator in resolving grievances disputing determinations by agencies to contract out agency work. In sum, the Authority held that under the Statute and procurement law and regulation, arbitrators are not authorized cancel a procurement action. We also held that arbitrators are authorized to sustain grievances challenging a decision to contract out and direct agencies to reconstruct the actions on specific grounds only.

Applying our decision in Blytheville AFB to this case, we conclude that the Arbitrator was not authorized either to cancel the procurement action or to sustain the grievance to the extent that it directly challenged the action. The Arbitrator's order that the Activity cease contracting out telephone services constitutes a cancellation of the procurement action and therefore is clearly deficient under section 7106 (a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The award directing the Activity to cease any reduction-in-force (RIF) and to reinstate any employees affected by the RIF is also deficient because it follows directly from the cancellation.

We also find that the Arbitrator was not authorized to sustain the challenge to the disputed procurement action and could not have properly directed reconstruction in this case. The Union essentially claimed that had it been timely provided with the specification of contractor wages, it might have been able to preclude, in accordance with procurement law and regulation, the Activity's determination to contract out. However, the Arbitrator specifically stated that it could not be concluded that but for the breach of the collective bargaining agreement, the contracting out of telephone services could not have occurred consistent with procurement law and regulation. Accordingly, his award sustaining the challenge to the procurement action is deficient.

We decided in Blytheville AFB, slip op. at 6, that an arbitrator can sustain a challenge to a procurement action and order reconstruction only on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. Since the Arbitrator made no such specific finding in this case, he was not authorized to sustain the grievance to the extent that it directly challenged the procurement action, and he could not have properly directed reconstruction.

We note, however, that nothing in Blytheville AFB precluded the Arbitrator from finding, as he did, that the Activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement by not providing the Union president or her designee timely access to the statement of work for the commercial activities review of telephone services. Nor was the Arbitrator precluded from sustaining the grievance to the extent of the claimed violation of the agreement and from awarding a proper and appropriate remedy for that violation. Because the Arbitrator awarded a remedy for this violation without the guidance that has now been provided by Blytheville AFB, we find that the award should be modified to provide an appropriate remedy. The Activity bargained and agreed to these provisions as part of the collective bargaining agreement. We admonish the Activity to abide by these provisions and will order a remedy accordingly.

V. DECISION

For the reasons stated above, the Arbitrator's award is modified to provide as follows:

> The grievance is sustained to the extent of the claimed violation of Section 25.2 of the 1982 Agreement. The Activity shall cease and desist from failing to comply with the requirements of that section.

Issued, Washington, D.C., August 15, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of one Union proposal.

II. Union Proposal

The Agency notified the Union on July 8, 1985 that it had decided to disestablish the Naval Occupational Safety and Health (NAVOSH) Deficiency Abatement Committee. The Union proposal which is the subject of this appeal is:

> Our proposal is to keep the NAVOSH Deficiency Abatement Committee and add equal numbers of Labor Representatives.

III. Positions of the Parties

A. Union Position

The Union argues the proposal is negotiable "regarding the impact to the unit employees." It states that a committee such as this "can make a contribution to the safety of all employees if it is given the opportunity to function with equal numbers of employees and representatives of management. This is allowed under the Executive Order 12196 of February 26, 1980, Occupational Safety Health Programs for Federal Employees." (Union Petition p. 1). Citing the Department of the Navy instruction which established the Committee, the Union notes that the function of the Committee was to periodically review safety abatement projects and to determine if additional actions were needed to assure their timely completion. The Committee was to address problems with funding, priorities or implementation of specific projects.

B. Agency Position

The Agency declared in its allegation of nonnegotiability that the proposal interferes with management's rights to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, to determine the organization of the Shipyard under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute, and to determine the methods and means of performing work under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute.

The Agency's Statement of Position was untimely filed and will not be considered. Section 2424.6 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations requires that an agency file a statement of position within thirty days after receipt of a petition for review. In its Statement, dated November 29, 1985, the Agency noted that it received the petition on October 29, 1985. Therefore the Statement was filed more than thirty days after receipt of the petition and was untimely filed.

IV. Analysis

Attachments to the Union's petition for review indicate that the Shipyard Occupational Safety and Health Deficiency Abatement Program was set up by Instruction 5100.23A in 1983 under the authority of Executive Order 12196, and provided for the NAVOSH Deficiency Abatement Committee. The regulation designated as members the Shipyard Safety Director, a designee of the Production Engineering Division, and a designee of the Staff Civil Engineer Department. As noted, the duties of the committee were to periodically review deficiency abatement projects and to "address and resolve any problems with funding, priorities, or implementation of specific projects." (Instruction 5100.23A, para. 5i, April 19, 1983).

Based on these facts, the Authority finds that the Union's proposal to reestablish the committee, and to "add equal numbers" of labor representatives, is nonnegotiable on two of the grounds asserted by the Agency.

1. The proposal interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The duties of the Committee involve the deliberative process of the Agency in making decisions and resolving problems "with funding, priorities, or implementation of specific projects." The proposal to require Union representatives on such a committee constitutes an assignment of work to individuals not chosen by management. See Fort Knox Teachers Association and Fort Knox Dependent Schools, 22 FLRA No. 88 (1986) (Union Proposal 3). See also National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1431 and Veterans Administration Medical Center, East Orange, New Jersey, 9 FLRA 998 (1982).

2. The proposal also interferes with management's right to determine the organization of the Shipyard under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. As noted, the Committee was created by a regulation to address and resolve problems in the Agency's safety and health deficiency abatement program. The decision to disestablish the Committee and redistribute its functions determines the manner in which these Agency responsibilities will be accomplished. The proposal's requirement to reverse that decision, and add Union representatives, interferes with management's decision as to the formal organizational structure by which it makes decisions. Therefore, the proposal directly interferes with management's rights under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute, and is outside the duty to bargain. See Veterans Administration Medical Center, East Orange, New Jersey, 9 FLRA 998, 999 (1982).

In view of our findings that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it interferes with two management rights under section 7106(a) of the Statute, we find it unnecessary to address the Agency's unsupported additional assertion that the proposal would determine the methods and means by which work is performed under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and therefore is negotiable only at its election.

V. Conclusion

We conclude that the Union proposal is nonnegotiable because it interferes with management's rights to (1) assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute and (2) determine the organization of the Shipyard under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute.

VI. Order

Pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of four Union proposals. The proposals all concern leave during partial closure of the Agency around the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays. As submitted, the proposals are as follows:

> 1. Management will make every conceivable attempt to avoid forcing any employee to take annual leave or LWOP and will make every conceivable attempt to assign employees to available work for which the employee is qualified if employees do not elect to take annual leave or LWOP.
> 2. Pursuant to a questionnaire to be mutually agreed upon, employees will be polled as to whether they desire annual leave, LWOP or other assigned work.
> 3. An extremely liberal leave policy will be in effect. No employee requests for annual leave or LWOP will be denied unless an emergency exists or work demands leave no > other alternatives. In any event, no requests for annual leave or LWOP will be denied where there are other employees who want to work and not take annual leave or LWOP and the employee is otherwise qualified to perform the work.

> 4. Prior to forcing any employee to take annual leave or LWOP, in the event that there are more employees desiring to work than there is work available, the following procedures will apply:
>
>   (a) work assignments amongst employees desiring to work will be given to qualified employees with the greatest seniority; and
>   (b) before an employee will be required to take LWOP because the employee does not have sufficient annual leave, upon request the employee will be advanced annual leave if management has any reason to believe that the employee will be able to restore advanced annual leave.

Subsequently, in its Statement of Position, the Agency stated it had no objection to Proposal 2 and that if the Union agreed to include FPM requirements concerning the granting of annual leave as part of Proposal 4(b) it would not object to that proposal either. In its Reply Brief the Union agreed with the Agency's position on Proposal 4(b). Thus, the issues concerning Proposals 2 and 4(b) are moot and will not be considered further in this decision.

II. Union Proposal 1

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency reads the phrase that it "make every conceivable attempt to assign employees to available work" if they decline to take annual leave or leave without pay (LWOP) as requiring such assignments. It also asserts that it would be precluded from assigning available work to other employees. Therefore, it asserts that the proposal conflicts with management's reserved rights to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The Agency also argues that the requirement to assign work "for which the employee is qualified" similarly interferes with management's rights because it could result in the assignment of an overqualified employee at higher pay than necessary.

The Union argues that the proposal merely deals with the impact of management's decision to partially close the Agency around the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays. It understood that the Activity would make work available to some employees during the periods in question, and sought to avoid or lessen the impact of closure. It concedes that an agency has the right to require employees to take charged leave during such closures under current Authority case law.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that Union Proposal 1 is nonnegotiable. By requiring management to make "every conceivable attempt" to avoid requiring an employee to take annual leave (A/L) or leave without pay (LWOP), the proposal effectively could require management to forego its plan to partially close down if more employees wanted to work (rather than take A/L or LWOP) than were called for by the management plan. The second clause would have the same effect. It is undisputed that the Agency has the right to partially close during holiday periods. The same decision, under the same Army Civilian Personnel Regulation involved in this case, led the Authority to determine that an agency could require employees to take annual leave during such closings. National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-62 and U.S. Army Dugway Proving Ground, Dugway, Utah, 18 FLRA No. 38 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-62 v. FLRA, No. 85-2098 (10th Cir. July 23, 1985). Thus the proposal is outside the duty to bargain because it could result in depriving management of its rights to require employees to take leave, and ultimately prevent the closing of operations, contrary to management's rights to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. In addition, the "every conceivable attempt" language does not limit the proposal, because we have consistently held that proposals requiring an agency to make an effort to accomplish an objective which is outside the duty to bargain are themselves nonnegotiable. Maritime/Metal Trades Council and Panama Canal Commission, 18 FLRA No. 43 (1985) (Union Proposal 5).

While intended by the Union as an arrangement for employees adversely affected by the Agency's exercise of its rights to require employees to take leave and to partially close down, we find that under the circumstances discussed above, the proposal is not an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. Thus, where a proposed amelioration of adverse effects of an Agency's exercise of its rights could totally eliminate the Agency's discretion to exercise its rights, such proposal amounts to "excessive interference" with the exercise of management's rights, and is not an appropriate arrangement. Federal Union of Scientists and Engineers and Department of the Navy, Naval Underwater Systems Center, 22 FLRA No. 83 (1986). See also American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183, 1188 (D.C. Cir. 1983).

The Agency also argues that the requirement to assign work "for which the employee is qualified" could result in the assignment of an overqualified employee at higher pay than necessary. Although we have already determined this proposal to be nonnegotiable, since the argument arises later in connection with other proposals, we note that this part of the proposal would not render nonnegotiable an otherwise negotiable provision. As long as the Agency can set the qualifications, there is nothing to preclude it from limiting its definition of "qualified" to those employees who are not overqualified or whose work would not require the Agency to pay a higher rate than normal for the job. Thus, management's discretion to select and assign employees based on job-related characteristics is not limited by the language of the proposal. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Immigration and Naturalization Service Council and U.S. Department of Justice, (Immigration and Naturalization Service), 8 FLRA 347, 383-4 (1982).

III. Union Proposal 3

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that the proposal would nullify management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to determine when work will be performed. Further, the Agency asserts that the last sentence of the proposal would interfere with its right under the same section of the Statute to make work assignments.

The Union states that the first part of the proposal merely restates the liberal leave policy which already exists, under which management determines work demands. The second part of the proposal, embodied in the last sentence, would protect leave requests if qualified volunteers are available.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that under the facts presented, this proposal is negotiable. The Agency's right to determine when work will be performed is unaffected because there is no indication that the phrase "unless . . . work demands leave no other alternatives" is intended to restrict management's control over deciding and defining what are the demands of work. As long as management can determine what constitutes "work demands," it controls completely any decision as to scheduling or delaying all aspects of accomplishment of its mission, consistent with any decision to close during holiday periods. Further, to say that employees would not be required to take leave if qualified volunteers exist--which is essentially the point of the last sentence in the proposal--does not interfere with management's right to make work assignments, or for that matter to assign employees. So long as management can determine the qualifications for a given assignment, such a proposal constitutes a negotiable procedure within the meaning of section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. Thus, it merely provides that selection among equally qualified employees, as defined by management, will take into account volunteers rather than require another employee to work who prefers to take available leave. See American Federation of Government Employees, Council of Social Security District Office Locals and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 15 FLRA 545 (1984); and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1622 and U.S. Commissary, Fort Meade, Maryland, 16 FLRA 998 (1984) (Union Provision II).

IV. Union Proposal 4(a)

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency regards the proposal as "nothing more than a seniority clause" (Agency Statement of Position, p. 4) which is inconsistent with management's right to assign employees and to assign work, essentially as argued in regard to the other proposals discussed above.

The Union argues, as above, that the proposal does not limit the Agency in designating numbers or types of employees or work needs, but only would require that assignments be by seniority among equally qualified employees.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

For essentially the reasons discussed above, the Authority finds that this proposal is negotiable. We have already noted that so long as a proposal does not limit management's right to define the "demands" of work, it does not interfere with management's authority to decide what work will be performed during the holiday periods. Similarly, the Agency's argument that it could not select which employee to "lay off," that is, to require to take annual leave, is rejected for the same reasons noted above regarding available volunteers. By preserving management's right to define the category and qualifications of employees to do a job, the proposal to give seniority preference to employees desiring to work rather than take forced leave is negotiable.

In sum, as long as those on the seniority list are determined to be equally qualified under criteria determined by management, the proposal is negotiable. See Laborers International Union of North America, AFL-CIO, Local 1276 and Veterans Administration, National Cemetery Office, San Francisco, California, 9 FLRA 703, 706-707 (1982).

V. Order

Pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review, as it relates to Proposal 1, found to be nonnegotiable, be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposals 3 and 4(a).*/

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Howard G. D'Spain filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

The grievance concerned management's determination to contract out certain activities and alleged that the activity had violated an agency regulation pertaining to contracting out and several provisions of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The arbitrator found that the activity had violated the parties' agreement by not providing a copy of the revised statement of work and a copy of the bid solicitation and by its failure to notify the union of certain meetings relating to the proposed procurement action. As a remedy, the arbitrator directed the activity to cancel the procurement action and to reinstate any employees removed as a result of the action to their former positions with backpay. The arbitrator also awarded the union attorney fees.

In its first exception to the arbitrator's award, the agency contended that the award was deficient as contrary to law and regulation in finding the grievance arbitrable. The union contended with respect to the procurement action that the agency had violated agency procurement regulations and that the activity's determination to contract out might have been precluded by applicable procurement law and regulation, had the parties' agreement not been violated. The Authority held that a grievance claiming that a procurement action was not in accordance with applicable procurement law and regulation is grievable and arbitrable under the Statute and is not precluded by law or regulation. Because the grievance challenged the propriety under procurement law and regulation of the disputed procurement action, the grievance was arbitrable.

In its second exception to the arbitrator's award the agency asserted that the award ordering cancellation of the procurement action was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(B). In Blytheville AFB, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986), the Authority held that under the Statute and procurement law and regulation, arbitrators are not authorized to cancel a procurement action. Arbitrators are authorized to sustain grievances challenging a decision to contract out and direct agencies to reconstruct the action only on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. The arbitrator did not make the required finding in this case, therefore he was not authorized to cancel the procurement action or to sustain the grievance to the extent that it directly challenged the procurement action. The arbitrator's order that the activity cancel the procurement action was deficient under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The award directing the activity to reinstate with backpay any employees removed as a result of the procurement action was also deficient because it followed directly from the cancellation. Further, without an award of backpay, the arbitrator's award of reasonable attorney fees is likewise deficient. The Authority noted that nothing in Blytheville AFB prevented the arbitrator from finding, as he did, that the activity violated the parties collective bargaining agreement. Nor was the arbitrator precluded from sustaining the grievance to the extent of the claimed violation of the agreement and from awarding a proper and appropriate remedy for that violation. The Authority concluded that the award should be modified because the arbitrators remedy was designed without the guidance of Blytheville AFB, and ordered that the activity abide by the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement.

DIGEST NOTES

Proposals which require that management provide specified types and quantities of uniforms are negotiable appropriate arrangements under § 7106(b)(3). The agency made no contention nor did it appear that the proposals would interfere with the purpose for which the uniform requirement was adopted--identification of warehouse personnel. (proposals 1 and 2)

A proposal which would allow employees ten minutes after the start and before the end of the workday to change clothes is not an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of § 7106(b)(3), because it would excessively interfere with the agency's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work. The proposal would result in a loss to the agency of twenty minutes each workday during which it could not assign work of its choosing to those employees. This would have a significant negative impact on the agency's right to assign work. The negative impact outweighs the benefit to employees of not having to use their own time to exercise their option to change clothes at work. The agency did not prohibit employees from wearing their uniforms to and from work. It appeared that the decision whether to change clothing at work was purely a matter of individual employee preference. (proposal 3)

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

The agency raised a question as to its duty to bargain over certain proposals in light of contract language which it maintains amounts to a zipper clause which forecloses further bargaining on the subject. The Authority held that it only decides the negotiability of issues presented under section § 7105(a)(2)(D) or (E) of the Statute--that is: does a proposal concern conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees; does it conflict with law or Government-wide rule or regulation; or does it conflict with an agency regulation for which a compelling need exits? The parties may resolve questions of duty to bargain which are based on factual issues in other appropriate proceedings, such as grievance and arbitration procedures.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority held that the agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it failed to notify the union's National President (its designated representative), and afford it an opportunity to bargain about procedures for implementing changes at the agency's local facilities due to a reorganization, and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the changes prior to their implementation. The parties stipulated that all of the changes were implemented without providing advance notice to the union's designated representative, or affording the union an opportunity to bargain over impact and implementation of the changes. The agency's sole defense was that its actions were in accord with the provisions of a predecessor agreement, wherein the union had waived its rights to bargain. The Authority held that the waiver of bargaining rights contained in the expired predecessor agreement was no longer binding on the union. The waiver of bargaining rights involved a permissive subject of bargaining which was binding during the life of the agreement, but was terminable by either party once the agreement expired. Management could not insist on the continuation of the waiver provision when the union notified management that it would no longer be bound by the provision and would exercise its bargaining rights.

The Authority held that a status quo ante remedy was not warranted where the agency reorganized its operations and made various changes in employees' conditions of employment without bargaining with the union's designated representative over procedures and appropriate arrangements for affected employees. The Authority noted that an order requiring management to rescind the reorganization and to restore all conditions of employment which were in effect prior to the reorganization would cause serious disruption in the agency's operations. The changes instituted by the agency related to the agency's national plan to reorganize personnel and to modernize the nation's air traffic control system over a period of twenty years.

The Authority found that the posting of a remedial unfair labor practice notice only at the facilities involved in the reorganization would best effectuate the purposes of the Statute where the unlawful conduct occurred prior to the issuance of the Authority's controlling decision on the subject [14 FLRA 644 (1984)] and there is no indication that the agency has refused to abide by the Authority's decisions or that it will continue to engage in such unlawful conduct in the future.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which provides that first consideration for overtime work will be given to employees within an institutional department, before other qualified employees of the institution is negotiable. In disapproving the provision the agency declared that the language was negotiable only if management retained the authority to make final determinations as to the qualifications required to perform overtime work and if the provision did not preclude management from assigning work to employees in other departments on a non-overtime basis. The Authority found that the provision expressly deals with overtime work and in no way prevents management from assigning work to employees in other departments during regular duty hours. The Authority therefore, concluded that the provision did not interfere with management's rights under § 7106(a)(2)(B). (provision 1)

A proposal which states that "[t]he principal day shift hours of work will be 7:30 AM to 4:00 PM with a half hour uninterrupted lunch period," is within the duty to bargain. The Authority found that the agency made no showing that the provision established a new shift or changed the hours of the existing shift. Thus, the provision did not affect the numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a tour of duty within the meaning of § 7106(b)(1). The provision simply described the hours of the existing principal day shift at the institution. Moreover, the provision did not prevent management from changing the hours of that shift or establishing any new shift, consistent with the rights of the union in such a situation. (provision 2)

A proposal providing that employees working three hours in excess of eight hours shall be given the opportunity to purchase a meal or time off to obtain a meal, concerns a negotiable subject of bargaining. The union specifically interpreted the provision as not authorizing overtime for meal times and acknowledged that overtime compensation is a matter subject to law, Comptroller General decisions, and other provisions of the parties' agreement. Given this interpretation, which the agency did not refute, the Authority concluded that the provision was negotiable. (provision 3)

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which provides that part-time employees who are restricted to a tour of duty of less than 40 hours will be assigned to a reduced workload, interferes with management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The proposal prevents management from making work assignments in circumstances where employees work less than full-time, irrespective of the agency's immediate needs. The proposal would directly interfere with management's right to assign work and does not constitute a negotiable procedure within the meaning of § 7106(b)(2). The Authority also found that even assuming that the proposal was intended to ameliorate an adverse effect perceived by the assignment of a full workload to permanent part-time employees who are now restricted by the agency to working only the hours of their established part-time tour of duty, the proposed amelioration would expressly preclude the agency from assigning a certain amount of work at all in the circumstances described in the proposal. Such a proposed amelioration, would excessively interfere with management's right to assign work and therefore does not constitute an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3). (proposal 1)

A proposal which provides that temporary employees, who were terminated without personal fault, will be recalled on the basis of their length of service, interferes with management's rights to hire and assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and management's right to make selections under § 7106(a)(2)(C). There was nothing in the record to indicate that once allocations became available management could elect to not recall temporary employees and utilize such allocations for permanent positions instead or to elect to accomplish its work without any increase in staff. The proposal would thus, absolutely eliminate the agency's discretion concerning the filling of positions and directly interfere with the agency's rights to hire and select and as a result, it does not constitute a negotiable procedure within the meaning of § 7106(b)(2). In addition, by mandating the recall of temporary employees the proposal would constitute an excessive interference with the enumerated management rights and therefore, is not an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3). (proposal 2)

A proposal which provides that temporary employees, who were terminated without personal fault, will be recalled on the basis of their length of service, is outside the duty to bargain, under § 7117(a)(1), because it is inconsistent with a government-wide regulation. Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the Federal Personal Manual, permits agencies to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. The proposal would require the agency to select for vacancies only temporary employees who have been separated from employment. It would therefore, prevent the agency from making selections from any appropriate source. (proposal 2)

A proposal providing that part-time employees will be converted "at the earliest opportunity," upon request, to full-time positions, constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3). The proposal was intended as an arrangement for part-time employees who previously worked a full-time schedule but who because of funding problems were restricted to a part-time schedule. Such employees were adversely affected by management's right to reduce its hours.

The proposal would apply only after management determines to fill a vacant full-time position and would not violate management's right to determine the number of employees under § 7106(a)(1). Nothing in the record indicated that management would be unable to determine the qualifications of the part-time employee for the full-time position. The Authority found that the proposal would not be negotiable as a procedure because it directly interfered with management's rights under § 7106(a)(2)(C).

A proposal found to be an appropriate arrangement and providing that part-time employees will be converted "at the earliest opportunity," upon request, to full-time positions, was nevertheless outside the duty to bargain under § 7117(a)(1). The proposal was inconsistent with FPM Chapter 335, subchapt. 1-4, Requirement 4, a Government-wide regulation, which would permit agencies to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. The proposal would require the agency to select only permanent part-time employees for permanent full-time vacancies which it decided to fill.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority found, in agreement with the Judge, that the activity violated § 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) by failing and refusing to furnish the union with data described in its request for information. The activity excepted to the Judge's remedy contending that certain of the data do not exist. It also argued that the other documents sought were useless without the corresponding data alleged to be unavailable. The activity requested that the Judge's order be modified to require it to provide the data requested only for the period for which it possessed information. The record indicated that the information was maintained at the activity's sector headquarters. The Authority concluded that it is not an unfair labor practice to fail to produce documents that do not exist. Consequently, while the union was entitled to the requested data in the possession of the activity for the period in question, the activity could not be held accountable for that data it no longer possessed. The Authority ruled that the availability of the data involved could best be determined during the compliance stage of the proceeding. It therefore modified the Judge's Order to require the activity to supply whatever of the requested data it had in its possession. The Authority stated that the General Counsel, during the compliance stage of this proceeding, will determine what data is in fact available.

The arbitrator ruled, in his initial award, that the grievant's performance had been improperly rated "marginal" under three critical elements in her annual appraisal. As a remedy he voided the appraisal and ordered the grievant's performance reevaluated under those elements. He found particularly that the rating was based only on events during two months of the twelve-month appraisal period and ordered that the agency consider the grievant's performance under another supervisor earlier in the appraisal period. The arbitrator also retained jurisdiction to resolve disputes regarding the remedy. In reevaluating the grievant, the activity stated that both of her supervisors for the period met and reconsidered the grievant's performance. They then determined that her performance under two of the elements in question was "marginal;" that performance under the third element was "satisfactory;" and that the overall rating was "marginal." Pursuant to his retained jurisdiction, the arbitrator "refined" his initial award and determined that the "marginal" ratings on the reevaluation were not supported or justified and directed that the grievant's performance be rated "satisfactory" on the elements rated "marginal" and that the overall rating be reevaluated accordingly.

In its exception the agency contended that the arbitrator's "refinement" of his initial award, directing that the grievant's performance under two disputed elements be reevaluated as satisfactory, was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). In resolving disputes pertaining to performance appraisal matters, an arbitrator may resolve an employee's grievance claiming to have been adversely affected in his/her performance appraisal by management's application of the established performance standards. An arbitrator may sustain the grievance on finding that management applied the standards in violation of law, regulation or an appropriate provision of the parties' agreement. In sustaining the grievance, the arbitrator as a remedy may direct that the grievant's work product be properly evaluated by management or, where appropriate, that the grievant's work product as appraised by management be granted the rating to which entitled under the established elements and standards. The arbitrator may not conduct an independent evaluation of an employee's performance under the elements and standards established by management and may not substitute his or her own judgment for that of management as to what the employee's evaluation and rating should be. The Authority found the award was deficient by directing that the grievant's performance be rated "satisfactory" under certain elements and that the grievant's overall rating be reevaluated accordingly. The arbitrator independently evaluated the grievant's performance and substituted his judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's performance evaluation and rating under the established standards of the critical elements should have been.

The agency notified the union that on the expiration of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, it was electing to no longer be bound by provisions of the agreement which provide civilian technicians the option of wearing either the appropriate military uniform or "standard civilian attire . . . approved by the Adjutant General," when performing their technician duties. The agency also notified the union of the effective date of its anticipated practice. The effective was allegedly the expiration date of the parties' agreement. A grievance was submitted to arbitration disputing that the agreement expired on the date specified by the agency. The arbitrator noted that Authority precedent provides that the requirement that civilian technicians wear the military uniform is a permissive subject of bargaining under § 7106(b)(1) and that on expiration of the agreement, the agency could require the wearing of the military uniform. The arbitrator, however, determined that the agreement had not expired on the date specified by the agency and that the agency had violated the agreement by requiring the wearing of the military uniform beginning on that date. The arbitrator sustained the grievance and ordered the agency to comply with the collective bargaining agreement until it expired.

In its exception the agency contended that the arbitrator's award was contrary to § 7106(a)(1) and argued that the wearing of the military uniform by civilian technicians while performing technician duties is necessary to carry out the mission of the agency. The agency also maintained that it had the right under § 7106(a)(1) to require the wearing of the military uniform as part of its internal security practices. In addressing the bargaining obligation with respect to the requirement of civilian technicians to wear the military uniform, the Authority has held that the requirement constitutes a method and means of performing work within the meaning of § 7106(b)(1) and consequently is a permissive subject of bargaining. The issue in this case, was whether the arbitrator's award, permitting until the expiration of the agreement civilian technicians the option of wearing standard civilian attire that has been approved by the Adjutant General, interfered with management's right to determine internal security practices. The Authority held that the agency failed to establish that the arbitrator's award was contrary to § 7106(a)(1) and failed to demonstrate in what manner the award prevents the agency from protecting its property from loss, destruction, or disclosure. Likewise, the agency failed to demonstrate in what manner the award interfered with management right to determine the mission of the agency. The exception was therefore, denied.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Robert C. Schubert filed by the Department of the Army (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.*/

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance was filed in this case challenging management's determination to contract out certain activities. The grievance alleged that the Activity had violated an agency regulation pertaining to contracting out and several provisions of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Union argued that it was deprived of an opportunity to affect the decision of whether to contract out. The Union claimed that if it had been permitted to participate in the procurement process as required by the agreement, it could have precluded the Activity's determination to contract out. The Arbitrator found that the Activity violated the agreement by its failure to provide the Union with a copy of the revised statement of work and a copy of the bid solicitation and by its failure to notify the Union of certain meetings relating to the proposed procurement action. With respect to a remedy, the Arbitrator rejected the Activity's argument that to cancel the procurement action the Union had to establish that but for the violations of the agreement, the decision of whether to contract out would have been different. The Arbitrator stated that it was difficult to prove that the violations actually changed the result. Instead, he determined that it was sufficient that the Union had established that it was more likely than not that the decision to contract out would have been different if the Activity had not violated the agreement. The Arbitrator therefore sustained the grievance and, as a remedy, directed the Activity to cancel the procurement action and to reinstate any employees removed as a result of the action to their former positions with backpay. The Arbitrator also awarded the Union attorney fees.

*/ The Agency also requested a stay of the Arbitrator's award which request the Authority granted. The Union filed an opposition to the Agency's exceptions and stay request. The Union subsequently filed a request for oral argument concerning the Authority's Order granting the Agency's request for a stay of the award. Because no basis is presented for reconsidering, by oral argument or otherwise, the Authority's Order granting the stay, the Union's request is denied.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception, the Agency contends that by finding the grievance to be arbitrable, the award is deficient as contrary to law and regulation.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that the Agency fails to establish that by finding the grievance to be arbitrable, the award is deficient. To the extent that the grievance claimed a violation of the collective bargaining agreement, the Agency fails to establish that the matter of the Activity's compliance with the terms of the agreement was not properly grievable and arbitrable. To the extent that the grievance subjected the disputed procurement action to arbitral review, the Agency likewise fails to establish that the award is deficient. As noted, the Union contended in its grievance that in deciding to contract out the Activity had violated agency procurement regulations. Primarily, the Union also contended that had the agreement not been violated, the Activity's determination to contract out would have been precluded by applicable procurement law and regulation.

The Authority has previously indicated that a grievance claiming that a procurement action was not in accordance with applicable procurement law and regulation is grievable and arbitrable under the Statute and is not precluded by law or regulation. See General Services Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 236, 22 FLRA No. 84 (1986); Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986); American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1904, AFL-CIO and United States Army Communications and Electronics Materiel Readiness Command, 16 FLRA 358 (1984); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of EEOC Locals and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 10 FLRA 3 (1932) (Proposal 1), enforced sub nom. EEOC v. FLRA, 744 F.2d 842 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. dismissed, 106 S. Ct. 1678 (1986) (per curiam). Further, our decision in Congressional Research Employees Association and The Library of Congress, 23 FLRA No. 15 (1986), where we found a grievance challenging a procurement action on the basis of a provision of the collective bargaining agreement not to be arbitrable, is distinguishable. In contrast to that case, the Union in this case is not seeking to enforce a provision which is inconsistent with the Activity's right to contract out. Accordingly, because the grievance challenged the propriety under procurement law and regulation of the disputed procurement action, the grievance was arbitrable.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception, the Agency primarily contends that the Arbitrator's award ordering cancellation of the procurement action is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In Headquarters, 97th Combat Support Group (SAC), Blytheville Air Force Base, Arkansas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2840, 22 FLRA No. 72 (1986), the Authority addressed for the first time the remedial authority of an arbitrator in resolving grievances disputing determinations by agencies to contract out agency work. In sum, the Authority held that under the Statute and procurement law and regulation, arbitrators are not authorized to cancel a procurement action. We also held that arbitrators are authorized to sustain grievances challenging a decision to contract out and direct agencies to reconstruct the actions on specific grounds only.

Applying our decision in Blytheville AFB to this case, we conclude that the Arbitrator was not authorized either to cancel the procurement action or to sustain the grievance to the extent that it directly challenged the action. The Arbitrator's order that the Activity cancel the procurement action is clearly deficient under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The Arbitrator's order that the Activity reinstate with backpay any employees removed as a result of the procurement action is also deficient because it follows directly from the cancellation. See Naval Air Station, Whiting Field and American Federation of Government Employees, Local Union No. 1954, 22 FLRA No. 102 (1986). Similarly, without an award of backpay, the Arbitrator's award of reasonable attorney fees is likewise deficient. See U.S. Army Missile Command, Redstone Arsenal, Alabama and Local 1858, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 18 FLRA No. 50 (1985).

We also find that the Arbitrator was not authorized to sustain the challenge to the disputed procurement action and could not have properly directed reconstruction in this case. The Union essentially claimed that had the agreement not been violated, it might have been able to preclude, in accordance with procurement law and regulation, the Activity's determination to contract out. However, the Arbitrator stated that it was difficult to prove that but for the violations of the collective bargaining agreement, the decision to contract out could not have properly occurred and that it was sufficient to conclude that more likely than not the decision to contract out would have been precluded. Accordingly, his award sustaining the challenge to the procurement action is deficient.

We decided in Blytheville AFB, slip op. at 6, that an arbitrator can sustain a challenge to a procurement action and order reconstruction only on the basis that the agency failed to comply with mandatory and nondiscretionary provisions of applicable procurement law or regulation. Since the Arbitrator made no such specific finding in this case, he was not authorized to sustain the grievance to the extent that it directly challenged the procurement action, and he could not have properly directed reconstruction.

We note, however, that nothing in Blytheville AFB precluded the Arbitrator from finding, as he did, that the Activity violated the agreement by its failure to provide the Union with a copy of the revised statement of work and a copy of the bid solicitation and by its failure to notify the Union of certain meetings relating to the proposed procurement action. Nor was the Arbitrator precluded from sustaining the grievance to the extent of the claimed violations of the agreement and from awarding a proper and appropriate remedy for that violation. Because the Arbitrator awarded a remedy for this violation without the guidance that has now been provided by Blytheville AFB, we find that the award should be modified to provide an appropriate remedy. The Activity bargained and agreed to these provisions as part of the collective bargaining agreement. We admonish the Activity to abide by these provisions and will order a remedy accordingly.

V. DECISION

For the reasons stated above, the Arbitrator's award is modified to provide as follows:

> The grievance is sustained to the extent of the claimed violations of Article XXIX of the applicable collective bargaining agreement. The Activity shall cease and desist from failing to comply with the requirements of that article.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of three proposals. The Union made the proposals in response to an Agency decision to require warehouse personnel to wear uniforms. We hold that Union Proposals 1 and 2 are within the duty to bargain[1] and that Union Proposal 3 is nonnegotiable.

Union Proposal 1

> Each employee will receive 5 complete sets of clothing including long and short sleeve shirts.

Union Proposal 2

> Each employee will receive a jacket.

---

[1] In finding these proposals negotiable, we make no judgments as to their merits.

Union Proposal 3

> Staff will be allowed 10 minutes after the start and before the end of each workday to change clothes.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency asserts that it imposed the uniform requirement to promote quick identification of warehouse personnel for security purposes. It contends that it has no obligation to bargain over Union Proposals 1 and 2 because of a "zipper clause" in the parties' contract. It contends that it has no obligation to bargain over Union Proposal 3 because it interferes with the Agency's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work.

The Union argues that the contract language relied upon by the Agency does not foreclose bargaining on Union Proposals 1 and 2. It also argues that Union Proposals 1, 2 and 3 are appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the Agency's requirement that they wear uniforms.

III. Analysis

A. Effect of Question Concerning Interpretation of Contract Language on the Negotiability of Proposals 1 and 2

The Agency raises a question as to its duty to bargain over Proposals 1 and 2 in light of contract language which it maintains amounts to a zipper clause which forecloses further bargaining on the subject of requiring employees to wear uniforms. This is the only ground raised by the Agency in support of its allegation that these two proposals are nonnegotiable. In a negotiability appeal the Authority decides only the negotiability issues presented under section 7105(a)(2)(D) or (E) of the Statute--that is: does a proposal concern conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees; does it conflict with law or Government-wide rule or regulation; or does it conflict with an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists? The parties may resolve questions of duty to bargain which are based on factual issues in other appropriate proceedings, such as grievance and arbitration procedures. See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 at 306, n. 6 (1984).

B. Negotiability of Union Proposals 1 and 2 under Section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Statute

The Union's contention that Union Proposals 1 and 2 are appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the Agency's decision to require them to wear uniforms is persuasive. The Agency makes no contention and it does not otherwise appear that these proposals would interfere with the purpose for which the uniform requirement was adopted--identification of warehouse personnel. The Union's assertion that the proposals are for the purpose of assuring that the Agency provide employees with an adequate type and quantity of uniform is convincing and uncontroverted. These proposals are, therefore, to the same effect as Proposals B and C in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 217 and Veterans Administration Medical Center, Augusta, Georgia, 21 FLRA No. 13 (1986), which we found negotiable under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. We see no basis for a different conclusion here. Because Proposals 1 and 2 do not interfere at all with the purpose for which the Agency has adopted the uniform requirement, it is not necessary to apply any test for determining whether there is "excessive interference" with any management right[2] under section 7106(b)(3). National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986).

C. Negotiability of Union Proposal 3

Union Proposal 3 directly interferes with the Agency's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work. It is materially identical to Union Proposal 1 in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2094, AFL-CIO and

---

[2] We have found that under some circumstances a requirement that employees wear uniforms was an exercise of the right to determine internal security under section 7106(a)(1), and that a proposal that employees have an option not to wear the uniform was nonnegotiable. Veterans Administration Medical Center, Augusta, Georgia, 21 FLRA No. 13. We have found under other circumstances that a requirement that employees wear a uniform was an exercise of the right to determine methods and means of performing work under section 7106(b)(1). Division of Military and Naval Affairs, State of New York, Albany, New York and New York Council, Association of Civilian Technicians, 15 FLRA 288 (1984), affirmed sub nom. New York Council, Association of Civilian Technicians v. FLRA, 757 F.2d 502 (2d Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 1065 S.Ct. 137 (1985).

Veterans Administration Medical Center, New York, New York, 19 FLRA No. 120 (1985). Based on the reasoning set forth in that case, we arrive at the above conclusion in this case.

The issue, then, is whether the proposal here which is intended as an appropriate arrangement interferes to an excessive degree with the exercise of the right to assign work.[3] The Union states that the purpose of Union Proposal 3 is to facilitate employees' ability to wear their own clothes, as opposed to the uniform, to and from work. It asserts that this would reduce the adverse effects on employees of the uniform requirement but offers no explanation of the assertion. We accept for purposes of this decision, without deciding, that this uniform requirement has an adverse effect on employees. We believe that the pivotal questions we must address in deciding whether there is an excessive interference with management's right are:

1) Whether and how the proposal would address or compensate for the adverse effects; and

2) whether the negative impact of the proposal on management's rights is disproportionate to the benefits to be derived.

In addressing the first question, it is significant to note that the Agency does not prohibit employees from wearing their uniforms to and from work. It appears that the decision whether to change clothing at work is purely a matter of individual employee preference. Given this, we conclude that the thrust of the proposal is to eliminate the need for those employees who prefer changing at work to use their own, nonwork time.

In addressing the second question, we note that the proposal would result in a loss to the Agency of twenty minutes each work day during which it could not assign work of its choosing to those employees. This would have a significant negative impact on its right to assign work. We believe that this negative impact outweighs the benefit to employees in not having to use their own time to exercise their option to change clothes at work. We conclude that the proposal is not an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) because it would excessively interfere with the Agency's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposals 1 and 2. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Union's petition for review as to Union Proposal 3 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

and Case No. 3-CA-30319

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority based on a stipulation of facts by the parties under section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The parties have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. Briefs for the Authority's consideration were filed by the Respondent, the General Counsel and the Charging Party.

The General Counsel alleges in its complaint that the Federal Aviation Administration (the Respondent or FAA) violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) in two respects: first, by implementing changes in working conditions without affording the Professional Airways Systems Specialists, AFL-CIO (PASS or the Union) an opportunity to negotiate over the impact and implementation of those changes; and, second, by refusing to negotiate with the Union's designated representatives concerning the changes. In this regard, the General Counsel alleges that the Respondent committed separate violations at six of its Airway Facilities Sectors (AFS) and/or Air Route Traffic Control Centers (ARTCC) in several different cities: Auburn, Washington; Nashua, New Hampshire; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Houston, Texas; Seattle, Washington; and Albany, New York.

II. Background

On December 31, 1981, PASS was certified as the exclusive representative of a nationwide unit of the Respondent's employees. The unit included, but was not limited to, the Respondent's nonprofessional employees at its Airway Facilities operation. This nationwide unit was previously represented by the Federal Aviation Science and Technological Association (FASTA). On April 14, 1983, PASS was certified as the exclusive representative for nationwide consolidated units of the Respondent's professional and nonprofessional employees.

The Respondent and FASTA had negotiated an agreement which became effective in 1977 for a two-year period and was automatically renewed by its terms for specified periods until its expiration by notice from PASS. By letter to the Respondent's Administrator dated May 28, 1982, PASS' National President stated that he had received "persistent reports of local and regional FAA management proposals to make changes in conditions of employment within the unit," that "any prior bargaining authority given to any PASS representative other than [himself was] . . . revoked with respect to the national unit," and that he should be "notified of all proposed changes in conditions of employment of bargaining unit members . . . ." By letter dated May 16, 1983, PASS' National President again advised the Respondent's Administrator that notices involving changes in conditions of employment of unit employees should be directed to him.

III. Analysis of the Agency's Obligation to Bargain

The Respondent asserts that its bargaining obligation on the changes in working conditions was limited to consultation by virtue of provisions in the FASTA agreement which, in its view, constitute a clear and unequivocal waiver of the Union's right under the Statute to negotiate over the impact and implementation of those changes in working conditions. The Respondent maintains that this waiver is binding on PASS. Further, the Respondent contends that, under the FASTA agreement, it was only required to, and did in fact, notify the local Union representatives concerning the proposed changes and afford such representatives an opportunity to consult on the changes prior to their implementation. We disagree.

The Authority previously considered and ruled on this issue in Federal Aviation Administration, Northwest Mountain Region, Seattle, Washington, and Federal Aviation Administration, Washington, D.C., 14 FLRA 644 (1984), a case also involving the FAA, PASS, and the same FASTA agreement as involved here. We held that the waiver of bargaining rights contained in the FASTA agreement involved a permissive subject of bargaining, which was binding during the life of the agreement, but was terminable by either party once the agreement expired. We found that management could not insist upon the continuation of the waiver provision contained in the expired agreement when PASS notified management that it would no longer be bound by the provision, and would exercise its bargaining rights. See also Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Los Angeles, California, 15 FLRA 100 (1984); and Federal Aviation Administration, Washington, D.C., 17 FLRA 142 (1985).

The rationale set forth in the three decisions applies equally here. The Authority finds that, once the Union notified the Respondent that it elected to terminate the waiver provision of the expired agreement by letter dated May 28, 1982, the Respondent could no longer continue the practice developed under the provision so as to preclude bargaining over procedures and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the changes. Further, based on the rationale in Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, San Diego, California, 15 FLRA 407 (1984), the Authority finds that, once the Union exercised its statutory right to designate a new representative to receive notice and to bargain on the matters involved here by letters dated May 28, 1982, and May 16, 1983, the Respondent could no longer continue the practice developed under the expired agreement.

IV. Changes Giving Rise to the Duty to Bargain by Agency Location

A. Auburn, Washington (AFS, ARTCC)

In May of 1982, the Respondent notified PASS' Midwest Region and Western Region Vice Presidents of its proposal to implement the "Discrete Function Concept" which would reorganize the organizational structure of three of its Air Route Traffic Control Centers and Airway Facilities Sectors, including the Auburn facilities in the Respondent's Northwest Mountain Region and requested comments on the proposal before June 25, 1982. By letter dated June 11, 1982, PASS' Western Region Vice President notified the Respondent's Northwest Region Chief that the only person authorized to bargain for the Union was PASS' National President. On August 13, 1982, the Respondent's Auburn Sector Manager notified PASS' local representative that the "Discrete Function Concept" would be implemented at Auburn on October 31, 1982. On September 29, 1982, the Auburn managers met with PASS' local representatives, offering to consult as to the facility reorganization. By memorandum dated September 30, 1982, PASS' local representative informed the Auburn Sector Manager that PASS demanded the right to negotiate as to the impact and implementation of any changes in working conditions. No such opportunity was afforded, and the Respondent implemented the reorganization on or about October 31, 1982.

As a result of the Respondent's implementation of the "Discrete Function Concept" at its Auburn facilities, several changes occurred in the working conditions of its bargaining unit employees: (1) unit employees who desired to take annual leave were required to notify their unit supervisor at least 24 hours in advance; (2) unit employees were required to sign a log upon reporting to work; (3) new basic watch schedules of employees in the Radar/Communications and the Radar Data Processing units were established; and (4) new holiday schedule guidelines were established for unit employees. Also, by memorandum dated October 18, 1982, unit employees were notified that the prior practice of excusing personnel from holiday work, by crew rather than by name, had also been changed. The memorandum stated that, as of November 1, 1982, "each unit's holiday work schedule will be equalbility [sic] derived and posted 21 days prior by the respective unit's supervisor consistent with the [FASTA] agreement."

B. Nashua, New Hampshire (AFS), and Boston, Massachusetts (ARTCC)

On August 31, 1982, the Respondent's Nashua AFS/ARTCC Sector Manager informed PASS' local representative of a proposed reorganization involving the establishment of new watch schedules and position description changes for Radar GS-12 and Radar Microwave Link (RML) - TRACON GS-12 Electronic Technician positions. By letter to the Respondent's Nashua AFS/ARTCC Assistant Manager dated September 1, 1982, PASS' local representative requested negotiations on the proposed reorganization announced on August 31, and designated the Union's National President as its negotiator. On September 19, 1982, the National President advised the Respondent's Nashua AFS/ARTCC Sector Manager of the Union's desire to negotiate over the proposed reorganization. On October 1, 1982, the Respondent's Nashua AFS/ARTCC Acting Sector Manager declined to negotiate, but offered instead to consult over the proposed new watch schedules and position descriptions.

The change in position descriptions was implemented on October 26, 1982. Under the new position descriptions, some technicians' responsibilities with regard to the Radar Microwave Link System were reduced from primary to secondary. The new position descriptions contained a new provision requiring technicians to climb towers of various heights to service aviation equipment. At the Nashua facility, there are two towers, each about 150 feet in height. None of the affected bargaining unit employees had been previously required to climb towers and none has had training for performing such tasks. As of the date of the parties' stipulation, the Respondent had not yet required these employees to perform this new responsibility.

On January 5, 1983, the Respondent's Nashua AFS Manager notified PASS' local representative orally that implementation of the new watch schedules would take effect on April 17, 1983. On February 7 and 24, 1983, PASS' National President reiterated the Union's demand for negotiations over the proposed change in watch schedules. The Respondent again declined to negotiate, and implemented the new watch schedule on May 1, 1983. Prior to implementation of the new watch schedules, the bargaining unit employees all worked on the same 24-hour-per-day, five-crew-rotation watch schedule. Under the new watch schedules, employees now work on either a five-crew or four-crew rotation schedule for 16 hours each day.

C. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania (AFS), Greater Pittsburgh International Airport

On March 9, 1982, the Respondent's Pittsburgh AFS Manager notified unit employees of a proposed reorganization of the Pittsburgh facility. The proposed reorganization would replace the existing five-crew organization with a separate NAVAIDS Unit and a three-crew Radar/ARTS/ Communications group. The NAVAIDS Unit would have a unit supervisor and the Radar/ARTS/Communications technicians would work a 24-hour shift with supervision by three operation supervisors who would rotate 16 hours a day. On the same date, PASS' local representative spoke to the Respondent's Pittsburgh AFS Manager and indicated that the Union had some concerns about the reorganization.

On August 10, 1982, the Respondent's Airway Facilities Division Manager, Eastern Region, issued a memorandum to all Sector personnel explaining the proposed reorganization and establishing an implementation date of September 7, 1982. On August 15 and September 7, 1982, PASS' National President contacted the Respondent's Airway Facilities Division Manager, Eastern Region, and requested negotiations regarding the proposed reorganization. The Division Manager declined to negotiate, and the reorganization was implemented on September 7, 1982.

As a result of the reorganization, unit employees assigned to the mid-shift (2330-0730 hours) were left without an on-duty supervisor. As explained in the Respondent's memorandum, these employees became "responsible for coordinating and carrying out overall Airway Facilities operations at the greater Pitt Hub during the mid-shift exactly as the Operations Supervisor does during the day and evening shift. . . ." (Emphasis supplied.) This responsibility included "a number of other coordinating and consulting type functions that extended beyond their parochial technical skill area insofar as is reasonable to expect based on formalization training, experience and certification requirements." Several of the new "coordinating and consulting type functions" included: (1) consulting with air traffic control officials and giving "best counsel and judgment" concerning overall Airway Facility operations and facilities; (2) notifying the appropriate first-level supervisor, the assistant manager, or manager, of urgent operational matters, such as accidents or unexpected absences of duty personnel; (3) assuring that appropriate entries are made in the watch log; and (4) not leaving duty stations unless properly relieved.

D. Houston, Texas (AFS), and Houston (ARTCC)

On July 19, 1982, the Respondent's Houston AFS/ARTCC Manager (the Manager) held discussions with PASS' local representative regarding a proposed reorganization at the Houston facilities, including proposed changes in crew alignments and employee watch schedules. During these conversations, the Manager informed PASS' local representative that the planned reorganization would entail a new seven-crew watch schedule. In conjunction with these discussions, PASS' local representative submitted specific comments and views for consideration by the Manager. On October 18, 1982, PASS' local representative submitted three watch schedules for consideration by the Manager. On December 14, 1982, the Manager informed PASS' local representative that he rejected PASS' proposed schedules. On December 23, 1982, the Manager notified PASS' local representative that the Union representative's views had been considered in the development of the new watch schedules, but that an alternative schedule had been adopted, which would be posted on December 24, 1982, and implemented following a 90-day posting period.

On January 13 and 17, 1983, PASS's National President contacted the Manager and requested an opportunity to bargain over the changes which would result from the reorganization. The Manager did not agree to negotiate and the reorganization was implemented on March 27, 1983.

Prior to the seven-crew reorganization, work crew realignments, and watch schedule changes, the Houston facilities' unit employees were assigned to one of five work crews, with each work crew having the same duties and responsibilities. Under the five-crew arrangement, unit employees worked under a rotating watch schedule. Under the new seven-crew concept, unit employees were assigned either to one of seven work "crews" or to one of five work "units." Employees assigned to the work "units" have primary responsibility for the repair and maintenance of the Houston facilities' critical function aviation equipment. Employees assigned to the work "crews" have secondary responsibility over critical function equipment. If a work "crew" employee discovers a malfunction in a piece of aviation equipment, he must call in an employee from a work "unit" to do the repair work. The resulting repair work is done chiefly by the work "unit," with assistance from the work "crew." Formerly, there was no distinction among employees as to the servicing and repair of equipment. There are no provisions for the rotation of unit employees between the work "crews" and work "units." Also, employees assigned to "crews" have lesser technical training requirements, that is, they are no longer required to attend the FAA Academy in Oklahoma for periodic training. In addition, as a result of the work crew realignments, unit employees' watch schedules changed to a seven-crew rotating schedule.

E. Seattle, Washington (AFS)

On October 22, 1982, the Respondent's Supervisor of the RAD/ARTS Communication Unit at the Seattle facility met with Electronic Technicians to discuss the transfer of Maintenance Mechanic duties to Electronic Technicians. PASS' local representative attended this meeting. On October 26, 1982, a meeting of managers and Maintenance Mechanics was held to develop recommendations on the distribution of Maintenance Mechanic duties. A PASS local representative also attended this meeting. The Respondent implemented the transfer of certain Maintenance Mechanic job tasks to Electronic Technicians in October and November of 1982.

The transferred Maintenance Mechanic tasks involved preventive maintenance checks on mechanical equipment. Preventive maintenance checks, depending on the type of equipment, were performed monthly, every six weeks, or biannually. In addition, the Seattle AFS Electronic Technicians became responsible for updating the Respondent's Handbooks and Preventive maintenance charts. Prior to October of 1982, the Maintenance Mechanics had primary responsibility for performing monthly preventive maintenance checks on Seattle AFS equipment; Electronic Technicians were sometimes required to perform these monthly checks.

F. Albany, New York, and Albany Air Traffic Control Tower (AFS)

On September 21, 1982, the Respondent's Chief of the NAVCOM Unit at its Albany AFS posted proposed watch schedules for certain bargaining unit employees and notified PASS' alternate local representative of the proposed changes. Those changes would reduce the existing watch schedule from a four-man rotation to a three-man rotation. Upon receiving notification of the proposed changes, PASS' alternate local representative asked the Respondent's NAVCOM Chief whether two developmental unit employees would be added to the proposed three-man watch schedules. The NAVCOM Chief responded that the two developmental unit employees would be placed on an administrative work week schedule (for example, 8:00 a.m to 4:30 p.m.) and would not be added to the proposed three-man watch schedule because they were not yet fully trained.

By memorandum to the Respondent's Albany AFS Manager dated November 22, 1982, PASS' local representative requested bargaining over the proposed new watch schedules. The Respondent's Manager declined to negotiate. Subsequently, PASS' National President contacted the Respondent's Albany Assistant Sector Manager and requested bargaining; the latter also declined to negotiate. The new three-man watch schedule was implemented on January 1, 1983.

V. Conclusion as to the Duty to Bargain at the Agency Locations

The parties stipulated that the changes discussed above in Part IV, as to all of the agency's locations, were implemented by the Respondent without providing advance notice to the National President of the Union, its designated representative, or affording the Union an opportunity to negotiate over the impact and implementation of the changes. The Respondent's sole defense is that its actions were in accord with the provisions of the FASTA agreement. Since the waiver of bargaining rights contained in the expired FASTA agreement was no longer binding on PASS and the Respondent, we find that the Respondent's failure to notify the National President, and afford PASS an opportunity to negotiate about procedures for implementing the changes at the agency's facilities listed in Part IV, and appropriate arrangements for unit employees adversely affected by the changes prior to their implementation, constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. See also United States Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 18 FLRA No. 8 (1985); United States Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 19 FLRA No. 62 (1985).*/

VI. The Remedy

The General Counsel and PASS request a status quo ante order to remedy the unfair labor practices by the Respondent. In our view, such a measure is not warranted here. We have balanced the nature and circumstances of the violation against the degree of disruption in government operations that would be caused by such a remedy, and taken into consideration the various factors set forth in Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982), in making this determination. We also note that PASS and the Respondent acknowledge that the changes instituted by the Respondent related to the FAA's national plan to reorganize personnel, and to modernize the nation's air traffic control system over a period of twenty years. In our view, an order to rescind the changes involved in this case, and to restore all conditions of employment which were in effect prior to such reorganization, would result in substantial disruption of the Respondent's operations and likely interfere with the Respondent's efforts to improve the national air traffic control system. We find it sufficient to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute to order the Respondent to bargain, upon request, about the procedures and appropriate arrangements for unit employees adversely affected by the changes involved here. See, for example, Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 19 FLRA No. 61 (1985).

*/ It is clear from the parties' stipulation and the General Counsel's brief that the alleged violations as to all locations involve only the refusal by the Respondent to afford the Union an opportunity to bargain concerning the impact and implementation of the changes involved in this case.

As we stated recently in issuing a prospective bargaining order and rejecting a union's contention that a status quo ante remedy should be granted under circumstances where the potential disruption to the agency's operations was substantial:

> A prospective bargaining order is neither inadequate nor inherently restrictive of the parties' right to address the effects on unit employees of changes already made. . . . Rather, it allows the parties the flexibility to bargain freely with regard to how past actions may have affected any given employee. Bargaining which explores such effects may itself reveal situations that call for retroactive remedial action, about which the parties are free to agree.

Environmental Protection Agency, 21 FLRA No. 98 (1986), slip op. at 3-4.

With regard to the General Counsel's and PASS' requests that the remedy be nationwide in scope, the Authority finds that a posting of the remedial unfair labor practice notice at the respective facilities where the violations occurred will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute. This is consistent with our findings in similar cases involving FAA's unlawful insistence on a waiver of PASS' statutory rights. See Federal Aviation Administration, Northwest Mountain Region; Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Los Angeles, California; Federal Aviation Administration, Washington, D.C.; United States Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 18 FLRA No. 8 (1985); Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 19 FLRA No. 61 (1985); and United States Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 19 FLRA No. 116 (1985). The unlawful conduct in the this case occurred before the issuance of the Authority's decision on the central issue in Federal Aviation Administration, Northwest Mountain Region. Since there is no indication that the FAA has refused to abide by the Authority's decision in that case or in the other related cases, or that it will continue to engage in such unlawful conduct in the future, the Authority finds no basis for ordering a different posting requirement than that ordered below.

ORDER

Under section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority orders that the Federal Aviation Administration, Washington, D.C., must do the following:

Such forms shall be signed by an appropriate official of each respective facility, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days after posting, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority on a petition for review of negotiability issues filed by the Union under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). The petition seeks review of the disapproval of a number of provisions in the parties' local supplemental agreement during review of that agreement by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute.

II. Procedural Issues

The Agency argues that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and that it is otherwise procedurally defective because the Union did not serve a copy of the petition on the Agency head and did not attach a copy of management's declaration of negotiability to the petition filed with the Authority. The Agency moves that the petition be dismissed on those procedural grounds. The Authority has determined, however, that the Union's petition was timely filed under the Authority's Rules and Regulations and that any other procedural deficiencies were corrected by the Union upon notification and within the time provided by the Authority for such corrective action. Accordingly, the Agency's motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

In addition, the Authority will not consider the Union's petition regarding Article 18, Section E of the parties' agreement since the Agency states that it did not disapprove that provision. Likewise, the Authority will not consider the Union's petition regarding Article 27, Section A since the Union withdrew its petition for review as to that provision.

III. Provision 1

Article 18 - Assignment and Hours of Work

> Section C: Any institutional department finding it necessary to pay overtime will give first consideration for overtime work to employees within the department, then to other qualified employees of the institution.

A. Positions of the Parties

In its disapproval of the provision, the Agency declared that the language was negotiable only if management retained the authority to make final determinations as to the qualifications required to perform overtime work and if the provision did not preclude management from assigning work to employees in other departments on a non-overtime basis. In its petition for review, the Union states that the provision allows management to unilaterally determine the qualifications needed to perform work and to assign work to any employee, regardless of department, consistent with the "first consideration" for overtime work requirement of the provision. The Union further argues that the provision does not pertain to non-overtime work and, therefore, that it does not preclude management from acting in any way with respect to non-overtime work assignments. In its statement of position concerning the Union's petition, the Agency acknowledges that, in view of the Union's interpretation of the disputed provision, its objection to the provision based on the Agency's concern for ensuring management's right to determine qualifications for performing work is now moot. However, the Agency continues to maintain that it is not clear whether the provision is intended to preclude management from assigning work to employees in other departments during regular duty hours. The Agency argues that, if the provision is so intended, then it is nonnegotiable because it would interfere with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The agreement provision disapproved by the Agency head expressly deals with overtime work. Moreover, as clearly and unequivocally interpreted by the Union, which interpretation is consistent with the plain language of the provision, the provision in no manner prevents management from assigning work to employees in other departments during regular duty hours. The Authority therefore concludes that the provision does not interfere with management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute and that it is within the duty to bargain.

IV. Provision 2

> Article 18 - Assignment and Hours of Work
> Section H: The principal day shift hours of work will be 7:30 AM to 4:00 PM with a half hour uninterrupted lunch period.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency's position essentially is that the provision concerns a permissive subject of bargaining under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and that the parties' National Controlling Agreement prohibits local supplemental bargaining on such permissive subjects. In support of its position, the Agency relies on the Authority's decision in Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado, 16 FLRA 1104 (1984), and argues that since the provision concerns the hours of the day shift, the shift when most of the institution's offices are open and business and activities are conducted, the provision would have the effect of determining the numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a tour of duty, a matter covered by section 7106(b)(1), which is negotiable only at management's election. The Agency also states that if the provision simply requires the Union to be informed of any proposed change in existing day shift hours and given an opportunity to bargain on the impact and implementation of such a change, the provision is negotiable.

The Union argues that the provision simply describes the principal day-shift hours at the institution; that it does not establish a shift or tour of duty within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute; that it does not limit management from conducting any business on any shift; and that it does not preclude the employer from adjusting the shift or establishing a new one so long as the rights of the exclusive representative are respected. The Union therefore maintains that there is no section 7106(b)(1) issue presented by the provision and that the Authority's decision in Lowry is not applicable in this case. Moreover, the Union argues that even if the provision concerns a permissive subject of bargaining under section 7106(b)(1), since the local parties bargained and agreed upon the provision, management was thereafter precluded from asserting any section 7106(b)(1) arguments as a basis for disapproving the provision during review of the agreement under section 7114(c) of the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that the Agency has made no showing that the disputed provision establishes a new shift or changes the hours of an existing shift. Thus, the Agency has failed to establish that the provision affects the numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a tour of duty within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. The provision, as interpreted by the Union, simply describes the hours of the existing principal day shift at the institution. Moreover, the provision does not prevent management from changing the hours of that shift or establishing any new shift, consistent of course with the rights of the Union in such a situation. The Authority therefore concludes that the provision is within the duty to bargain. Consequently, it is irrelevant whether or not the parties' Master Agreement prohibits local supplemental agreements on permissive subjects of bargaining.

V. Provision 3

> Article 18 - Assignment and Hours of Work
> Section I: The employer agrees that when an employee works three (3) hours in excess of eight hours, he/she, shall be given the opportunity to purchase a meal or time off to obtain a meal.

A. Positions of the Parties

In its disapproval notice, the Agency stated that this provision would be appropriate if the local parties agreed that the time spent away from work obtaining and eating a meal is not compensable as overtime. In its petition for review, the Union maintains that the provision does not provide authorization to approve or deny overtime. The Union further maintains that circumstances may or may not warrant overtime in a particular situation, but that overtime compensation determinations are subject to other provisions of the parties' agreement and governing laws and decisions of the Comptroller General. In its statement of position regarding the Union's petition, the Agency states that since the Union appears to recognize that the provision cannot authorize overtime pay for meal times and that overtime is subject to law and Comptroller General decisions, the issue "appears to be moot." Agency Statement at 8. However, the Agency did not rescind its disapproval of the provision.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Union has specifically interpreted the disputed provision as not authorizing overtime for meal times and acknowledged that overtime compensation is a matter subject to law, Comptroller General decisions and other provisions of the parties' agreement. Given that interpretation, which the Agency does not refute and which is consistent with the plain language of the provision, the Authority concludes that the provision is within the duty to bargain.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency rescind its disapproval of the provisions of the local parties' agreement numbered 1, 2 and 3 above.*/

*/ The Agency acknowledged that its disapproval of Provisions 1 and 3 might be moot. As discussed in our decision, the Union's clear and unequivocal statements of intent concerning these provisions show that the Agency's claims are baseless. Any disagreement over these provisions should have been resolved bilaterally. In the future, we urge the Agency to act in a more positive manner, so as not to burden the Union and the Authority with the resolution of unnecessary disputes.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). The petition concerns the negotiability of three proposals submitted in response to the Agency's implementation of a reduction-in-force action involving the separation from employment of temporary employees and a new policy whereby it restricted permanent, part-time employees to work within their established tours of duty.

II. Union Proposal 1

> Permanent part-time employees who are restricted to a tour of duty of less than forty hours per week will be assigned to a reduced workload.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that because this proposal would require management to assign a reduced workload to positions in the bargaining unit, it directly interferes with management's right, under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, to assign work. The Agency also contends that the proposal interferes with management's right, under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, to establish a new shift or tour of duty.

The Union argues that, under applicable Authority precedent, this proposal is within the duty to bargain because it contains general non-quantitative language which provides, at most, a procedure or an arrangement by which a management right is exercised.

B. Analysis

This proposal was submitted in response to management's new policy of restricting part-time employees from working beyond their part-time tours of duty. Prior to management's decision, part-time employees could work up to 40 hours per week. As a result of the change, these employees are now precluded from working up to 40 hours per week.

The Union's explanation that the intent of the proposal is merely for management to give "consideration" to the reduction of full-time workload assignments is contrary to the explicit language of the proposal. That is, the proposal is not limited to considering the reduction of work assignments, but instead would mandate that management reduce work assignments in circumstances where employees work less than full-time hours.

The Agency has provided no support for its claim that this proposal interferes with its right to establish tours of duty under section 7106(b)(1). Thus, such contention cannot be sustained. However, this proposal is to the same effect as Proposal V found nonnegotiable in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 6 FLRA 508 (1981). Proposal V in that case required the agency to refrain from assigning cases to employees "when the caseload is unmanageable." The Authority reasoned that the proposal imposed a precondition on the assignment of cases to employees and under some circumstances, and irrespective of the agency's immediate needs, prevented the agency from making case assignments. Thus, the Authority concluded the proposal was inconsistent with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. Based on the reasons expressed in Internal Revenue Service this proposal, which precludes management from making work assignments in circumstances where employees work less than full-time, is also inconsistent with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B). See also National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1622 and U.S. Commissary, Fort Meade, Maryland, 16 FLRA 998 (1984) (Provision 1). Since this proposal would directly interfere with management's right to assign work it does not constitute a negotiable procedure within the meaning of section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982).

We turn now to the question of whether this proposal constitutes an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute and apply the tests set out in National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986). Here, the Union has not identified any adverse effect which would result solely from the assignment of work to the employees in question. That is, there is no indication that these employees are expected to perform the assigned work in a manner that is inconsistent with their being restricted to working less than 40 hours per week. But, even assuming that the proposal was intended to ameliorate an adverse effect perceived by the assignment of a full workload to permanent part-time employees who are now restricted to working only the hours of their established part-time tour of duty, the proposed amelioration would expressly preclude the Agency from assigning a certain amount of work at all in these circumstances. Such a proposed amelioration, which totally abrogates the exercise of a management right, would excessively interfere with management's right to assign work and therefore does not constitute an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3). See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183, 1188 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981).

C. Conclusion

This proposal violates management's right, under section 7106(a)(2)(B), to assign work and does not constitute a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) or an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

III. Union Proposal 2

> Temporary employees will be recalled based on their length of service with the Social Security Administration.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that because the proposal requires management to recall separated employees based on seniority, it interferes with management's discretion to hire under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute and to make selections for appointment under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute. The Agency further contends that because the proposal requires management to rehire employees without taking into account their actions while not employed, it interferes with Government-wide regulations concerning "suitability" set out at 5 CFR §§ 731.201 and 731.202.

The Union contends that the proposal is within the duty to bargain because it is a procedure or an arrangement by which a management right is exercised.

B. Analysis

This proposal applies to temporary employees who were terminated without personal fault. According to the Union it would require that these former employees "will be rehired when allocations become available based on their length of service with the Agency." The Union also indicates that management would be able to determine the continued suitability for employment of employees rehired according to this proposal. Consequently, contrary to the Agency's claim, this proposal does not violate 5 CFR 731.202. However, there is nothing in the record to indicate that once allocations became available management could elect to not recall temporary employees and utilize such allocations for permanent positions instead or to elect to accomplish its work without any increase in staff, permanent or temporary. Thus, this proposal is distinguishable from the proposal found to be an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute in National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Department of the Army, Kansas Army National Guard, Topeka, Kansas, 21 FLRA No. 48 (1986). The proposal in the Topeka case required management to return employees to their former positions at their former duty stations only if and when such positions were vacant and only then if the agency decided to fill them. No question was raised in that case as to whether the employees possessed the qualifications for the vacant positions since the employees in question were merely returning to positions they would still occupy but for their reassignment as a result of a RIF. Further, the proposal specifically preserved the agency's right to elect to fill or not fill vacant positions. Unlike the proposal in the Topeka case this proposal would absolutely eliminate the Agency's discretion concerning the filling of positions. Thus, this proposal directly interferes with the Agency's rights to hire and select and as a result, it does not constitute a negotiable procedure within the meaning of section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982). In addition, by mandating the recall of temporary employees this proposal would constitute an excessive interference with management's right to hire and assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute and with management's right, under section 7106(a)(2)(C), to make selections in filling positions. It is not, therefore, an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. See also National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Department of the Army, Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 105 (1986) (Proposal 2).

Even assuming that this proposal does not constitute an excessive interference with management's rights, it is outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation, that is, requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM), which permits agencies to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. This proposal would require the Agency to select for vacancies only temporary employees who have been separated from employment. By so doing, it would prevent the Agency from making selections from any appropriate source. Thus, this proposal violates Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, Chapter 335 of the FPM, a Government-wide regulation, and on that basis is outside the duty to bargain. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2677 and Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Community Services, 21 FLRA No. 22 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2677 v. FLRA, No. 86-1287 (D.C. Cir. May 19, 1986); American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Local 2830, AFL-CIO and Department of Justice, 21 FLRA No. 121 (1986) (First disputed sentence).

C. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, this proposal does not constitute either a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) or an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. We also hold that this proposal conflicts with FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-4, and, therefore, is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

III. Union Proposal 3

> Permanent part-time employees will be converted at the earliest opportunity, upon request, to permanent full-time positions.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that because this proposal requires management to convert part-time employees to full-time status upon their request, it interferes with management's right to hire under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. The Agency further contends that the proposal interferes with management's right to determine the number of employees of the Agency under section 7106(a)(1).

The Union argues that this proposal is within the duty to bargain because it contains general non-quantitative language which provides for reasonable application and is, at most, a procedure or arrangement by which a management right is exercised. Furthermore, according to the Union, the term, "at the earliest opportunity," refers to, "when either a full-time position is vacated by another employee or when the employer determines that the workload justifies the establishment of a full-time position."

B. Analysis

1. Appropriate arrangements within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute

This proposal was intended as an arrangement for part-time employees who previously worked a full-time schedule but who because of funding problems are now restricted to working only the hours of their part-time schedule. Clearly, such employees are adversely affected by management's right to reduce their hours. In this circumstance, then, this proposal mandates that such part-time employees upon their request will be converted to, or in other words, selected for, permanent full-time positions at the earliest opportunity. While the term "earliest opportunity" is not defined in the proposal, the Union states it is intended to mean when "a full-time position is vacated by another employee and available or when the employer determines the workload justifies the establishment of a full-time position." Thus, in our opinion, this proposal would apply only after management determines to fill a vacant full-time position. Interpreted in this manner the proposal would not violate management's right to determine the number of employees under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. Further, there is nothing in the record which indicates that management would be unable to determine the qualifications of the part-time employee for the full-time position. In fact, it appears that but for the funding restrictions which resulted in part-time employees being limited to working only a part-time schedule those part-time employees would have been performing the duties of such full-time positions.

The Authority finds that this proposal has the same effect as the proposal in the Authority's Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984), affirmed in the Authority's Decision and Order on Motion for Reconsideration (July 11, 1985), petition for review filed, No. 85-1562 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 6, 1985). In that case the Authority reaffirmed its prior decision that a proposal requiring the Agency to select available qualified repromotion eligible employees when filling vacancies in the bargaining unit directly interfered with management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute. Thus, the proposal in this case also directly interferes with the Agency's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(C) and thereby does not constitute a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982). The Authority also concluded in the Decision and Order on Remand that the proposal constituted a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute notwithstanding its limitation on management's discretion to determine the relative qualifications of repromotion eligibles. Accordingly, the Authority finds, for the reasons stated more fully in that decision, that the proposal here does not excessively interfere with management's rights and, therefore, constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

2. Inconsistent with Government-wide Rule or Regulation

The Authority also concluded in its Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census that while the proposal constituted an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3), it nevertheless was outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it was inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation, that is, Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the FPM, which would permit agencies to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. The proposal would require the Agency to select only permanent part-time employees for permanent full-time vacancies which it has decided to fill. It would, therefore, have the same effect as the proposal in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, that is, it would prevent the Agency from making selections from any appropriate source. Thus, for the reasons stated more fully in our Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, this proposal violates Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the FPM, a Government-wide regulation, and is outside the duty to bargain. See also Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Community Services; Department of Justice.

C. Conclusion

We find that this proposal would directly interfere with the Agency's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute and therefore does not constitute a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. We also find that the proposal would not excessively interfere with management's rights and, thus, that it constitutes an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the exercise of such rights, within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. However, we also hold, based upon the analysis provided in our Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984), affirmed in the Authority's Decision and Order on Motion for Reconsideration (July 11, 1985), petition for review filed, No. 85-1562 (D.C. Cir. September 6, 1985), that this proposal conflicts with FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-4, and, therefore, is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief limited to the Judge's recommended remedy. The General Counsel filed an opposition to the Respondent's exceptions and a motion to strike portions of such exceptions.*/

---

*/ The General Counsel's motion to strike is directed to the Respondent's contention that certain requested data, the denial of which forms the basis of the complaint in this case, is unavailable. In view of our disposition of this case, it is unnecessary to rule on this motion.

Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge reached at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order as modified below.

In agreement with the Judge, the Authority finds that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by failing to furnish the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Border Patrol Council (AFGE) with the data described in its March 5, 1985 request for information. The Respondent excepts to the remedy contending that certain of the data, namely the Daily Assignment and Equipment Logs (logs) for the eighteen month period requested by the AFGE do not exist. The Respondent contends that these logs are only kept for a thirty day period and then destroyed. Logs covering the period for April 14, 1985 through April 30, 1985 have been retained only because the Respondent's Counsel requested them at the beginning of the hearing. The Respondent also argues that the other documents sought are useless without the corresponding logs. The Respondent asks that the Order be modified to require it to provide the data requested only for the two week period for which it possesses the logs.

Contrary to the Respondent's argument, the record indicates that the logs are maintained at Border Patrol sector headquarters in El Paso, Texas in a file folder for each fiscal year for each particular Border Patrol station. The Authority has addressed the availability of records in the past and has held that it is not an unfair labor practice to fail to produce documents that do not exist. Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), Lowry Air Force Base Exchange, Ft. Carson, Colorado, 13 FLRA 392 (1983). Consequently, while AFGE is entitled to the requested data in the possession of the Respondent for the period in question, the Respondent cannot be held accountable for that data it no longer possesses. In the Authority's view, the availability of the data involved can best be determined during the compliance stage of this proceeding. We shall therefore modify the Order to require the Respondent to supply whatever of the requested data it has in its possession. During the compliance stage of this proceeding, the General Counsel will determine what data is in fact available.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, United States Border Patrol shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to furnish to the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Border Patrol Council, the exclusive representative of its employees, the available data requested in a letter dated March 5, 1985, addressed to the Associate Regional Commissioner for Management, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Southern Regional Office, Dallas, Texas, by Robert J. DECISION

Statement of the Case

This case arose as an unfair labor practice proceeding under the provisions of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq. (hereinafter referred to as "the Statute"), and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

The complaint alleged that since on or about March 14, 1985, the Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, United States Border Patrol (Respondent) has failed and refused to comply with the provisions of Section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute by refusing to furnish to the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Border Patrol Council (Charging Party or Union) certain information relating to a possible grievance concerning alleged irregularities in the Respondent's use of administratively uncontrollable overtime (AUO) as such overtime pertains to bargaining unit members employed by the Respondent as Border Patrol Agents at Respondent's Lordsburg, New Mexico Border Patrol Station. It was further alleged that such conduct violated Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute.

The parties were represented by counsel during the hearing and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, and examine and cross-examine witnesses. Based upon the entire record, including exhibits, relevant evidence adduced at the hearing, and briefs filed by the parties, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

Duties of Bargaining Unit Members

With certain exceptions the union is the exclusive representative for all of Respondent's nonprofessional personnel assigned to Border Patrol Sectors. Included among these bargaining unit employees is a group of Border Patrol agents assigned to the Lordsburg, New Mexico Border Patrol Station.[1] The Station is responsible for patrolling distances up to 80 miles north and south of the Station, and 45 miles west of the Station (Tr. 21). Approximately one and one half hours of driving time is consumed when agents are assigned to work locations 80 miles north or south of the Station, and about 45 minutes of travel is involved if assigned to locations 45 miles west of the Station (Tr. 22-23).

Agent duties relate primarily to apprehending aliens who have entered the United States illegally. This objective is pursued through various work activities designed to accomplish the objective. Agents are assigned line watch (patrolling the border), city patrol (visiting local communities in the Lordsburg area of operations), farm and ranch check (visiting local farms and ranches), traffic observation (patrolling area highways and roads), and industry check (visiting lumber camps in the Lordsburg area) (Tr. 20-21).

[1] It was established that since the beginning of fiscal year 1984 this group has included approximately 15 bargaining unit members. As of the date of the hearing there were 9 Lordsburg Border Patrol Agents assigned to work out of the Lordsburg Station (Tr. 19).

Agents report to the Lordsburg station prior to the commencement of their work shifts in order to check the Daily Assignment and Equipment Log to ascertain their duties (Tr. 21; G.C. Exh. No. 8). Assignments are generally posted three to four days in advance so that agents will know what they will be doing (Tr. 23). Work assignments are rotated. As a result each bargaining unit member is affected by any change in work practices (Tr. 23, 30). Agents spend time at the beginning and end of their shifts performing administrative duties (Tr. 21-22).

Agents Subject to Laws and Regulations Relating to AUO

Border Patrol Agents are subject to laws and regulations relating to AUO. These are reflected in the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 5545(c)(2) and 5 C.F.R. § 550.151 - 550.154. Section 5545(c)(2) of Title 5 provides:

> (c) The head of an agency, with the approval of the Office of Personnel Management, may provide that --
> (2) an employee in a position in which the hours of duty cannot be controlled administratively, and which requires substantial amounts of irregular, unscheduled, overtime duty with the employee generally being responsible for recognizing, without supervision, circumstances which require him to remain on duty, shall receive premium pay for this duty on an annual basis instead of premium pay provided by other provisions of this subchapter, except for regularly scheduled overtime, night, and Sunday duty, and for holiday duty. Premium pay under this paragraph is determined as an appropriate percentage, not less than 10 percent nor more than 25 percent, of such part of the rate of basic pay for the position as does not exceed the minimum rate of basic pay for GS-10, by taking into consideration the frequency and duration of irregular unscheduled overtime duty required in the position.

Under the quoted provision and implementing regulations, AUO is earned by agents as a result of supervisory direction and/or by reason of an agent recognizing, without supervision, circumstances which require an agent to remain on duty (Tr. 24-25, 88).

Compensation for regular overtime work (as distinct from AUO), is payable in accordance with the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 5542. The Comptroller General has ruled that time involved in travel between headquarters and Border Patrol check points, and in performing ministerial duties at headquarters, may qualify as authorized or approved regular overtime (as distinct from AUO), when it is duly authorized in advance and is scheduled to recur on successive days or after specified intervals, as distinguished from situations where schedules are made on a day-to-day or hour-to-hour basis, and where the amount of overtime varies with no discernible pattern (G.C. Exh. No. 3). This ruling held that it was improper to characterize such duly authorized or approved overtime as AUO, but that compensation for such directed overtime work should be paid in accordance with the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 5542, and not 5 U.S.C. § 5545(c)(2).

Respondent Changes Practice Concerning AUO[2]

The record established that in the past, employees had been permitted to find justification for AUO during travel time spent in returning to the Lordsburg Station. Employees did this by endeavoring to locate illegal aliens while driving back to the Lordsburg Station at the end of a shift (Tr. 51). This sometimes involved seeking out violations on the highway, checking culverts for trails, and by using binoculars to observe criminal activity (Tr. 89-91). In such cases agents had been allowed to use their own discretion and then claim AUO to process illegal aliens apprehended.

The Respondent changed this practice by withdrawing the privilege of working AUO based upon criminal activity observed on return trips, or based on criminal activity arising outside of work areas specifically assigned (Tr. 51). Agents were told that AUO could only be based upon activity arising out of areas specifically assigned by the Respondent (Tr. 102). The Union received information that the change in practice outlined had continued for a three-year period (Tr. 35-36).

Respondent's administration of the AUO policy outlined led to a series of corrective actions initiated by Respondent to bring agents into compliance with Lordsburg Station operational directives governing the use of AUO (Tr. 27). Certain bargaining unit employees were of the opinion that administration of this AUO policy was not in accordance with law and regulations governing AUO, particularly with respect to Respondent's refusal to recognize agent discretion to claim AUO in appropriate cases. It was further contended that employees receiving corrective actions might be adversely affected from a career standpoint. It was felt that such employees might unjustifiably be considered insubordinate or uncooperative (Tr. 28, 94-95).

Bargaining Unit Members Apprise Union of Perceived Irregularities in Administration of AUO

In February of 1985, a Lordsburg Border Patrol Agent complained to the Union that agents were being assigned AUO in violation of law (Tr. 23, 78, 93-94). This was followed up by the Union in discussions with other bargaining unit employees (Tr. 29, 78). Some employees felt that they were being improperly denied AUO in some instances, and that in others they were being improperly denied a higher rate of pay associated with directed overtime work (Tr. 28-29). A portion of the dissatisfaction expressed stemmed from the belief that the Respondent was not complying with the cited Comptroller General decision with respect to the assignment of AUO for overtime specifically authorized in advance, and scheduled to recur on successive days, or after specified intervals (Tr. 24, 31, 56-57; G.C. Exh. No. 3).

[2] The complaint does not base any element of the unfair labor practice alleged upon a unilateral change in the terms and conditions of employment.

On the basis of the foregoing, the Union envisioned the possibility of Respondent authorizing or permitting the abuse of AUO in situations wherein AUO was claimed for travel and administrative work specifically approved in advance, and scheduled to recur on successive days (Tr. 44-45, 46-49, 67-68, 78-79, 87-88). It was also felt that Respondent might be improperly denying AUO in situations involving otherwise appropriate AUO work generated during the course of an agent's return to the Lordsburg Station (Tr. 50-52, 58-59, 68-69). The Union determined that proof relating to the abuse of AUO, if available, could be used as the basis for a possible grievance alleging failure on the part of the Respondent to pay bargaining unit employees proper amounts for regular directed overtime work in accordance with the provisions of law, regulation, decisions of the Comptroller General, and the collective bargaining agreement (Tr. 31-32).[3] It was also felt that there might be a basis for the filing of a grievance based on the issuance of corrective actions without legal justification. The Union also saw the possibility of bringing about discontinuance of certain practices, and the possibility of backpay awards (Tr. 76-77).

The Union sought the proof needed to establish a grievance or grievances of the type outlined by submitting a request for information to the Respondent on March 5, 1985 (G.C. Exh. No. 5). The request, in the form of a letter to the Associate Regional Commissioner, Management, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Dallas, Texas, identified specific Lordsburg Station records for fiscal year 1984, and continuing to the date of the request, a period of approximately 18 months.[4] Records identified included unsanitized copies of:

[3] Article 27 of the agreement relates to overtime other than AUO, and Article 4, § B of the agreement makes it clear that the parties intended that "existing or future laws and the regulations of appropriate authorities" would be applicable in the administration of all matters covered by the agreement (G.C. Exh. No. 4).

[4] The Union was advised that illegal practices had continued over a three-year period. However, it was felt that records for an eighteen-month period would provide an adequate basis for either substantiating or disproving employee claims. It was also concluded that the lesser period would facilitate resolution of the issue presented to the Union by bargaining unit employees (Tr. 35-36).

1. Form I-213's (Record of Deportable Alien)
2. Form I-50's (Border Patrol Activity and Time Report)
3. Daily Assignment and Equipment Logs
4. Memoranda submitted by Lordsburg personnel in response to "AUO and shift assignments."

The information was described as being necessary to "adequately represent bargaining unit employees from the Lordsburg Border Patrol Station concerning AUO and Shift assignment [sic] . . . ." The request referenced the definition of "grievance" set out in Section 7103(a)(9) of the Statute, and the duty of an agency to furnish information described in Section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute. It was further noted that the information was needed to permit the Union to "properly research this matter."

The record established that although the request was not specifically limited to documents pertaining to work activity of employee members of the bargaining unit, the Respondent understood from prior practice that such requests related only to documents pertaining to bargaining unit members, and that in this instance such a limited request was being made (Tr. 37-38). This factual showing was not contradicted by the Respondent. It is therefore determined that the Union and Respondent understood the request to be inapplicable to documents relating to the work activity of employees who were not members of the bargaining unit.

By memoranda dated March 14, 1985, the Respondent denied the request on the ground that the subject matter involved was not negotiable, that no change in procedures was being proposed by the Respondent, that there was no expectation of bargaining, and lastly that "the material requested does not appear to be relevant or necessary for any authorized representational duty." (G.C. Exh. No. 9).

The Union replied on or about March 21, 1985, and explained that the material was needed to research complaints made by personnel at the Lordsburg Station (G.C. Exh. No. 10). Again, the statutory definition of "grievance" was referenced, and the earlier March 5th request was resubmitted in its entirety with the clarification.

The record disclosed the following facts concerning the data requested:

1. Form I-213's (Record of Deportable Alien). This form provides details relating to the apprehension of deportable aliens, such as location of apprehension, date and hour of apprehension, identity of Border Patrol Agent involved, and a narrative discussion of the event (G.C. Exh. No. 6; Tr. 38, 62-63).

2. Form I-50's (Border Patrol Activity and Time Report). This form reflects hours worked by Border Patrol Agents; duties performed during the hours worked; AUO credited and the specific hours associated with AUO; and the duties performed during AUO (G.C. Exh. No. 7; Tr. 38-39, 62).

3. Daily Assignment and Equipment Logs - These documents reflect assigned duties and areas wherein duties were scheduled to be performed, together with the hours of duty which specific employees were assigned to work (G.C. Exh. No. 8; Tr. 39-40, 62).

4. Memoranda submitted by Lordsburg personnel in response to "AUO and shift assignments." G.C. Exh. No. 11, an exhibit introduced to illustrate data in this category, reflects details of an agent's response to Respondent's refusal to allow AUO because of Respondent's policy relating to AUO.[5] Such documents would necessarily serve to expose available details of information relating to the Respondent's implementation of AUO policy.

The record revealed that the Union would have been able to reconstruct any irregularities in the payment of regular overtime, and/or the administration of AUO under existing law, by examining and correlating information reflected in the documents described (Tr. 62-63, 65-67).

The record also included an uncontradicted showing that the information sought was normally maintained by the Respondent in the regular course of business; that it was reasonably available; that production would not be unduly burdensome (Tr. 70-74); and that the data sought did not constitute guidance, advice, counsel, or training provided for management officials or supervisors, relating to collective bargaining. Post-hearing argument of counsel concerning the burdensome nature of the request was not supported by the evidence pertaining to this factual issue. Respondent's counsel also argued in her post-hearing brief that Daily Assignment and Equipment Logs were maintained for a 30-day period only. However, the record did not establish that the logs sought herein were not in fact, entirely or in part, available.[6]

Discussion and Conclusions

Section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute provides in pertinent part:

> (b) The duty of an agency and an exclusive representative to negotiate in good faith under subsection (a) of this section shall include the obligation --

---

[5] Respondent's Argument to the contrary notwithstanding, this document was not introduced to establish a basis or support for a specific grievance, but merely to illustrate the nature of documents in this category.

[6] Evidence concerning these elements would ordinarily fall within the purview of Respondent's special knowledge relating to the data sought.

. . . .

> (4) in the case of an agency, to furnish to the exclusive representative involved, or its authorized representative, upon request and, to the extent not prohibited by law, data --
> (A) which is normally maintained by the agency in the regular course of business;
> (B) which is reasonably available and necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining; and
> (C) which does not constitute guidance, advice, counsel, or training provided for management officials or supervisors, relating to collective bargaining . . . ."

Section 7114(b)(4) language mandating production of data reasonably available and necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining includes data necessary to enable a union to fulfill representational responsibilities relating to the effective evaluation and processing of grievances. U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Washington, D.C., 20 FLRA 357 (1985); U.S. Customs Service, Region VII, Los Angeles, California, 10 FLRA 251, 253 (1982); Veterans Administration Regional Office, Denver, Colorado, 7 FLRA 629 (1982).

In a recent decision, Farmers Home Administration, Finance Office, St. Louis, Missouri, 19 FLRA 195 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3354 v. FLRA, No. 85-1493 (D.C. Cir. August 6, 1985), the Authority, relying on its prior decision in Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), Fort Carson, Colorado, 17 FLRA No. 92 (1985), petition for review filed sub. nom. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1345 v. FLRA, No. 85-1378 (D.C. Cir. June 21, 1985)(hereinafter AAFES), held that the disclosure of data sought pursuant to Section 7114(b)(4) requires a case by case determination as to whether the data has been requested, whether it is normally maintained, whether it is reasonably available, whether it is necessary to enable the exclusive representative to fulfill its representational obligations, and also a determination that disclosure of the data sought would not be prohibited by law, including the Privacy Act.[7]

[7] Privacy Act of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-579, 88 Stat. 1897 (codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. § 552a (1982)).

In this case the record shows that the data sought was requested by the Union, that it was sought specifically for the purpose of researching bargaining unit employee complaints concerning possible grievances outlined herein, that the request was refused by the Respondent, that the data was normally maintained by the Respondent, that the data was reasonably available, and that it did not constitute guidance, advice, counsel, or training provided for management officials or supervisors, relating to collective bargaining.

The record also reflected that the data was necessary for the purpose of evaluating possible bargaining unit employee grievances relating to alleged failure on the part of the Respondent to pay employees for directed overtime work and relating to alleged improper denial of AUO associated with duties performed by bargaining unit employees. Such data was also necessary for the purpose of determining whether a basis existed for grieving certain corrective actions initiated by the Respondent against bargaining unit employees for the purpose of implementing AUO policy and procedures.[8]

Denial of access to the data effectively precluded the evaluation of possible grievances based upon the theories outlined, as it clearly appeared that only through a perusal and analysis of the documents requested would the Union be in a position to determine whether a basis for alleged irregularities existed in fact.

In large measure Respondent's defenses relate to issues more appropriately interposed during the course of any grievances filed, and do not, for the most part, relate to the fundamental issue of whether or not the data sought is subject to the provisions of Section 7114(b)(4). Respondent argues at length that no evidentiary basis exists to support a grievance, even though the entire purpose of the request was designed to aid the Union effort to determine whether an evidentiary basis for grievances could be developed. That is, Respondent appears to argue that there is little or no chance of the Union filing a successful grievance; that it is unlikely that helpful evidence would be uncovered; or that Respondent's position on factual and legal issues would be sustained in the event grievances were filed. In the context of the circumstances presented in this case, all of these unsupported contentions were speculative in nature, and did not provide a basis for concluding that the documents were not necessary.

[8] Respondent argues that AUO is not addressed in the collective bargaining agreement and that as a result would not be a grievable matter under the terms of the grievance procedure set out in the collective bargaining agreement. However, this defense was not established with respect to each of the theories advanced by the Union as possible grounds for a grievance. Moreover, it is noted that the term "grievance" is broadly defined in Section 7103(a)(9) of the Statute as: "any complaint-- (A) by any employee concerning any matter relating to the employment of the employee; (B) by any labor organization concerning any matter relating to the employment of any employee; or (C) by any employee, labor organization, or agency concerning-- (i) the effect or interpretation, or a claim of breach, of a collective bargaining agreement; or (ii) any claimed violation, misinterpretation, or misapplication of any law, rule, or regulation affecting conditions of employment . . . ."

Without passing upon the Union's grievance theories, it is sufficient to note that the Union has at least an arguable basis for examining the data on behalf of bargaining unit employees. The demand is not frivolous in nature, and the documents sought are needed to evaluate complaints in the light of existing law and regulations pertaining to directed overtime and AUO. It is not necessary that the Union establish that a grievance will be successfully presented, or that the data sought will produce evidence to establish a grievance. It is sufficient if the record establishes that examination of data is necessary in order to intelligently evaluate the possibility of initiating a viable grievance. On the basis of the factual picture presented it is conceivable that data requested will establish the viability of one or more of the grievance theories advanced by the Union.

As noted the record must reflect a determination that disclosure of the data sought would not be prohibited by law, including the Privacy Act.[9] The record herein does not reflect any indication that disclosure would be prohibited by law.

Arguably the provisions of the Privacy Act would be relevant here unless one of the specific Privacy Act exceptions is applicable. The only possible exception applicable in this case is the one set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 552a(b)(2). This exception permits disclosure of Privacy Act - protected information to the extent such information is "required" to be released under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA).[10] The FOIA provides that all records must be disclosed upon request unless subject to a specific FOIA exemption.[11] Under exemption 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) of the FOIA, an agency is allowed to withhold personnel and medical files and similar files, the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy. In such cases, the Federal courts and the Authority apply a balancing test to be determined whether disclosure would result in a clearly unwarranted invasion of Privacy.[12]

[9] Respondent's counsel notes in her post-hearing brief that the documents would have to be reviewed to determine whether disclosure would be prohibited by the Privacy Act; but there is no contention that disclosure in this case would violate the Privacy Act, nor was there any showing that disclosure in this case would generate such a result.

[10] Freedom of Information Act, Pub. L. No. 89-554, 80 Stat. 383 (codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. § 552 (1982)).

[11] 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)-(b) (1982).

Applying the test outlined it is determined that it is necessary for the Union to know whether or not the Respondent's AUO policies are being implemented in a manner which contravenes existing statutes and regulations. This knowledge is needed in order to process employee complaints relating to the matter. The Union would not be in a position to apprise bargaining unit members of their rights concerning the issues posed without pursuing the inquiry suggested by the information request submitted to the Respondent. The data is necessary for the purpose of enabling the Union to determine whether a grievance or grievances should be filed on behalf of bargaining unit employees.

The record developed reflects that the information sought would be relatively innocuous. In view of the Union's need for the data to pursue its representational duties, compared to the limited intrusion, if any, on the privacy of the employees involved, it is determined that disclosure of the data would not result in a clearly unwarranted invasion of such employees' privacy.

On the basis of the foregoing it is determined that the Respondent violated Sections 7116 (a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by failing to furnish the Union with data described in the Union's March 5, 1985, request for information. Having found that the Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order:

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and Section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, United States Border Patrol, shall:

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Thomas Angelo filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

In his initial award the Arbitrator ruled that the grievant's performance had been improperly rated as "marginal" under critical elements 3, 5, and 7 in her annual performance appraisal. As a remedy the Arbitrator voided the appraisal and ordered the grievant's performance under those elements reevaluated. In particular, he ordered her performance under elements 3 and 5 reevaluated because he determined that the rating was based only on events during two months of the twelve-month appraisal period and did not properly consider her performance under another supervisor earlier in the appraisal period. The Arbitrator also retained jurisdiction to resolve any disputes regarding the remedy. According to the Activity, in reevaluating the grievant's performance under the three elements, both of her supervisors for the period met and reconsidered her performance for the entire appraisal period after which it was determined that her performance under elements 3 and 5 was "marginal;" that her performance under element 7 was "satisfactory;" and that her overall rating was "marginal." Subsequently, pursuant to his retained jurisdiction, the Arbitrator "refine[d]" his initial award. In his "refinemen[t]" he determined that the "marginal" ratings on reevaluation under elements 3 and 5 were not "sufficient[ly] support[ed]" or "justifi[ed]." On this basis he directed that the grievant's performance be rated "satisfactory" under elements 3 and 5 and that the grievant's overall rating be reevaluated accordingly.

III. EXCEPTION

The Agency contends that the Arbitrator's refinement of his award to direct that the grievant's performance under the two disputed elements be reevaluated as satisfactory is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. The Agency argues that by directing that the grievant be rated satisfactory, the Arbitrator improperly conducted an independent evaluation of the grievant's performance and improperly substituted his judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's evaluation and rating should be.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

We agree with the Agency. The Authority in a number of recent decisions has discussed in detail the role of an arbitrator in resolving disputes pertaining to performance appraisal matters. See, for example, Veterans Administration Hospital, Bath, New York and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 491, 22 FLRA No. 103 (1986). The Authority has found that an arbitrator may resolve an employee's grievance claiming to have been adversely affected in his or her performance appraisal by management's application of the established performance standards. An arbitrator may sustain the grievance on finding that management applied the standards in violation of law, regulation or an appropriate provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In sustaining the grievance, the arbitrator as a remedy may direct that the grievant's work product be properly evaluated by management or, where appropriate, that the grievant's work product as appraised by management be granted the rating to which entitled under the established elements and standards. The Authority, however, has cautioned that the arbitrator may not conduct an independent evaluation of an employee's performance under the elements and standards established by management and may not substitute his or her own judgment for that of management as to what that employee's evaluation and rating should be.

In this case we find that the award is deficient by directing that the grievant's performance be rated "satisfactory" under elements 3 and 5 and that the grievant's overall rating be reevaluated accordingly. In directing these ratings the Arbitrator has not merely and appropriately granted the grievant's work product as appraised by management the rating to which entitled under the established standards. Instead, the Arbitrator rejected as not sufficiently supported or justified management's reevaluation of the grievant's performance and directed that her performance be evaluated as "satisfactory." The Arbitrator independently evaluated the grievant's performance and substituted his judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's performance evaluation and rating under the established standards of elements 3 and 5 should have been. Consequently, the award, as refined, is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. See General Services Administration, Region 10 and American Federation of Government Employees, Council 236, 22 FLRA No. 8 (1986); Social Security Administration, Office of Hearings and Appeals, Region II and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, 21 FLRA No. 86 (1986).

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the award, as refined, is set aside.

Issued, Washington, D.C., August 15, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator James A. Evenson filed on behalf of the Agency by the Departments of the Army and the Air Force, National Guard Bureau under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition.*/

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case arose when prior to the expiration of the parties' collective bargaining agreement the Agency notified the Union that on expiration of the agreement, it was electing no longer to be bound by the practice embodied in Article XXIX, Section 1 of the agreement relating to the wearing of the military uniform by civilian technicians. The Agency also notified the Union that beginning on a specified date, which constituted the Agency's determination as to when the agreement expired, civilian technicians would be required in accordance with agency regulation to wear the military uniform while performing technician duties. Article XXIX, Section 1 of the agreement provided that technicians had the option while performing their technician duties of wearing either the appropriate military uniform or "standard civilian attire . . . . approved by the Adjutant General." A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration essentially disputing that the agreement expired on the date specified by the Agency.

*/ In its opposition the Union contends that the National Guard Bureau lacks standing to file an exception to the award because the Bureau was not a party to the arbitration. However, the Authority finds that the exception was properly filed by the Bureau on behalf of the Wyoming Air National Guard. See U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1917, 20 FLRA No. 41 (1985).

In resolving the grievance the Arbitrator noted that consistent with the decisions of the Authority, the parties agreed that the requirement that civilian technicians wear the military uniform is a permissive subject of bargaining under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and that on expiration of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, the Agency at that time could require the wearing of the military uniform. In agreement with the Union, however, he determined that the agreement had not expired on the date specified by the Agency and that the Agency had violated the agreement by requiring the wearing of the military uniform beginning on that date. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance and ordered the Agency to comply with the terms of the collective bargaining agreement until the agreement expired.

III. EXCEPTION

The Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. Specifically, the Agency argues that the wearing of the military uniform by civilian technicians while performing technician duties is necessary to carry out the mission of the Agency and for purposes of internal security. Although the Agency concedes that the decisions of the Authority have only found the uniform-wearing requirement to be a permissive subject of bargaining, the Agency maintains that it has the right under section 7106(a)(1) to require the wearing of the military uniform as part of its internal security practices. In support of this position, the Agency states that since airplanes of the Puerto Rico National Guard have been destroyed, the wearing of the military uniform by all civilian technicians is a reasonable security practice and precaution. Accordingly, the Agency concludes that the award is deficient by enforcing the provision of the agreement which grants civilian technicians the option of wearing standard civilian attire.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

As recognized by the parties and by the Arbitrator, all decisions of the Authority after its decision and order on remand in Division of Military and Naval Affairs, State of New York, Albany, New York, 15 FLRA 288 (1984), aff'd sub nom. New York Council, Association of Civilian Technicians v. FLRA, 757 F.2d 502 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 106 S. Ct. 137 (1985), addressing the bargaining obligation with respect to the requirement of civilian technicians to wear the military uniform have decided that the requirement constitutes a method and means of performing work within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and consequently is a permissive subject of bargaining. Although the Authority has been presented with the issue of whether the uniform-wearing requirement constituted a matter of internal security, the Authority determined that it was not necessary to decide the issue. Adjutant General, State of Ohio, Ohio Air National Guard, Worthington, Ohio, 21 FLRA No. 124 (1986).

In order to resolve the Agency's exception in this case, it is necessary to determine whether the Arbitrator's award interferes with management's right to determine its internal security practices. We find solely in the circumstances of this case that the Agency fails to establish that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. As noted, the Arbitrator's award merely permits, until the expiration of the agreement (which may already have occurred), civilian technicians of the Wyoming Air National Guard the option of wearing standard civilian attire that has been approved by the Adjutant General. The Agency in its exception and supporting arguments fails to demonstrate in what manner this award prevents the Agency from protecting its property from loss, destruction, or disclosure. See National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 9 FLRA 983, 985-87 (1982), remanded as to other matters sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 82-2225 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 19, 1984). Likewise, the Agency fails to demonstrate in what manner the award interferes with management's right to determine the mission of the Agency. Thus, no basis is provided for finding the award deficient.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the Agency's exception is denied.

Issued, Washington, D.C., August 18, 1986.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority at this time on a request filed by the Agency seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of March 27, 1986, modifying the Arbitrator's award in the case.[1] The Union filed an opposition to the Agency's request.[2]

---

[1] The Agency also filed a request for a stay of the Authority's decision, a request for oral argument, and a request that this case be consolidated with General Services Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 236, 21 FLRA No. 24 (1986), in which the Agency is seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of March 25, 1986. The Agency's request for reconsideration in 21 FLRA No. 24 has been dismissed as untimely filed. Therefore, its request for consolidation is dismissed as moot.

[2] In its opposition, the Union contends, among other things, that the Agency's request is untimely. However, the Authority has determined that under sections 2429.17, 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Agency's request is timely.

The Arbitrator's award in this case predated the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983) (BATF). The Arbitrator concluded that the "Employer is required to pay travel and per diem for labor relations activities as set forth in the parties' agreement." Award at 21. This conclusion was based on the Arbitrator's finding that the Agency's contractual obligation was "identical to its statutory obligation." Award at 20.

The Agency filed exceptions to the award, and we denied those exceptions in 21 FLRA No. 27 (1986). We modified the Arbitrator's award only to specifically provide that the Agency could determine the propriety of individual requests for payment under applicable provisions of the Federal Travel Regulations.

In its request for reconsideration, the Agency argues that the Authority (1) disregarded the findings and conclusions of the Arbitrator, as described by the Agency; (2) disregarded the issues raised by the Agency in its exceptions; and (3) misinterpreted the parties' collective bargaining agreement, the Travel Expense Act and its implementing regulations, the Statute, and the BATF decision.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides that a party requesting reconsideration of an Authority decision must establish "extraordinary circumstances" for doing so. In this case, we conclude that the Agency has not established any extraordinary circumstances for its request. Accordingly, we will deny the request.

We fully discussed the Agency's exceptions in our original decision. In addition, as evidenced by our modification of the Arbitrator's award, we fully considered applicable laws and regulations, including the Travel Expense Act and its implementing regulations. The Agency's assertions concerning these matters provide no basis for reconsideration.

As for the findings and conclusions of the Arbitrator, the Agency maintains that "the agreement GSA entered into was contingent upon whether GSA was obligated to pay these expenses under the Statute." Request for Reconsideration at 8 (Emphasis in original). An examination of the arbitration award in dispute reveals that this is precisely the position the Agency took before the Arbitrator. Award at 13-17. The Arbitrator found not only that the Agency was statutorily obligated to pay travel and per diem expenses, the Arbitrator also found that the Agency was contractually obligated to pay travel and per diem expenses. In fact, as noted above, the Arbitrator found that the Agency's "contractual obligation is identical to its statutory obligation." Award at 20. The Arbitrator expressly rejected the Agency's arguments that it was not obligated to pay these expenses.

As we concluded in our original decision in this case, the Arbitrator's award of travel and per diem expenses in this case, as modified, is not inconsistent with law or regulation. Our decision in this case is consistent with our approach in unfair labor practice cases where the parties' dispute concerns their intent in executing agreements providing for the payment of travel and per diem expenses. See Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Columbia District, Columbia, South Carolina, 22 FLRA No. 28 (1986).

There is a contractual basis for the Arbitrator's award in this case, and the award is not inconsistent with law or regulation. We will not, therefore, reconsider our decision or further modify the award.

Accordingly, the Agency's request for reconsideration is denied.[3]

Issued, Washington, D.C., August 15, 1986.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority at this time on a request filed by the Agency seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of June 13, 1986, modifying the Arbitrator's award in the case.*/

In resolving the grievances at arbitration, the Arbitrator determined that by denying official time and travel and per diem expenses for union officials for representational purposes, the Agency violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement. As his award, the Arbitrator sustained the individual grievances and awarded reimbursement for the wrongfully denied official time as well as travel and per diem expenses. In its exceptions to the award, the Agency contended, among other things, that the award violated law by ordering payment of compensation to those grievants who had 100 per cent of their duty time approved for Union representational activities. The Authority held that the Agency had failed to establish that the awards of compensation for time spent performing representational activities on nonduty time which the Arbitrator ruled should have been performed on official time were contrary to law and consequently denied the Agency's exception. In its request for reconsideration, the Agency essentially argues that the portion of the Arbitrator's award which directs payment to union official Reiter, who had 100 per cent of her duty time approved for representational activities, is illegal.

*/ The Agency also filed a request for a stay of the Authority's decision and a motion that the Authority submit to the Comptroller General a question concerning the legality of paying union official Reiter, who had 100 per cent of her duty time approved for representational activities, for work performed outside her basic workweek. However, the Agency's requests are not warranted and are denied.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations permits a party that can establish "extraordinary circumstances" to move for reconsideration of a decision of the Authority. Here, however, the Agency has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17. Rather, the arguments presented by the Agency in support of its request essentially constitute nothing more than disagreement with the merits of the Authority's decision and an attempt to relitigate the matter.

Accordingly, the Agency's request for reconsideration is denied.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority at this time on a request filed by the Agency seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of April 22, 1986, denying the Agency's exceptions.1/ The Union filed an opposition to the Agency's request.2/

1/ The Agency also filed a request for a stay of the Authority's decision and a request for oral argument. However, oral argument is not warranted and no basis is provided for a stay of the Authority's decision. The Agency further requests that this matter be consolidated with its requests for reconsideration of the Authority's decisions in General Services Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, Council 236, 21 FLRA No. 24 (1986), and General Services Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 236, 21 FLRA No. 27 (1986). However, the Agency's request for reconsideration in 21 FLRA No. 24 has been dismissed as untimely filed and consolidation of this matter with the request for reconsideration in 21 FLRA No. 27 is not warranted. Accordingly, these requests are denied.

2/ In its opposition, the Union contends, among other things, that the Agency's request is untimely. However, the Authority has determined that under sections 2429.17, 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Agency's request is timely.

In his award, the Arbitrator determined that the parties had negotiated and agreed upon the payment of travel and per diem expenses for union representatives engaged in representational activities. Accordingly, the Arbitrator directed that the union representative be reimbursed for her reasonable and necessary travel and per diem expenses for the representational functions involved upon submission of an expense report. In its exceptions to the award, the Agency argued that the award was contrary to section 7131(a) and (d) of the Statute and the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701, and failed to draw its essence from the collective bargaining agreement. The Authority rejected the Agency's arguments and concluded that the award was not deficient as alleged. In its request for reconsideration, the Agency essentially argues that the Authority misinterpreted the parties' collective bargaining agreement, the Statute, and the Travel Expense Act and disregarded the issues raised by the Agency in its exceptions.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations permits a party that can establish "extraordinary circumstances" to move for reconsideration of a decision of the Authority. Here, however, the Agency has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17. ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority on a request filed by the Union seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of July 10, 1986.

We found that the Union's proposal, which was intended to provide its negotiators travel and per diem expenses, was similar to one found negotiable in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. March 27, 1986). For the following reason, however, we held that it was outside the duty to bargain. Under the Agency's interpretation of the proposal, it was not a demand to negotiate the Agency's determination of whether the payment of travel and per diem was in the "primary interest" of the Government, the determination required by the Comptroller General in 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966). The Agency's interpretation was uncontroverted. The Union did not make use of the opportunities afforded parties in accordance with the Authority's Rules and Regulations to develop a record in support of its position. First, it did not state that the proposal was intended as a demand to negotiate the Agency's determination of whether the payment of travel and per diem was in the primary interest of the Government. Second, it specifically waived its right to file a response to the Agency's contentions. In its request for reconsideration the Union states, in essence, that it did not rebut the Agency's interpretation because the intent of its proposal was apparent on its face.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides that a party which can establish "extraordinary circumstances" may request reconsideration of an Authority decision. In this case, however, the Union has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of the Authority's regulation. The Authority has consistently held that the parties bear the burden for creating a record upon which the Authority can make its decision. See, for example, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 17 and U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Portland District, 19 FLRA No. 18 (1985). When an agency makes a contention as to the meaning of a disputed bargaining proposal, the union acts at its own peril if it assumes that the Authority will find the contention meritless on its face. Such an assumption is inconsistent with the statutory appeal process as set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 7117(c) and Subpart A of Part 2424 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations by which the union is given a fair opportunity to rebut the agency's contentions.

Consequently, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish the existence of extraordinary circumstances. Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's request for reconsideration be, and it hereby is, denied.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority at this time on a request filed by the Agency seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of April 21, 1986, modifying the Arbitrator's award.[1] The Union filed an opposition to the Agency's request.[2]

In his award, the Arbitrator determined that the parties had negotiated and agreed upon the payment of the travel and per diem expenses of union negotiators and, by its failure to do so, the Agency had violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement. Accordingly, the Arbitrator ordered the Agency to reimburse union negotiators for travel and per diem expenses incurred retroactive to the date the Agency ceased making such payments. In its exceptions to the award the Agency contended that the award was incomplete, failed to draw its essence from the collective bargaining agreement, based on a nonfact and violated law. Specifically, the Agency contended that the award was contrary to section 7131(a) and (d) of the Statute and the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701.

[1] The Agency also requested a stay of the Authority's decision.

[2] In its opposition, the Union contends that the Agency's request was untimely filed. However, the Authority has determined that under sections 2429.17 and 2429.22 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Agency's request was timely filed.

The Authority rejected the Agency's arguments, but modified that portion of the award directing the reimbursement of travel and per diem expenses to ensure consistency with the applicable requirements of the Federal Travel Regulations, 41 CFR part 101-7. In its request for reconsideration the Agency essentially argues that the Authority erred in its interpretation of the Travel Expense Act and the Federal Travel Regulations as well as the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983).

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations permits a party that can establish "extraordinary circumstances" to move for reconsideration of a decision of the Authority. Here, however, the Agency has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17. Rather, the Agency's request for reconsideration does not raise any arguments not previously considered and correctly decided by the Authority. The arguments presented by the Agency in support of its request essentially constitute nothing more than disagreement with the merits of the Authority's decision and an attempt to relitigate the matter. See General Services Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 236, 21 FLRA No. 27 (1986), request for reconsideration denied, Aug. 15, 1986 and General Services Administration, Region 8 and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 236, 21 FLRA No. 54 (1986), request for reconsideration denied, Aug. 15, 1986.

A proposal that the agency reverse its decision to discontinue a practice of making left-over coffee, which had been provided for consumption by patients, available to employees does not concern the working conditions of unit employees and is not within the duty to bargain. The union provided no specific information as to how the disposal of the coffee is related to the work situation of employees or the employment relationship. There were no details as to whether the consumption of the coffee occurred when employees were on-duty or whether consumption was tied to their status as employees as opposed to being a privilege afforded to any member of the public present at the facility at the time the surplus coffee was available. Absent demonstration of a relationship between the matter proposed and working conditions, the Authority concluded that there was no basis for rejecting the agency's contention that the proposal does not concern conditions of employment.

A proposal which is limited to addressing the disposition of brewed coffee which otherwise would be thrown away does not amount to seeking compensation which is prohibited by 5 U.S.C. § 5536. The agency contended that 5 U.S.C. § 5536, as interpreted by the Comptroller General, prohibits an agency from providing "free food" to employees while they are at their official duty station. The Authority found that the Comptroller General ruled that appropriated funds could not be used to reimburse an agency official for carry-out food he had purchased for employees who were unable to leave an office. The Comptroller General interpreted 5 U.S.C. § 5536 as prohibiting providing employees with compensation--that is, free food--over and above that which was allowed by law. The Authority, however, concluded that the issue in this case involved the use of surplus coffee which was procured for an authorized purpose--feeding patients--as opposed to involving an outlay of appropriated funds for the purpose of feeding employees. Therefore, the Comptroller General decision, cited by the agency, was not applicable in this case. The Authority noted that the Comptroller General has not interpreted 5 U.S.C. § 5536 as an absolute prohibition on agency subsidization of food for employees.

DIGEST NOTES

The grievance concerns the scheduling of a grievance procedure meeting involving a separate dispute. The meeting was scheduled in advance for a specific day to commence at the beginning of the aggrieved employee's work shift. The union representative assigned to represent the employee was scheduled for the earlier shift on the day of the meeting. Consequently, he requested that the time of the meeting and the aggrieved employee's worked shift be changed to coincide with his work shift or that he be paid overtime for the time spent attending the meeting. The activity refused and the meeting was held with the union representative attending after his workday had ended. The union representative filed the grievance in this case on the issue of whether the refusal to reschedule the meeting violated the collective bargaining agreement and, if not, whether the union representative should have been paid overtime compensation for the time attending the meeting. The arbitrator determined that it was not unreasonable for the activity to maintain the meeting schedule to accommodate the assigned work shift of the aggrieved employee. He also noted that the meeting was scheduled after the regular workday of management representatives as well as union representatives. He determined that the union representative was not entitled to overtime compensation for the time attending the meeting and, accordingly, denied the grievance.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its exception the union contended that the award was contrary to the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), and 5 CFR part 551, subpart D. The union argued that the time spent by the union representative at the meeting constituted "hours of work" for purposes of entitlement to overtime compensation because the meeting was primarily for the benefit of the activity and was directed and controlled by the activity. The Authority concluded that the union failed to establish that the award denying entitlement to overtime compensation was contrary to the FLSA and implementing regulations. For the purposes of the FLSA, "hours of work" is defined as "all time spent by an employee performing an activity for the benefit of an agency and under the control or direction of the agency." Official time granted an employee by an agency to perform representational functions during the hours when the employee is otherwise in a duty status shall be considered hours of work. The key to whether time spent performing representational functions outside regular working hours is overtime work is that the employee representative must already have been in an overtime duty status at the direction of the agency at the time an event arises which calls for the performance of representational functions. The Authority, therefore found, in this case, that the union representative was not entitled to overtime compensation under FLSA. The activities of the grievant cannot be considered primarily for the benefit of the activity; his responsibilities during the grievance meeting were to represent the employee who had filed the grievance. Additionally, because the grievant was not already in an overtime duty status at the direction of the activity at the time of the grievance meeting, there was no entitlement to overtime compensation under 5 CFR § 551.424(b).

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which would require management to give employees who are returning to their regular jobs after a detail a reasonable amount of time to become familiar with job-related material issued while they were on detail, directly interferes with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The provision would require management to give priority to this aspect of employees' jobs over other assigned duties. In establishing such a priority among work assignments the provision required management to assign one type of work to employees to the exclusion of other duties which management may determine have a higher priority. The Authority further found, however, that the provision was within the duty to bargain, as an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3), because it did not excessively interfere with management's rights. The burden imposed by the provision on management's right to assign work, was found to be insubstantial compared to the benefit to employees--and, derivatively, to management--afforded by the provision.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's findings and conclusions that the activity violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) by unilaterally changing the duty hours and dress code of certain employees without bargaining with the union. The activity filed exceptions to the Judge's status quo ante remedy with regard to the both the duty hours and the dress code. As to the remedy pertaining to duty hours, the Authority concluded that the decision to change starting and quitting times constitutes a negotiable condition of employment. Therefore, agency management was obligated to bargain concerning the decision to change duty hours, prior to making the change. Where management makes a unilateral change regarding a negotiable condition of employment, such as duty hours, effectuation of the purposes and policies of the Statute requires the imposition of status quo ante remedies, absent special circumstances, in order not to render meaningless the mutual obligation to negotiate concerning changes in conditions of employment. The fact that there had been a turnover in personnel in the area affected by the change did not alter the Authority's result.

The Authority concluded, consistent with the Judge's findings, that the activity violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it unilaterally changed the employees' dress code. The Judge ordered that the change be rescinded. He further ordered, the rescission of any disciplinary actions initiated as a result of the dress code, including removal of all references to such disciplinary actions from the personnel files of employees involved. The Authority found, in reviewing the activity's exceptions to the Judge's remedy, that the discipline at issue was based in part on insubordination. While the activity's unilateral implementation of the dress code was unlawful, a refusal by an agency to negotiate in good faith does not excuse an employee's insubordination. Procedures exist to remedy breaches of bargaining obligations, and the union pursued them in this case. Self help -- that is, disobeying supervisory instructions -- cannot be condoned if the purposes and policies of the Statute are to be met. The Authority, therefore, modified the Judge's remedy and ordered the rescission of all disciplinary actions initiated as a result of the dress code, except for those actions involving insubordination.

The Authority held, with regard to possible remedial conflict between actions taken by the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) and the Authority, that "when an issue is properly raised as an unfair labor practice under § 7116, nothing therein would prevent the Authority from remedying any violation found" despite the possible conflict with actions by the MSPB.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority found, in agreement with the Judge, that the activity violated § 7116(a)(1) and (8) when it unlawfully failed to comply with an arbitration award. The grievance concerned the reprimand of an employee for improper conduct. While the award was pending, the activity proposed to and did suspend the grievant for a series of events that occurred subsequent to the initial reprimand. The suspension, characterized as "progressive discipline," was based in part on the reprimand. The arbitrator later found that the reprimand was not for just cause and ordered that the reprimand be expunged from the grievant's personnel file and that the reprimand "not be used against the grievant in any fashion." No exceptions were filed to the arbitrator's award. The Judge found that the activity violated § 7116(a)(1) and (8) by failing to comply with the award. The Judge noted that all references to the reprimand had been expunged from the employee's personnel file, but that the violation occurred because the activity based other disciplinary action, in part, upon the earlier reprimand. He found that the employee would not have been suspended but for the reliance and that such reliance was contrary to the arbitrator's award that the reprimand not be used against the employee "in any other proceeding." The Judge, therefore, ordered the activity to revise the disciplinary actions to the extent required by law and regulation, and to rescind the suspension. The activity excepted arguing that the Judge erred because it had removed all references to the reprimand from the employee's personnel file and had thus complied with the award. The Authority found that the arbitrator's award stated that the employee's reprimand "may not be used against the grievant in any other proceeding [and] . . . it may not be used against him in any fashion." The activity acknowledged that the reprimand was one of the reasons for the suspension. The activity, therefore, unlawfully failed to honor the arbitrator's award. The Authority did not find, however, that compliance with the award required rescission of the suspension. It concluded, that in order for the activity to comply with the award it must remove all references to the reprimand incident in any disciplinary action taken against the employee, including the notice of suspension involved herein. Further the suspension itself must be reconsidered, having first removed all reference to or reliance on the reprimand. If upon reconsideration, the activity concludes, that the suspension should stand despite the "progressive discipline" reference in the suspension notice and the requirements of the parties' collective agreement, law and/or regulation, it may reaffirm the suspension. The Judge's order was modified accordingly.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and presents issues concerning the negotiability of one Union proposal. The Union made the proposal in response to Agency action in discontinuing a practice of making left-over coffee, which had been provided for consumption by patients, available to employees. When informed of the Agency's plans to terminate its practice of allowing employees to drink the surplus coffee, the Union proposed that the practice not be discontinued. Based on the following, we find that the Union's proposal is not negotiable.

II. Procedural Issue

The Agency argues that the petition should be dismissed because a copy was not served upon it within 15 days of its allegation of nonnegotiability. This contention is rejected. Under established Authority practice, the Union was allocated time to correct the deficiency in its filing and serve the Agency with a copy of the petition. The Union did take the necessary action within the allotted time.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that what is at issue is the disposal of coffee leftover from patients' meals, a matter that is not part of the employer-employee relationship and therefore does not involve a condition of employment. The Agency also contends that providing "free food" amounts to additional compensation of employees--something which is prohibited by 5 U.S.C. § 5536.[1] As an extension of this argument it asserts that, because compensation is specifically provided for by Federal statute, the matter does not concern a condition of employment.

The Union did not file a response to the Agency's statement of position. However, in its petition it argues that there is no compelling reason for discontinuing the practice of allowing employees to drink left-over coffee which would otherwise be thrown away.

IV. Analysis

A. The Record Does Not Establish That the Proposal Concerns Conditions of Employment

In Antilles Consolidated Education Association and Antilles Consolidated School System, 22 FLRA No. 23 (1986), the Authority identified as one of the factors which it considers in determining whether a proposal concerns conditions of employment:

> The nature and extent of the effect of the matter proposed to be bargained on working conditions of unit employees.

In applying the above factor to this case, we find that there is insufficient basis for concluding that the matter, in fact, concerns working conditions. The Union has provided no specific information as to how the disposal of the coffee is related to the work situation of employees or the employment relationship.[2/] For example, there are no details as to whether consumption of the coffee occurred when employees were on-duty or off-duty or whether consumption was tied to their status as employees as opposed to being a privilege afforded to any member of the public present at the facility at the time the surplus coffee was available. Absent the demonstration of a relationship between the matter proposed and working conditions, we have no basis for rejecting the Agency's contention that the proposal does not concern conditions of employment. Therefore, we find that the proposal is not within the duty to bargain. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Council of Consolidated Social Security Administration Locals and Social Security Administration, 13 FLRA 422 (1983) (Union Proposals 3 and 4), in which the Authority determined that, in the absence of any showing in the record that proposals concerning recycling discarded paper products were related to unit employees' work situation or employment relationship, those proposals did not concern conditions of employment and were outside the duty to bargain.

[1] 5 U.S.C. § 5536 provides as follows:

> § 5536. Extra pay for extra services prohibited
> An employee or a member of a uniformed service whose pay or allowance is fixed by statute or regulation may not receive additional pay or allowance for the disbursement of public money or for any other service or duty, unless specifically authorized by law and the appropriation therefor specifically states that it is for the additional pay or allowance.

B. The Record Does Not Establish That the Proposal Conflicts with 5 U.S.C. § 5536

The Agency contends that 5 U.S.C. § 5536 as interpreted by the Comptroller General prohibits an agency from providing "free food" to employees while they are at their official duty station. In 42 Comp. Gen. 149 (1962), the Comptroller General ruled that appropriated funds could not be used to reimburse an agency official for carry-out food he had purchased for employees who were unable to leave an office. The Comptroller General denied the claim based on, among other reasons, his interpretation that 5 U.S.C. § 5536 prohibited providing employees with compensation--in that case "free food"--over and above that which was allowed by law.

In our view, the circumstances involved in this case are significantly different from those involved in the [2/] The parties to a case are responsible for creating the record upon which we will resolve negotiability disputes. Comptroller Gereral decision relied upon by the Agency. In this case, the issue involves use of surplus coffee which was procured for an authorized purpose--feeding patients--as opposed to involving an outlay of appropriated funds for the purpose of feeding employees. Given this difference, we conclude that the Comptroller General's decision is not applicable to this case. Additionally, we note that the Comptroller General has not interpreted 5 U.S.C. § 5536 as an absolute prohibition on agency subsidization of food for employees. See, for example, 53 Comp. Gen. 71 (1973), in which a situation "involving danger to human life and the destruction of Federal property" justified government purchase of employees' meals at headquarters. Also in some circumstances, the Comptroller General has permitted the expenditure of agency funds to subsidize operation of an employees' cafeteria. Unpublished Decision of the Comptroller General, B-169141, November 17, 1970. We do not conclude that a proposal which is limited to addressing the disposition of brewed coffee which otherwise would be thrown away amounts to seeking compensation which is prohibited under 5 U.S.C. § 5536. Because we do not view this issue as governed by that statutory provision, we reject the Agency's contention that the proposal concerns a matter which is specifically provided for by Federal statute.

V. Conclusion

Because the record does not demonstrate that the proposal concerns a matter which is a condition of employment, we conclude that the Agency has no duty to bargain over it.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Cary J. Williams filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case concerns the scheduling of a grievance procedure meeting involving a separate dispute. The meeting under step 2 of the negotiated grievance procedure for that dispute was scheduled in advance for a specific day to commence at the beginning of the aggrieved employee's work shift. The union representative assigned to represent the employee was scheduled for the earlier shift on the day of the meeting. Consequently, he requested that the time of the meeting and the aggrieved employee's work shift be changed to coincide with his work shift or that he be paid overtime compensation for the time spent attending the meeting. The Activity refused and the meeting was held with the union representative attending after his workday had ended. The union representative filed the grievance in this case that was submitted to arbitration on the issue of whether the refusal to reschedule the meeting violated the collective bargaining agreement and, if not, whether the union representative should have been paid overtime compensation for the time attending the meeting. The Arbitrator determined that it was not unreasonable for the Activity to maintain the meeting schedule to accommodate the assigned work shift of the aggrieved employee. He also noted that the meeting was scheduled after the regular workday of management representatives as well as the union representative. He determined that the representative was not entitled to overtime compensation for the time attending the meeting and, accordingly, denied the grievance.

III. EXCEPTION

The Union contends that the award is contrary to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), as amended, 29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq. and 5 CFR part 551, subpart D. The Union argues that the time spent by the union representative at the meeting constituted "hours of work" for purposes of entitlement to overtime compensation because the meeting was primarily for the benefit of the Activity and was directed and controlled by the Activity.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

We conclude that the Union fails to establish that the award denying entitlement to overtime compensation is contrary to FLSA and implementing regulations. In NTEU v. Gregg, No. 83-546 (D.D.C. Sept. 28, 1983), the court addressed the issue of whether Federal employees engaged in collective bargaining were entitled to overtime compensation for weekend negotiations when they were not otherwise in a duty status. The employees asserted that the failure to pay them overtime compensation for the weekend negotiations violated FLSA. Specifically, they argued that they were entitled to overtime compensation for having worked longer than 40 hours during a single workweek. 29 U.S.C. § 207(a). The court noted that for purposes of FLSA, "hours of work" is defined as "all time spent by an employee performing an activity for the benefit of an agency and under the control or direction of the agency." 5 CFR § 551.401(a). The court further noted that "official time" granted an employee by an agency to perform representational functions during the hours when the employee is otherwise in a duty status shall be considered hours of work. 5 CFR § 551.424(b). The court explained that the key to whether time spent performing representational functions outside regular working hours is overtime work is that the employee representative must already have been in an overtime duty status at the direction of the agency at the time an event arises which calls for the performance of representational functions. Gregg, slip op. at 7, 11. Under these provisions the court concluded that the employees were not entitled to overtime compensation under FLSA. The court ruled that the activities in which the employees were engaged on the weekend "cannot be considered primarily for the benefit of the agency." To the court, their responsibilities during these negotiations were to represent on behalf of the union the employees in the bargaining unit in collective bargaining negotiations with the employing agency; they were in no way charged with any other responsibilities. Slip op. at 5. The court also ruled that because the employees were not already in an overtime duty status on the weekend in question, there was no entitlement to overtime compensation under 5 CFR § 551.424(b). As stated by the court, the employees' participation in the negotiations was not required by the agency, but was required because of their role as officers and negotiators for the union. Slip op. at 7.

Applying NTEU v. Gregg to this case, we find that the union representative was not entitled to overtime compensation under FLSA. The activities of the grievant cannot be considered primarily for the benefit of the Activity; his responsibilities during the grievance meeting were to represent the employee who had filed the grievance. Additionally, because the grievant in this case was not already in an overtime duty status at the direction of the Activity at the time of the grievance meeting in dispute, there was no entitlement to overtime compensation under 5 CFR § 551.424(b). His participation was not required by the Activity, but was required by his assignment to the case by the local union president. Therefore, no basis is provided for finding the award deficient.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the Union's exception is denied.

Issued, Washington, D.C., August 19, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the underscored sentence of a single provision disapproved upon review by the Agency head under section 7114(c).

II. Provision

> 5. Upon returning to duties once performed, employees participating in a rotation policy may request refresher training. Employees will also receive a reasonable amount of administrative time to become familiar with all relevant IRM changes, management memorandum, etc., that have been issued while performing other duties.[1]

---

[1] In its Statement of Position the Agency indicated that this is the express language of the proposal. The Union in its initial submission apparently had used the phrase "official time" instead of "administrative time." The Union's Response to the Agency's Statement of Position did not challenge the Agency's presentation of the proposal and thus the Authority has considered the proposal as stated above.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Agency concedes that employees are required as a part of their jobs to familiarize themselves with the kinds of Agency directives, regulations and memoranda referred to in the provision. Agency Statement of Position at 3. The Agency argues nevertheless that the provision would violate management's right to assign work because it would require management to give employees time to review such materials without regard to whether there are other work assignments which management has determined should take priority.

The Union contends that the provision does not interfere with management's right to assign work. The Union also argues that the provision is an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) because, even if it does interfere with management's rights, that interference is not excessive.

IV. Analysis and Conclusion

A. Whether the Provision Violates Management's Right to Assign Work

The provision would require management to give employees who are returning to their regular jobs after a detail a reasonable amount of time to become familiar with job-related materials issued while they were on detail. The provision would thus require management to give priority to this aspect of employees' jobs over other assigned duties. In establishing such a priority among work assignments the provision has the same effect as the first paragraph of Union Proposal I in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, International Council of U.S. Marshals Service Locals and Department of Justice, U.S. Marshals Service, 4 FLRA 384, 385-86 (1980). Like that proposal, the provision here requires management to assign one type of work to employees to the exclusion of other duties which management may determine have a higher priority. For the reasons stated in U.S. Marshals Service, we find that the provision directly interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. In reaching this conclusion, we find, contrary to the Union's claim (Union Response to Agency Statement of Position at 7), that neither the language of the provision itself, nor of the agreement of which it is a part (Attachment 1 to Union Petition for Review), contains an "opt out" clause which permits management to deny employee requests for a reasonable amount of time where there is "just cause".

B. Whether the Provision Constitutes an "Appropriate Arrangement" under Section 7106(b)(3)

Even though we have found that the provision interferes with management's rights, we need not conclude that it is nonnegotiable if we also find that it is an "appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected" by the exercise of management's rights. For the following reasons we find, in agreement with the Union, that the provision is within the duty to bargain because it does not excessively interfere with management's rights. See National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986).

The proposal is clearly intended to be an "arrangement" for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A). As the Agency acknowledges, employees are required to be familiar with all job-related directives, regulations, and memoranda. When employees are assigned away from their regular positions to entirely different jobs, they are not able--nor do they need--to study those materials. Upon return to their regular positions, employees will be handicapped in the performance of their duties if they are unfamiliar with instructions issued during their absence. The provision attempts to mitigate against that consequence by providing employees a "reasonable" amount of time to become acquainted with such job-related material.

The remaining issue is whether the burden placed on management's right to assign work by requiring that employees be permitted a reasonable amount of time, at the possible expense of other duties, is excessive compared to the benefit to employees in having such time. We conclude that the benefits of the provision to employees--and to management--outweigh its effect on management's right to determine work priorities.

As we have said elsewhere, management's right to assign work is reserved in the Statute in order to protect, among other things, management's ability to manage its workload. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32, AFL-CIO and Office of Personnel Management, 22 FLRA No. 29 (1986). The impact of the disputed provision on this management interest is insignificant. The provision provides for the assignment of tasks which are already a part of an employee's job responsibilities. It does not, therefore, require management to sacrifice employee worktime to activities or purposes which are unrelated to the accomplishment of the Agency's workload. Moreover, the provision does not prevent management from requiring employees to perform any part of their jobs. It would simply require management to afford employees time to prepare to do those tasks which involve job-related materials issued in their absence. At most it would merely delay the start of work by employees on those other tasks. And since the provision does not require management to grant employees an unlimited amount of time, but only so much as is reasonably necessary to become familiar with relevant materials--a matter regarding which management thus retains some discretion--any such delay would not be unduly burdensome on management's ability to accomplish its work.

If employees did not have the time permitted by the provision, they would face the difficult task of performing the duties of their positions without having reviewed all the information necessary to perform those duties in accordance with current requirements. A reasonably foreseeable consequence of this situation is that employees will not perform as well as might otherwise be expected: they will not complete work as quickly or they will make more mistakes, for example--all of which would detrimentally affect their performance evaluations, particularly in comparison with those employees who had not been detailed. This situation is not one for which employees are responsible, since the decision to detail is solely a matter of management discretion.

Employees' job performance would likely be enhanced if time was provided to become familiar with the current requirements of their jobs upon return from a detail. Management's interest in getting the best quality work product as quickly as possible would be enhanced also. In this manner, the provision would contribute to, rather than detract from, the achievement of a more effective and efficient workforce.

Taking all of these factors into account, we find that the burden imposed by the provision on management's right to assign work is insubstantial compared to the benefit to employees--and, derivatively, to management--afforded by the provision. We conclude, therefore, that the provision does not excessively interfere with management's right to assign work and is a negotiable "appropriate arrangement" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on limited exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the Veterans Administration, West Los Angeles Medical Center (Respondent). The Judge found that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by unilaterally changing the duty hours and dress code of certain employees without bargaining with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1061, AFL-CIO (Union). The Respondent's exceptions were limited to the Judge's status quo ante remedy with regard to both duty hours and dress code.

II. Facts

The facts, more fully set forth in the Judge's Decision, indicate that on March 1, 1984, the Respondent's Building Management Service Chief (Chief) implemented a new dress code for its housekeeping aides that eliminated a past practice of wearing, among other things, sweaters and jackets without first notifying the Union and bargaining on the matter. Also, on April 29, 1984, the Respondent's Chief implemented a change in the work hours of its housekeeping aides by changing their duty hours from a 6:00 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. shift to a 7:00 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. shift. This change was made despite the Union's request to bargain.

III. Administrative Law Judge's Decision

The Judge found that the Respondent changed established conditions of employment by unilaterally implementing a new dress code and unilaterally changing duty hours of unit employees without providing the Union with notice and the opportunity to bargain, thereby violating section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. In making his finding that the change in duty hours was negotiable, the Judge found no evidence that such change was determinative of the numbers, types or grades of employees assigned to the tours of duty, so as to be negotiable solely at the election of the agency.

The Judge found that a status quo ante remedy was appropriate with regard to both duty hours and the dress code and ordered the Respondent to rescind such changes, including the prohibition against wearing jackets and sweaters. He further ordered a recision of any disciplinary actions initiated as a result of the dress code, including removal of all reference to such disciplinary actions from the personnel files of the employees involved.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent excepts to the Judge's status quo ante remedy that would rescind disciplinary actions initiated as a result of the dress code. It argues that the MSPB decision in Roger Howard v. Veterans Administration, Dec. No. SF07528411043 (December 11, 1984), rejects the contention that disciplinary actions must be rescinded because they are based on policy later determined to be invalid. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit found that despite a disagreement over the dress code, the unit employee was not free of his duty to follow his superiors' orders.[1] To find otherwise, the Respondent argues, could unreasonably prevent agencies from carrying out their missions. The Respondent also notes that three unit employees were disciplined based in part on the employees' insubordination over their refusal to obey their supervisors' orders to comply with the dress code, and requests that the Judge's remedy to rescind disciplinary action initiated as a result of the dress code be deleted.

[1] Howard v. Veterans Administration, No. 85-2128 (Fed. Cir. Nov. 19, 1985), slip op. at 2.

Additionally, the Respondent excepts to the Judge's status quo ante remedy to restore duty hours, which it argues is meaningless due to substantial turnover in personnel who were affected by the change in hours.

The General Counsel filed an answering brief to the Respondent's exceptions in which it agreed with the Judge's findings and recommended remedy.

V. Analysis

A. The Judge's Findings that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

We have reviewed the findings and conclusions of the Judge with regard to the violations of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute alleged in the complaint and adopt his findings, conclusions and recommendations for the reasons he stated. In so finding, we note that no exceptions were filed as to the Judge's finding of a violation.

B. The Judge's Recommended Remedy

With regard to Respondent's argument concerning the impact of the MSPB decision, we previously found with regard to a possible remedial conflict between actions taken by the MSPB and the Authority that "when an issue is properly raised as an unfair labor practice under section 7116, nothing therein would prevent the Authority from remedying any violation found." Department of the Air Force, Air Force Systems Command, Electronic Systems Division, 14 FLRA 390 (1984).

While we are not bound by the MSPB decision, we conclude that in the circumstances of this case it is relevant to the determination of an appropriate remedy. The discipline at issue was based, in part, on insubordination. While the Respondent's unilateral implementation of the dress code was unlawful, a refusal by an agency to negotiate in good faith does not excuse an employee's insubordination in these circumstances. Procedures exist to remedy breaches of bargaining obligations, and the Union pursued them in this case. Self help -- that is, disobeying supervisory instructions -- cannot be condoned if the purposes and policies of the Statute are to be met. Accordingly, the order is modified to rescind all disciplinary actions initiated as a result of the dress code, except for those actions involving insubordination.

As to that part of the remedy pertaining to the change in duty hours, we have previously found that the decision to change starting and quitting times constitutes a negotiable condition of employment.[2] Therefore, agency management was obligated to bargain concerning the decision to change the starting and quitting times of the duty hours in question prior to making any change. The Authority has previously determined in similar cases where management made a unilateral change regarding a negotiable term and condition of employment, such as duty hours, that effectuation of the purposes and policies of the Statute requires the imposition of status quo ante remedies, absent special circumstances, in order not to render meaningless the mutual obligation under the Statute to negotiate concerning changes in conditions of employment.[3]

The Respondent excepts to this part of the remedy on the basis that only nine of the affected employees are still with the portion of the agency affected by the change, and that, therefore, a status quo ante remedy would disrupt agency operations. The Respondent does not argue, however, that the number of positions in the unit changed, but only that there was a turnover in personnel. In these circumstances we find no merit to the Respondent's argument that a status quo ante remedy is unwarranted.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order as modified above.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

The Consolidated Complaint alleges that Respondent engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (herein called the Statute) by unilaterally changing the duty hours of certain day shift personnel and by unilaterally implementing changes in the employees' dress code, including a prohibition against wearing sweaters. The Consolidated Complaint also alleges that the Veterans Administration West Los Angeles Medical Center, Los Angeles, California (herein called Respondent) unilaterally instituted the above changes without first notifying the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1061, AFL-CIO (herein called the Union) and providing it an opportunity to bargain over the changes or their impact and implementation.

Respondent filed an Answer denying the commission of any unfair labor practices.

All parties were represented at the hearing. Each was afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence, and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, briefs were filed with the undersigned which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record herein, from my observations of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings of Fact

A. Background

Respondent's West Los Angeles facility, is made up of several divisions including the General Medical Hospital, also known as Wadsworth, and the Brentwood facility, also known as North of Wilshire, where neuropsychiatric patients are housed.

In operating the facility, forty to fifty different services are utilized, and each service has a chief. The service involved in this matter is Building Management Service (herein called the Service). It employs, among others, male and female housekeeping aides who clean, service, and maintain the hospital. The Service employees were, at all times material herein, represented by the Union.

At all times material in this matter, John F. Fitzgerald was the chief of the Service. In that position he was management's point of contact for negotiations in that particular service. Fitzgerald's newness in the position is shown by his having joined Respondent, in that capacity, only in December 1983. However, Fitzgerald served in a similar position at the Long Beach V.A. Hospital and was experienced in dealing with unions. Despite assertions to the contrary, the Union traditionally bargained directly with the various service chiefs concerning changes in working conditions and the personnel staff's attendance at those negotiations is the sole responsibility of management. Rhea Butler, Union President, Edward Farrell, Union Treasurer and Nathaniel Scott, the Union Chief Steward and the only one of these three actively employed by Respondent participated in meetings or negotiations in this matter. Butler without dispute had authority to negotiate and enter agreements on the Union's behalf.

B. Uniforms

Respondent supplies its female housekeeping aides with uniforms which are short sleeved, linen-type, aqua dress uniforms or aqua tops and trousers. Similarly, its male housekeeping aides are supplied with and wear lightweight uniforms which consist of light grey shirts and dark grey trousers. Inasmuch as Respondent issues only one type of lightweight fabric uniform there is no winter or wool uniform. It undisputed that for anywhere from 7 to 14 years the housekeeping aides, both male and female, have worn personal attire together with the regular uniform. Such apparel was particularly worn during the Southern California winter months, which loosely termed are November to February. This extra apparel consisted of many different styles and hues of sweaters and jackets, either over or under their uniforms. Some individuals even wore jackets on a year round basis. In addition, employees wore hats such as baseball-type caps with bills and knit caps. With regard to how the uniforms were worn, male employees uniform shirts was worn either inside or outside of the dark grey trousers. Besides caps the aides wore hairnets, headbands and sweatbands while they worked.

Testimony reveals that the caps and other headgear protected the employees' skin, hair, and eyes from workplace dust, debris, powerful cleaning solutions such as strippers, and the elements in general. Likewise sweaters and jackets protected the employees from the chill of early morning and from cold winter days and an alleged inefficient hospital heating system. The housekeeping aides duties often require that they travel between buildings in order to perform their work and consequently they are exposed to weather conditions. In such circumstances, it appears sensible for aides to wear some outer garments in order to protect themselves from outside weather conditions. Respondent, however, did not issue jackets, sweaters, hats or any other outer garments for weather protection. Instead, the aides supplied their own outer garments. It is uncontroverted that this practice of supplying their own sweaters, caps and other garments to keep warm was regular, open, notorious and condoned by Respondent over a lengthy period of years. Prior to March 1, 1984, there is no evidence that employees were subject to discipline because they wore items of their own apparel such as sweaters or caps. Furthermore, the record is void of any evidence which would establish that any of this personal clothing impeded any individual's job performance. Finally, the record does not suggest that the running of the Service was interfered with or disrupted because the employees wore jackets, sweaters, hats, headbands, sweatbands, or the square tail of a males shirt was worn outside of his trousers. It suggests only that the cosmetics of Service personnel did not meet the approval of its new Chief, Mr. Fitzgerald.

C. Change of Shift

While the majority of the employees work a regularly scheduled 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. shift, the housekeeping aides at the Brentwood psychiatric patient facility worked a 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. schedule. The Brentwood hours had been in effect for a number of years prior to April 29, 1984. A change in the Brentwood tour of duty had been previously proposed by a prior Service Chief, Sara Hammond. Allegedly because it is easier for the housekeeping aides to clean when the full staff is not on board at 6 a.m. the Union was able to throttle that proposal and the tour remained at 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. when Fitzgerald arrived on the scene.

D. Arrival of New Building Management Chief

As already noted, in December 1983 Mr. Fitzgerald assumed the Chiefs' position and decided to initiate some changes in his service by imposing a dress code and instituting task lists. Again it is noted that while Fitzgerald was new in this position, he was an experienced Service Chief who had previously dealt with unions, including some of the Union officials involved herein. In view of this, I find much of Fitzgerald's testimony hard to believe. Consistent with his decision he distributed lists, which were minute increment breakdowns of tasks such as: mop hallway "A" - 8:10 to 8:15; empty trash in hallway "B" - 8:20 to 8:25, without prior notice to or bargaining with the Union. As the record disclosed, the lists generated controversy and complaints because of employees fears of negative evaluations and disciplinary actions based on what might be considered arbitrary time standards if the lists were enforced.

Employee Patty Burr sent a copy of the task list to the Union. Butler called Fitzgerald and raised the point that disciplinary actions and poor evaluations might occur as a result of the lists. Fitzgerald allegedly insisted that the lists were only guidelines. Fitzgerald's assurance did not alleviate the Union's concerns and, as a result, Union representatives Butler, Scott and Farrell, met with him in his office on January 10, 1984. Again, Butler and Farrell asserted that the task lists were negotiable because of their potential disciplinary use. Fitzgerald insisted that he would not negotiate because the lists were only guidelines.

During the meeting, the three Union officials also raised an issue concerning Fitzgerald's denying Scott leave to attend physical therapy sessions which were a course of treatment necessary to correct an on-the-job injury. Subsequent to Fitzgerald's arrival, the chief steward received, in swift succession, an admonishment, a reprimand and a proposed suspension because of his requests for leave without pay, on Friday, in order to see his doctor. Fitzgerald claimed that the physician's statement, regarding Scott's injury, was not sufficient.

According to Butler and Farrell, Fitzgerald took the initiative in stating that he also wanted to change the tour of duty for the twenty-nine Brentwood facility housekeepers from 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and conform it to the 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. dayshift. The Union informed him that it had previously negotiated the Brentwood tour with other Service Chiefs and the shift had remained at 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Fitzgerald, therefore raised another topic by discussing the possibility of a dress code which would ban hats. He stated it was his idea and privilege. The Union argued that if the dress code was to become a fact, it wanted to negotiate.

Fitzgerald claims that the parties did not meet in January 1984 and discuss the dress code, the tour of duty or the task list. However, he admits that he distributed the task lists in December 1983, without negotiating the impact and that the lists caused controversy and employee complaints. Since the Union filed an unfair labor practice charge regarding those lists and Fitzgerald was Chief, his testimony that the Union never met with him on the subject, or in January 1984 creates consistencies which must be resolved against him.

Fitzgerald also asserts that the dress code was never discussed. However, Fitzgerald testified that shortly after his arrival he decided to implement a dress code. In fact, an original dress code memorandum was distributed to the Union which was dated December 27, 1983. In addition, Butler and Fe[illegible] testified that even prior to January 10, 1984, there were rumors that Fitzgerald was going to implement a dress code. Clearly the dress code had by early January 1984 became an issue which it would not be unreasonable to assume that the Union would raise at its first opportunity. Based on the record inconsistencies, I do not credit Fitzgerald.

Shortly thereafter, on February 1, 1984, Butler received a January 30, 1984, route slip from Nina Jean Parson, Labor-Management Relations Specialist. The memorandum stated, "(a)ttached is the proposed memorandum to all Building Management Service Employees regarding adherence to the prescribed uniform. This is being forwarded in accordance with Article VI of the negotiated agreement." The memorandum was a dress code for Service employees which prohibited the wearing of headbands, hats, nets, and sweatbands, unless required. It recommended replacing tennis or other soft sole shoes with oxford shoes. The dress code also mandated that male employees wear their shirts buttoned and tucked into their trousers. The memorandum was dated December 27, 1983, and signed by Fitzgerald. There had never been a similar dress code in the Service. Neither the route slip nor the memorandum set forth an implementation date for the code. Similarly, the dress code memorandum made no mention of any prohibition on either jackets or sweaters.

On February 9, 1984, the Union received a route slip dated February 7, 1984, from Labor Relations Specialist Parson which indicated that the attached proposal to change an existing tour of duty was forwarded in accordance with Article VI of the local negotiated agreement. Parson admitted however, that the notices which the Personnel office forwards to the Union do not specify Article 6 of either the Master Agreement or the Local Agreement. The notice does not indicate there is a 15 day response time. Further, there is no indication as to whom the Union should contact. Butler testified that the Master Agreement supercedes the Local Agreement.[1] The route slip covers two attachments. The first was a January 26, 1984 memorandum, signed by Fitzgerald, which stated that Service employees on the 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. shift would be changed to the 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. shift effective February 10, 1984. The second was a roster of some of the twenty-five affected employees including Nathaniel Scott and Roger Howard who are assigned to the Brentwood facility.

Upon receipt of the tour of duty change on February 9, 1984, Butler stated that she immediately contacted Fitzgerald and requested to negotiate. Both mutually agreed to a meeting on February 28, 1984, at 11 a.m. According to Butler, who I credit, she informed Fitzgerald that the appointment was to negotiate three items; the tour, the task list and the

> The Agency shall notify the appropriate union official prior to changing conditions of employment which affect bargaining unit employees. The notification will be adequate with sufficient information to provide the Union an opportunity to exercise their full rights to bargain as appropriate prior to implementation. Notification will be in writing when the changes are significant.

Article VI, section 2 of the Local Agreement reads:

> Section 2. The Employer agrees to refer any proposed changes in personnel policies, practices or other policies, programs or procedures affecting the working conditions of unit employees to the Union at least fifteen (15) calendar days prior to anticipated implementation. The Union agrees that it will respond as soon as practicable and if it does not respond within fifteen (15) calendar days, the Employer will be free to proceed with implementation. This time limit may be extended upon request and mutual agreement of the parties. If the Union notifies the Employer within fifteen (15) calendar days that it does not concur in the proposed change(s), the parties agree to meet promptly and bargain concerning the matter. (Emphasis added).

Based on these articles Respondent asserts that it is the obligation of the Union to respond to management's notice if the Union desires to negotiate over the change. It sees no conflict with the Master Agreement, inasmuch as the Master Agreement is silent on the issue of the Union's obligation to respond. Thus, where the Master Agreement is silent, the Local Agreement prevails.

dress code. Fitzgerald testified that Butler called and asked for an appointment in order to have an "informal discussion". I credit Butler. The February 28, 1984, meeting was moved to an earlier date, February 23, 1984, and Butler, Farrell and Scott met with Fitzgerald. At the meeting, Butler requested negotiations concerning the dress code, but Fitzgerald replied that negotiation was not indicated. Fitzgerald did not inform the Union either that the dress code was to be implemented March 1, 1984, or that sweaters and jackets were prohibited. The Union team continued proposing that the headgear be retained because it served health and safety purposes. According to them, the caps protected the hair, skin, and eyes from dust, debris and cleaning solvents. Fitzgerald insisted that the employees would not be allowed to wear hats, "it was his thing," because he wanted people to be uniform. Butler replied "that the Union would buy union hats" for all the building maintenance employees who wear hats while performing their duties. Fitzgerald snickered and laughed. Butler also pointed out that the code was not in accordance with V.A. central office rules and regulations. Clearly no agreement was reached, Fitzgerald who is not credited denies that the dress code was mentioned during this meeting.

During this same meeting the proposed tour of duty change was also discussed. Butler, requested to negotiate the subject again. Additionally, the Union requested time to poll the employees on the issue. Fitzgerald agreed to the poll but indicated that the results would not necessarily change his mind. Fitzgerald recalls that Farrell asked to poll employees to see how they felt about the change. The meeting ended with the parties agreeing to meet again in March 1984. Subsequent to the meeting, Scott, who is a Service employee and affected by the tour of duty change, polled the other Service employees.

On March 12, 1984, the parties met again. This time the Union repeated its proposal that the tour of duty remain the same. According to Fitzgerald, he was not meeting with the Union to bargain and, indeed, he did not bargain when the Union asked him to do so. At the hearing, Fitzgerald denied that he even has authority to bargain. His colleague Parson however, testified that Fitzgerald does have such authority. Fitzgerald basically asserted that labor relations encompassed his ability, to sit down and discuss changes in working conditions with the Union knowing all the while that he does not have authority to bargain. Such a result was not, in my view intended by the Statute.

When the meeting began Scott attempted to tell Fitzgerald the results of the poll but Fitzgerald waved him off and turned to Farrell. Scott, however, persisted in explaining that the employees wanted the 6:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. tour to remain the same because it was a safe and efficient tour. Fitzgerald replied that he didn't want to talk to him. According to Fitzgerald, he asked that Farrell release the results of the poll. He claims that Farrell refused to tell him the results. I do not credit Fitzgerald. Farrell heatedly interjected a demand that Fitzgerald negotiate concerning the tour. Fitzgerald replied that he would not negotiate. Frustrated, Farrell asked Fitzgerald if he could conceive of a situation where he would have to negotiate with the Union. Fitzgerald allegedly replied, "that's another issue." Farrell rose out of this seat; Butler told Farrell to wait a minute because there were two more issues to discuss, the task lists and dress code. Fitzgerald responded that he had already surveyed the nurses regarding the tour. He indicated at the hearing, that he wanted to bring some one from personnel or labor relations in to negotiate. None of the Union witnesses mentioned any reference to bringing in others to negotiate. Butler, broke in at this point and uttered some profanity either shit, hell or damn, regarding Fitzgerald consulting with the nurses and not the Union. At that point, Butler who is black, perceived that she was being confronted with bigotry and racism. Fitzgerald stated that he didn't have to negotiate and he wouldn't negotiate until personnel told him to. Fitzgerald then stated, he didn't want profanity in his office and he told the Union team to leave. Fitzgerald's view was that nothing was being accomplished. Butler, Farrell and Scott stormed out and either during their exit through the doorway, or poised just outside in the corridor, Butler, a wisp of a woman stated, "Fuck you."

Farrell, Scott and Butler immediately proceeded to the office Chief of Personnel Jesse Raymond. It is uncontroverted that once there Butler told Raymond that Fitzgerald was impossible and that he was adamantly insisting that he did not have to negotiate concerning the tour, the dress code or the task lists. Butler's statements reveal no clue that Fitzgerald wanted to bring in personnel or labor relations help in the matter. Butler by way of apology explained that she had cursed out Fitzgerald. Butler and Farrell then requested Raymond to give them someone who knew how to negotiate, so they could resolve the issues for the good of the employees. Raymond replied that he would take care of that. Interestingly, Fitzgerald's inability or lack of authorization to negotiate for the service was never raised.

Several days passed without Raymond, Fitzgerald, or any management representative contacting the Union regarding bargaining. By that time Butler and Farrell decided no one was going to do anything about "enlightening" Fitzgerald regarding the negotiability of changes in work hours so the Union filed an unfair labor practice charge on March 16, 1984. The charge alleged that Fitzgerald had refused to bargain in good faith concerning the tour of duty on March 12, 1984.[2] Fitzgerald knew that an unfair labor practice charge had been filed because of the March 12, 1984 meeting, however, no action was taken. Instead, on April 16, 1984, the Union received a second memorandum from Fitzgerald regarding the identical shift change which they had already requested to negotiate on and proposed status quo. Fitzgerald's second memorandum referenced his January 23, 1984 correspondence wherein he had determined to transfer the remaining day shift personnel, North of Wilshire, to the 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. shift.

[2] The charge was later withdrawn when the instant unfair labor practice, Case No. 8-CA-40223, was filed because the instant charge included the alleged violative conduct.

In the subsequent communication Fitzgerald declared that he had met with Butler, Farrell and Scott on two occasions regarding the proposed change but, to date, the Union had failed to offer any counterproposals or meaningful discussions. Fitzgerald's missive concluded that he was proceeding with the shift change effective April 29, 1984. All this despite clear evidence that at the February 23, 1984, meeting the Union proposed that the tour of duty remain at 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Further, Fitzgerald on cross-examination stated that although Farrell declared that the Union wanted the 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. tour, in Fitzgerald's opinion, no proposals were offered at the second meeting. His opinion was that Farrell's proposal was not a proposal at all and could not, therefore, be the subject of negotiations. I find that the Union clearly requested negotiations concerning the change in tour of duty at that meeting.

Around April 19, 1984, 3 days after receiving Fitzgerald's second memorandum the Union filed the instant unfair labor practice charge alleging that Fitzgerald had again refused to negotiate concerning the shift change. Respondent's Personnel department also took no action. Thereafter, Fitzgerald implemented a negotiable change in work hours on April 29, 1984. On that date the employees were changed by 1 hour, from a 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. tour to 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. shift.

In the meantime, but prior to completing bargaining on the issue, Fitzgerald implemented the proposed dress code. A few days before March 1, 1984, Fitzgerald spoke at unit meetings of Service housekeeping aides and explained the new dress code. According to him, the hats would have to come off and the code would be enforced beginning March 1, 1984. Supervisors distributed the dress code to employees and enforced it through disciplinary action beginning March 1, 1984. Supervisor Pearl Harrington "wrote up" housekeeping aide Roger Howard because he came to work with his hat on. Prior to March 1, 1984, in 17 years, Howard had never been disciplined for wearing a hat on the job. Other employees were also disciplined due to the unilateral enforcement of the dress code. It appears that terminations also were part of the discipline.

Following her unit meeting, housekeeping aide Theresa Phillips spoke to her supervisor Ms. Metcalf and the Assistant Chief Alva Bonds. Phillips was wearing a long sleeved sweater under her short sleeved aqua tunic. Bond noticed the sweater and told Phillips that she could be disciplined. Phillips pointed out that first, sweaters were not included in the dress code and second, it was freezing outside. There had been no mention of any prohibition against sweaters during the unit meeting and the published dress code itself is silent in that respect. Phillips went home and cut the sleeves off of her sweaters. A few days later, Metcalf told her that she could still be written up.

Discussion and Conclusions

Respondent contends that the issue here is solely one of notice and chicanery on the part of the Union. It further asserts that the case involves only a refusal of the exclusive representative to deal with Respondent's designated representative and its attempts to make decisions as to whom it will deal with in management. Despite inference and rumor that Mr. Fitzgerald was intent on making certain changes earlier in his term as chief of the Service and despite the fact that Fitzgerald met with the Union well prior to any official notification of changes Respondent seeks to create an illusion that the Union was not dealing with the proper management representative and for that reason assumes that it has in this matter "attempted to deal with the Union in good faith, but due to the relative lack of labor expertise of the management 'representative' the Union had to deal with, and a consequent failure to at the time understand the reality of Labor-management relations with this Union, that good faith has not as of yet brought about the sought after results."

The General Counsel does not see this as such a simple matter, but maintains that a past practice of wearing certain clothing in addition to the issued uniform existed; that notification of implementation of the dress code was defective; that there was no notification that certain items such as sweaters and jackets were prohibited by the dress code; that Respondent failed to complete substantive bargaining of the dress code; that there was no waiver of bargaining on the dress code; that Fitzgerald the Chief of Service indeed had authority to bargain over the dress code; and, as well that the change in work hours without completing bargaining constituted a violation of the Statute.

It has long been established that parties may create conditions of employment by practice and such practices may not be altered without bargaining thereon. Internal Revenue Service and Brookhaven Service Center, 6 FLRA 713 (1981). Respondent supplies female housekeeping aides with an aqua dress or an aqua tunic top and pants. Similarly, the male housekeeping aides receive charcoal grey trousers and light grey shirts. It is undisputed that for over 7 years housekeeping aides have worn their own personal outerwear and apparel in addition to the issued uniforms while on duty. Also undisputed is the fact that employees wore their own sweaters, jackets, hats, caps, headbands, and sweatbands with the knowledge of and acquiescence of Service management. In addition to outer apparel the male employees wore their shirts either tucked into their trousers or on the outside of their pants. These practices were consistently exercised for an extended period of time, unchallenged, and acquiesced in by Respondent thereby ripening into conditions of employment. Accordingly, if Respondent desires to change this established condition of employment, it must give proper notification and bargain. Failure to do so violates the Statute.

The law is clear that an activity must specifically notify the exclusive representative of any intended change and a passing reference to a general subject is "neither specific nor clear enough to provide adequate notice" of changes in conditions of employment as are anticipated by the Statute. Department of the Army, Harry Diamond Laboratories, Adelphi, Maryland, 9 FLRA 575 (1982); U.S. Department of Air Force, Air Force Systems Command, Electronic Systems Division, Hanscom AFB, Massachusetts, 5 FLRA 637 (1981). In January 1984, rumors were circulating in the bargaining unit that Fitzgerald was going to impose a dress code. On January 10, the Union met with Fitzgerald to discuss the task lists that he had already unilaterally implemented where he mentioned a possible dress code. At that time the Union requested to bargain even though it did not have the specifics of the plan. Approximately one month later, Butler received formal notice of the dress code, but no implementation date was indicated. Later, on February 9, 1984, Butler requested that Fitzgerald negotiate concerning the code, the tour of duty, and the task lists. In my view, the Union did all it could to perfect its right to bargain about the dress code. Although, it did not receive proper notice, pursuant to suggestions it contacted the responsible official in an attempt to start negotiations over the matter.

The record is clear that Respondent never, at any time from December 1983 to March 1, 1984, notified the Union of the March 1, 1984, implementation date. Failure to adequately notify the Union and surprise implementation of a condition of employment, in my view, constitutes a failure to bargain in good faith which is violative of the Statute.

While the Authority has not decided whether or not dress codes are substantively negotiable, in American Federation of Government Employees, Meat Graders' Council, AFL-CIO, and Department of Agriculture, Food Safety and Quality Service, Meat Grading Branch, Washington, D.C., 8 FLRA 118 (1982), it found a union proposal that the employer furnish protective clothing such as a cooler coat and gloves to employees was negotiable.3/ The Authority there noted that the statutory and regulatory provisions placed the decision as to whether to provide protective clothing within the discretion of the agency. That a discretionary past practice of dress existed in this case is unquestioned. In this regard, changes in the practice should be negotiated to the full extent of that discretion. With or without a dress code, the housekeeping aides still perform their assigned cleaning and maintenance duties with their respective tools.

Around February 23, 1984, the Union made oral proposals regarding the wearing of caps or hats. Whether or not such proposals were negotiable, Respondent was obligated to give the Union an opportunity to revise its proposals, pursuant to any non-negotiability argument raised by Respondent, and continue to bargain on those proposals which were negotiable as well as the remaining issues surrounding the dress code.

3/ The establishment of minimum dress standards altering existing past practices of dress have been found by my colleague Administrative Law Judge Garvin Lee Oliver to be substantively bargainable. See, Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Fort Carson, Colorado, 7-CA-30581, 39 ALJDR (1984); United States Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Austin Service Center, 6-CA-20356, 31 ALJDR (1983).

Adjutant General's Office, Puerto Rico Air National Guard, 3 FLRA 343 (1980). Respondent did not provide such an opportunity because it failed to state an implementation date during the course of bargaining. In the instant case the Union acted with reasonable dispatch and should not be penalized because new proposals were not submitted between February 23 and March 1, 1984. Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Midwest Regional Office, Chicago, Illinois, 16 FLRA 141 (1984). Furthermore, no overriding exigency which required a dress code was shown on this record.

The record does disclose that Respondent eliminated the past practice of wearing sweaters and jackets without first notifying the Union or bargaining on the matter. The dress code did not contain a prohibition against either item and the issues were not raised prior to implementation. On March 1, 1984, Respondent imposed the prohibitions, but the Union did not discover that the change was in effect until several days later when employees began complaining to the Union. Such a change without first properly notifying an exclusive representative and affording it an opportunity to bargain is violative of the Statute. See Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, 6 FLRA 74 (1981).

The corroborated testimony reveals that on January 10, February 9, February 23, and March 12, 1984, the Union requested to negotiate concerning the dress code. Respondent implemented the dress code on March 1, 1984 or during the course of what should have been continued bargaining. The record shows that at the February 23 meeting, the subject of hats was discussed extensively. At that time the Union proposed that the hat practice continue or alternatively, it would buy hats. However, the parties failed to agree and did not even reach the other dress code issues such as sweatbands or whether or not shirts could be worn outside one's trousers.

Sweaters and jackets while part of the new dress code were not discussed during any of these meetings. Notwithstanding no discussion Fitzgerald walked out of the February 23 meeting and implemented the dress code several days later on March 1, 1984.

There is no direct relation between the extra apparel such as sweaters, jackets and caps which the employees concerned herein wore and the duties they performed. The principal reasons the outer garments were worn appears to be to protect employees from cold weather, which indeed does occur in Southern California, and against some health hazards found on the job. The evidence does not reveal any hazard presented by wearing these outer garments and hats. Furthermore, there is no showing that the outer garments and hats worn by these employees interfered with their work performance in any way.

Cases such as, Division of Military and Naval Affairs, State of New York, Albany, New York, 15 FLRA No. 65 (1984), concerning uniforms are distinguishable on their facts. The uniforms of the civilian technicians in such cases constitute a method and means of performing work because the employees belong to a military organization which is theoretically subject to mobilization at any time. Because of the necessity to be prepared to act immediately the Guard uniforms are clearly a military symbol of that preparedness. They are therefore not aids to the comfort, health or safety of the guard employees. The issue here is not whether or not a uniform will be worn, but is whether an agency which has allowed certain items of dress to become permissible apparel can change that practice without negotiations with the exclusive representative. Even assuming, arguendo, that dress constitutes a "method and means" of performing cleaning work as Respondent earlier suggested, it still has failed to meet its obligation to bargain concerning the impact of the change.

Respondent through Fitzgerald also makes a meretricious argument that Fitzgerald had no authority to negotiate "as I understand negotiations." First, Respondent's Labor-Relations Specialist testified that Fitzgerald did have authority to negotiate. Second, the record shows negotiations with past Services chiefs on a variety of topics. Third, there were three separate meetings held between Fitzgerald and high level union personnel without a mention of lack of authority or ability to negotiate. Following this the Union complained to the chief of personnel and still there was no mention of any lack of authority to negotiate. Thus, all of Respondent's actions appear inconsistent with its contention that Fitzgerald could not negotiate or was the wrong individual for the Union to seek out for attempted negotiations. I find, therefore, that Fitzgerald had authority to negotiate the items concerned.

Moving to Respondent's assertion that it was free to implement the dress code because the Union never requested to bargain. And, if it did request to bargain, the request was untimely because of the 15 day response parameter contained in the Local Agreement. In discrediting Fitzgerald, it is found that the Union requested and met with a management official capable of negotiations covering both the dress code and the tour of duty, in a timely fashion. Butler made one request in January, two in February and a final one in March 1984. Respondent denies that the Union requested to negotiate concerning the dress code, thus, an argument that Butler's request was too late is impossible to prove.[4] Respondent must, however, acknowledge that it never told Butler she was untimely, since in its view the request never occurred. Similarly, timeliness according to the provisions of Article 6 of the Local Agreement was not raised prior to the hearing. Further, the Union did not receive any notification that the [4] Respondent does not directly raise nor does it appear necessary to resolve in this matter the effect of conduct of Union President Butler in using profanity, during and at the conclusion of one of the bargaining sessions.

Respondent was enforcing the 15 day provision which the Local Agreement contains. Butler maintained at the hearing, that in her view the Master Agreement superceded the Local's provision with regard to notice and bargaining. The Master Agreement's language at Article 5, Section 1, and Article 6, Section 6, supports that argument. Obviously, Respondent disagrees with Butler's construction of the Agreement and maintained at the hearing that the Local Agreement was in effect. The parties are essentially differing over the interpretation of Article 5, Section 1, in the Master Agreement and its effect on Article 6, Section 2, of the Local Agreement. The status of that provision of the Local Agreement is arguable and unclear and therefore clearly not suitable for resolution in the unfair labor practice forum.

With regard to the change in starting and quitting times, the cases are legion which state that "the decision to change starting and quitting times is subject to the duty to bargain unless it can be demonstrated that such a change directly or integrally relates to the numbers, types or grades of employees or positions assigned to a work project or tour of duty so as to be determinative of such numbers, types or grades and therefore negotiable solely at the election of the agency under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute." Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service and U.S. Customs Service, Region IX, Chicago, Illinois, 17 FLRA 221 (1985); Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado, 16 FLRA 1104 (1985); National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1461 and Department of the Navy, U.S. Naval Observatory, 16 FLRA 995 (1985); Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 16 FLRA 674 (1985); Veterans Administration, Hines Hospital, Hines, Illinois, 16 FLRA 3 (1984). See also, Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Washington, D.C., 16 FLRA 479 (1984); U.S. Customs Service, Region V, New Orleans, Louisiana, 9 FLRA 116 (1982); and National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 66 and Internal Revenue Service, Kansas City Service Center, 1 FLRA 926 (1979); Department of the Treasury, United States Customs Service, Region I, Boston, Massachusetts, and St. Albans, Vermont District Office, 10 FLRA 566 (1982).

There is no evidence to suggest that the instant change directly or integrally related to the numbers, types or grades of employees or positions assigned to a work project or tour of duty so as to be determinative of such numbers, types or grades and negotiable solely at the election of the agency. Establishing such elements would of course be incumbent on Respondent who admittedly was prepared only to bargain the impact of the change in starting and quitting times herein. Since the change which occurred herein only changed an existing tour of duty, and there is no evidence to indicate that the change was in any manner determinative of the numbers, types or grades of employees assigned to the tours of duty, it is found that Respondent was obligated to bargain. Its failure to do so constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

Based on all of the foregoing, it is concluded that Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by changing the dress code of its housekeeping aides and by changing the duty hours of certain of its housekeeping aides without good faith negotiations with the exclusive representative of those employees.

Considering the criteria set out in Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982) and noting that Respondent was not exercising any reserved rights under Section 7106 of the Statute, I agree with the General Counsel that a status quo ante remedy is appropriate in this matter in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute. Accordingly, it is recommended that the Authority adopt the following:

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed by the Respondent to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The General Counsel filed an opposition to the exceptions. The issue is whether the Respondent, by basing disciplinary action against an employee in part upon an earlier written reprimand, failed to comply with an arbitrator's award, as required by section 7122(b) of the Statute,1/ and therefore

---

1/ Section 7122(b) provides:

> § 7122. Exceptions to arbitral awards
> . . . .
> (b) If no exception to an arbitrator's award is filed under subsection (a) of this section during the 30-day period beginning on the date the award is served on the party, the award shall be final and binding. An agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award. The award may include the payment of backpay (as provided in section 5596 of this title).

has violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.[2]

II. Background and Judge's Conclusion

On August 10, 1982, employee Derrick Thomas was reprimanded for improper conduct. The reprimand was grieved and processed to arbitration. While the Arbitrator's decision was pending, the Respondent proposed to and did suspend Thomas for a series of events that occurred subsequent to the August 10, 1982 reprimand. The suspension, characterized as "progressive discipline," was admittedly based in part on the reprimand. On January 20, 1984, the Arbitrator issued an award which provided that Thomas' reprimand was not for just cause. He ordered that the reprimand be expunged from Thomas' personnel file, and that the reprimand "not be used against [the] grievant in any other proceeding." Explaining his award, the Arbitrator stated: "The reprimand has apparently already been removed from grievant's . . . [f]ile . . . and the Official Personnel Folder by passage of time; however, the matter is not mooted thereby inasmuch as there was evidence that grievant had this reprimand used against him in another subsequent disciplinary proceeding to demonstrate progressive discipline. . . . I will award . . . that it is not only to be expunged from grievant's record but may not be used against him in any fashion." No exceptions to the award were filed with the Authority. Following unsuccessful attempts by the Union to persuade the Respondent to rescind the suspension of Thomas in light of the Arbitrator's award, the charge that led to this complaint was filed.

The Judge, noting that the Arbitrator's award became final and binding when no exceptions were filed, found that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the

[2] Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) provides:

§ 7116. Unfair labor practices

(a) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency--

(1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter;

. . . .

(8) to otherwise fail or refuse to comply with any provision of this chapter[.]

Statute by failing to comply with the award. The Judge found that all references to an August 5, 1982 incident involved in Thomas' August 10, 1982 reprimand had been expunged from Thomas' personnel file, and that the only issue is whether the Arbitrator's award requires the Respondent to rescind Thomas' January 17, 1983 suspension. He further found that one of the admitted reasons relied upon for Thomas' suspension was the reprimand, and that Thomas would not have been suspended but for that reliance. Citing U.S. Army Health Clinic, Fort Ritchie, Maryland, 9 FLRA 935 (1982), the Judge ordered the Respondent to comply with the Arbitrator's award by removing all references to the August 5, 1982 incident from Thomas' personnel file and from all formal disciplinary actions thereafter taken by the Respondent against Thomas. The Judge also ordered the Respondent to revise such actions to the extent required by law and regulation, and to rescind the January 17, 1983 suspension.

III. Positions of the Parties

In its exceptions, the Respondent argues that the Judge erred because the Respondent had removed from Thomas' personnel file all references to the August 5, 1982 incident and had thus complied with the Arbitrator's award. As the suspension was based also on other reasons, it argues that it did not violate the Arbitrator's award. Further, the Respondent argues that the Judge's reliance on Fort Ritchie is misplaced, as in that case rescission was not ordered. Finally, the Respondent contends that the Judge's recommended Order is "vague, incomplete, and fatally deficient" because it orders rescission without back pay. In its opposition to the exceptions, the General Counsel argues in support of the Judge's findings and argues that back pay is not only lawful, but is inherent in and thus required by the Judge's recommended order to rescind the suspension.

IV. Analysis

The Arbitrator's award states that Thomas' reprimand ". . . may not be used against grievant in any other proceeding" and ". . . it may not be used against him in any fashion." The Respondent acknowledges that the reprimand was one of the reasons for the suspension in question. We thus agree with the Judge that the Respondent unlawfully failed to honor the Arbitrator's award and thereby violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. We do not find, however, that compliance with the award requires the Respondent to rescind Thomas' suspension. Rather, we find that, as the Arbitrator's award requires that the reprimand not be used against Thomas in any other proceeding, the Respondent must, in order to comply with that award, take the following action. The Respondent must remove all references to the August 5, 1982 reprimand incident in any disciplinary action taken against Thomas, including the January 17, 1983 notice of suspension. Further, the January 17, 1983 suspension itself must be reconsidered, having first removed all reference to or reliance on the reprimand. If, upon such reconsideration, the Respondent concludes that the suspension should stand despite the "progressive discipline" reference in Thomas' suspension notice and the requirements of the parties' negotiated agreement, law and/or regulation, it may reaffirm the suspension. See Fort Ritchie. We shall thus modify the Judge's Order accordingly.

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the opposition to the exceptions, the positions of the parties, and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommended Order as modified.[3] We conclude that the Respondent, by basing disciplinary action against employee Derrick Thomas in part upon an earlier written reprimand which the Arbitrator had ordered be removed from the employee's record and not be used against him in any other proceeding, failed to comply with the Arbitrator's award, and that such action constituted a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

---

[3] Paragraphs 1(a), 1(c) and 2(a) of the Judge's recommended Order also have been modified because we find portions of those paragraphs to be unnecessarily broad; they extend well beyond the circumstances of this case.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, it is hereby ordered that the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Field Operations, New York Region shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing or refusing to comply with the January 20, 1984 final award of Arbitrator Jonas Aarons.

(b) Relying on the August 5, 1982 incident involving Derrick Thomas as a basis for imposing progressively severer penalties for other offenses in formal disciplinary actions.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Comply with the January 20, 1984 final award of Arbitrator Jonas Aarons.

(b) Remove all references to the August 5, 1982 incident that led to the reprimand of Derrick Thomas from his personnel file and from all formal disciplinary actions taken against him, including the January 17, 1983 notice of proposed suspension; reconsider the January 17, 1983 suspension, having first removed all reference to or reliance on the reprimand; and take appropriate action as required by the parties' negotiated agreement, by law and/or regulation.

(c) Post at its facilities throughout the Respondent's New York Region copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by a responsible official of the Respondent, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region II, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq., 92 Stat. 1191 (hereinafter referred to as the Statute) and the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA), 5 C.F.R. Chapter XIV, § 2410 et seq.

An unfair labor practice charge was filed on June 15, 1984, and amended on July 31, 1984, by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2369, hereinafter called AFGE Local 2369, and the Charging Party, alleging that the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Field Operations, New York Region, herein called Respondent, violated the Statute. Based upon the foregoing, on July 27, 1984 the General Counsel of the FLRA, by the Regional Director of Region II, issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing alleging that Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by failing to comply with an arbitrator's award. Respondent filed an Answer denying that it had violated the Statute.

A hearing was conducted before the undersigned in New York, New York. Respondent, AFGE Local 2369 and General Counsel for the FLRA were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence and to argue orally. The parties entered into extensive stipulations of fact. Post hearing briefs have been filed and have been considered.

Based upon the entire record in this matter and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

At all times material to the matter, the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, (AFGE) has been the certified exclusive representative of a consolidated nationwide unit of certain employees of Respondent, including all employees employed in the District and Branch Offices of the Social Security Administration in the states of New York and New Jersey, excluding all management personnel, professional employees, federal employees engaged in personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards and supervisors. AFGE has delegated to the National Council of SSA Field Operations Locals (Council) the Authority to act as its representative for the purposes of collective bargaining for certain of Respondent's employees at its Jersey City Teleservice Center, New Jersey and the Respondent has recognized the Council's delegation. During all times material herein, AFGE Local 2369 has acted as agent for the Council for the purposes of collective bargaining for the employees, among others, at Respondent's Jersey City Teleservice Center, New Jersey and Respondent has recognized this. Labor-management relations between AFGE and the Respondent have been and still are governed by a National Agreement which became effective on June 11, 1984.

On or about August 10, 1982, Respondent gave Derrick Thomas, a unit employee and an on-site union representative in the Jersey City Teleservice Center, a written reprimand for improper conduct alleged to have occurred on August 5, 1982 at his work site. On or about August 25, 1982 AFGE Local 2369 filed a grievance on Thomas' behalf regarding the August 10th reprimand, and this grievance was processed to arbitration pursuant to the parties' negotiated grievance procedure. The arbitration was ultimately heard on December 27, 1983.

By letter dated November 24, 1982, and while the arbitrator's decision was still pending on the August 10th reprimand, Respondent issued a proposal to suspend Thomas for a series of events which occurred prior thereto. The August 10th reprimand formed one of the bases for the proposed suspension which was characterized by Respondent as "progressive discipline." This procedure conformed with the parties' negotiated agreement. Ultimately, by letter dated January 17, 1983, Respondent suspended Thomas for two (2) days on February 8 and 9, 1983. On March 24, 1983, while his arbitration on the August 10th reprimand was still pending, Thomas chose to file an Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) complaint with the Respondent concerning his suspension; he was represented by Charging Party.[1] The EEO Complaint was processed within Respondent and was dismissed on January 26, 1984. The issue of Thomas' suspension was also brought to the attention of the Federal Labor Relations Authority by a charge filed in Case No. 2-CA-30260, alleging violations of §§ 7116(a)(2), (4), and (8) of the Statute. The charge was dismissed on the basis that the suspension had nothing to do with Thomas' function as a union representative.

On or about January 20, 1984, pursuant to the parties' negotiated grievance and arbitration procedure, Arbitrator Jonas Aarons issued an arbitration award in FMCS Case No. 83K/10557 relating to Thomas' August 10th written reprimand. The award provided:

> There was not just cause for the reprimand issued to grievant on August 10, 1982, and such reprimand shall be removed from grievant's file, expunged completely, and may not be used against grievant in any other proceeding.

In the penultimate paragraph of the opinion, which preceded the award, the arbitrator set forth the reasons for fashioning the award as he did. He stated:

> The reprimand has apparently been removed from grievant's SF-7B Extension File and the official Personnel Folder by the passage of time; however,

---

[1] Article 18, § 5, paragraph B, of the agreement, pertaining to Equal Employment Opportunity, provides as follows:

> An employee has the option of filing a complaint under the negotiated Grievance Procedure (Article 24), or under the agency EEO complaint procedure, but not both. EEO counselors will provide an inquiring employee a written description of both procedures.

> the matter is not mooted thereby inasmuch as there was evidence that grievant had this reprimand used against him in another subsequent disciplinary proceeding to demonstrate progressive discipline. So that I will award hereinafter regarding the reprimand involved here that it is not only to be expunged from grievant's record but may not be used against him in any fashion.

The only disciplinary action taken against Thomas subsequent to the August 10, 1982 reprimand was his proposed suspension of November 24, 1982, effectuated January 17, 1983. There have been no other disciplinary actions, at all, since November 24, 1982 proposed or taken.

By letter dated January 24, 1984, shortly after Arbitrator Aarons issued his decision, AFGE Local 2369 requested that Respondent implement the award by, among other things, withdrawing its January 17, 1983 decision to suspend Thomas. By letter dated February 2, 1984, Respondent by its agent, Alex W. Bussey, SSA Assistant Regional Commissioner for Field Operations, declined to accede to the request to set aside the 2-day suspension. This letter states that there were numerous incidents to justify Thomas' January 13th suspension but does not enumerate what the incidents were.

On or about February 20, 1984, the arbitrator's award became final and binding inasmuch as no exceptions had been filed by Respondent. On February 28, 1984, the AFGE Local 2369 filed an unfair labor practice charge in Case No. 2-CA-40234. This charge, which alleged conduct similar to the conduct in this matter, was resolved on May 7, 1984, by means of a non-FLRA settlement which provided, inter alia, that "the reprimand received by Derrick Thomas on August 10, 1982 was overturned at the arbitration and will not be used by the Agency in any way to justify Mr. Thomas' suspension."

On June 12, 1984, AFGE Local 2369 presented Case No. 021-084-X-0163 to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) on behalf of Thomas. It was an appeal of Respondent's unfavorable EEO decision regarding his 2-day suspension. Th hearing opened and closed on the same day and written closing arguments and/or statements were made by AFGE Local 2369 and Respondent on June 28, 1984 and July 6, 1984 respectively. During the course of the EEO hearing, the Respondent elicited testimony from its own witness testified that the suspension was not an EEO matter but rather was based, in part, upon Thomas' August 10, 1982 written reprimand and reflected the application of "progressive discipline." In its Closing Statement, dated July 6, 1984, Respondent remarked, inter alia, "We are certainly not using this matter against Mr. Thomas in these proceedings but merely are articulating our sound reasoning in arriving at the decision to suspend. At the time in question we were administering progressive discipline, pure and simple."

At all times since the arbitrator's award was issued on January 20, 1984 and became final and binding on February 20, 1984, the January 17, 1983 suspension of Derrick Thomas has not been reversed and continues to remain in Thomas' permanent personnel record.

Discussion and Conclusions

Section 7122(a) of the Statute provides that exceptions to an arbitrator's award may be filed by either party to the arbitration. Section 7122(b) provides that "(1) if no exception . . . is filed under subsection (a) . . . during the 30 day period beginning on the dated of such award, the award shall be final and binding." Section 7122(b) provides that an agency must take the actions required by an arbitrator's award once that award has become final and binding, and defines a final and binding arbitrator's award as one to which no exceptions have been filed during the 30 day period following the service date of such award. Accordingly, where no timely exceptions to an arbitrator's award have been filed under Section 7122(a) of the Statute, an agency's subsequent failure or refusal to implement the award has been found to constitute a violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home, Washington, D.C., 15 FLRA No. 26 (1984). See also U.S. Army Health Clinic, Fort Ritchie, Maryland, 9 FLRA 935 (1982); United States Marshals Service, 13 FLRA 351 (1983).

Respondent, not having filed exceptions to the arbitrator's award was obliged on or about February 20, 1984, to comply with the award. To the extent the award required that all references to Thomas' reprimand be removed and expunged from Thomas' files and records, the award has been complied with. The sole issue remaining is whether the award requires Respondent to rescind Thomas' suspension. The arbitrator, in finding the reprimand was not justified, noted, in fashioning a remedy, that the matter was not moot because there was evidence that the grievant had the reprimand used against him in another subsequent disciplinary proceeding to demonstrate progressive discipline. Accordingly, the arbitrator stated that the reprimand must not only be "expunged from grievant's record but may not be used against him in any fashion." Since the only discipline Thomas received subsequent to the reprimand was the suspension, this must have been the subject of the arbitrator's reference.

I conclude that the case is controlled by the FLRA's decision in U.S. Army Health Clinic, Fort Ritchie, Maryland, 9 FLRA No. 935 (1982) where in almost an identical situation the FLRA concluded that such an award by an arbitrator[3] to be meaningful did require the recision of the suspension. It is clear, in the subject case that Respondent relied upon Thomas' reprimand in deciding to suspend him. It was part of the "progressive discipline." Respondent confirmed this in its testimony before in the EEO hearing. Thus the arbitrator's award clearly required, in the subject case, the recision of the suspension.

[3] The Arbitrator's award in the U.S. Army Health Clinic, Fort Ritchie Maryland, supra, did not even mention the intervening suspension.

Bussey's response that Thomas even absent the reprimand, because Thomas had engaged in "numerous incidents of insubordination" is totally unsupported. I conclude this letter does not, in the absence of any evidence of misconduct by Thomas, other than the reprimand incident and the incident that immediately precipitated the suspension, rebut the fact that Thomas suspension was based in part upon the reprimand and, absent the reprimand, because of its principal of "progressive discipline," Thomas would not have been suspended. U.S. Army Health Clinic, Fort Ritchie, Maryland, supra.

Accordingly, I conclude Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by failing to comply with the Arbitrator's award.

Based on the foregoing it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order:

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the U.S. Department of Health shall:

In his arbitration award the arbitrator determined that the removal of the grievant was not justified and sustained the grievance. He ordered the grievant reinstated without backpay.     Award Contrary to Fair Labor Standards Act
      Overtime

5 CFR § 551.102(e)

DIGEST NOTES

A grievance was filed claiming the the grievant, an employee covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), had improperly been denied compensation for fifteen minutes overtime. The grievant alleged that her supervisor asked her to complete some work that needed to be performed before the night shift came on duty and completion of the work extended her worktime by 15 minutes for which she was entitled to overtime under the FLSA. The grievant acknowledged that her supervisor did not request that she work overtime and that she did not seek permission to work overtime. The supervisor testified that she was unaware that the grievant had extended her work time by 15 minutes. The Arbitrator determined that under the FLSA, compensable worktime includes time during which an employee is suffered or permitted to work. He denied the grievance finding in effect that the 15 minutes was not time during which the grievant was suffered or permitted to work.

In its exception to the arbitrator's award the union asserted that the award was deficient because the 15 minutes was time during which the grievant was suffered or permitted to work, therefore the award was contrary to the FLSA and its implementing regulations. The Authority held that under 5 CFR § 551.102(e), compensable worktime includes "any work performed by an employee for the benefit of an agency, whether requested or not, provided the employee's supervisor knows or has reason to believe that the work is being performed and has an opportunity to prevent the work from being performed." The union failed to substantiate in accordance with 5 CFR § 551.102(e) both that the grievant's supervisor knew or had reason to believe that work was being performed and that she had an opportunity to prevent the work from being performed. The union is attempting to relitigate the merits of the case before the Authority by disagreeing with the arbitrator's findings of fact and reasoning and conclusions in resolving the dispute before him. The union therefore provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal that would establish the normal frequency that employees would be subject to telephone monitoring ("normally" once every 6 months) is within the duty to bargain. The Authority found that the proposal was illustrative rather than restrictive and that the use of the words "normal" and "normally" did not inhibit the agency in employing more rigorous scrutiny of employees' work when closer review was warranted. The proposal was within the duty to bargain because it did not interfere with management's rights to direct employees, to assign work and to determine the methods and means of performing work. (proposal 1)

A proposal which provides that "any subjective term such as 'courtesy' will have a universally accepted meaning accepted by all parties . . . and will be applied consistently" is inconsistent with management's rights to assign and direct employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). The Authority found that "courtesy," in this case, has a qualitative rather than quantitative connotation. By negotiating on the meaning of that word, as the proposal would require, the union would be participating in defining what is acceptable performance with respect to that aspect of employee performance. The proposal, therefore, requires a performance standard to be established by means of collective bargaining, and is inconsistent with management's rights to direct employees and to assign work. (proposal 2)

A proposal barring "secret studies," and providing that all studies "will be conducted on average workers under normal working conditions" is a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2). The Authority held that the proposal was a procedure management would observe in developing performance standards. (proposal 3)

A proposal which provides that "[e]rrors involving judgmental or discretionary issues will be for informational purposes only," is a negotiable appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3). The proposal was intended to protect employees who take actions in reliance on available agency guidance when, upon review, the employee's supervisor disagrees with the course of action selected, although that action was among those prescribed by the agency. The Authority held that the proposal clearly did not interfere with the agency's authority to identify critical elements or to set performance standards. Nor did the proposal protect employees from negative evaluations if they fail or refuse to seek advice, when directed by management, in selecting from among authorized options in a given case. Additionally, the proposal did not apply to an employee who fails to select the known preferred option from among authorized alternatives, nor did it prevent the agency from eliminating options or from identifying one or more available options as preferable to the others in certain circumstances. Consequently, there is no interference with the rights to assign work or to direct employees pursuant to section 7106(a)(2). (proposal 4)

A proposal which would require the agency to furnish each bargaining unit employee with a list of errors applicable to his or her work and would further require that the errors be defined in a manner understandable to all parties to the agreement, is a procedure within the meaning of § 7106(b)(2). The Authority concluded that the purposes of the proposal are to assure that employees are informed of what errors the agency has determined are applicable to their jobs and to ensure that those employees understand what constitutes errors. Such a proposal merely obligate management to comply with the statutory requirement that performance standards and critical elements be communicated to employees. (proposal 5)

A proposal requiring that management validate its selected measurement techniques by application of other, established observation methods, constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement in accordance with § 7106(b)(3). The Authority held that the proposal does not purport to interfere with the agency's selection of evaluation methods, nor does it preclude management's taking personnel actions based on application of those methods. The proposal likewise does not seek negotiation over critical elements or performance standards. The primary thrust of the proposal is to assure the validity and objectivity of management's selected measurement techniques. (proposal 6)

A proposal which requires management to take into consideration the fact that there will be reduced opportunities to use telephone monitoring as a method of performance evaluation when it assigns employees to work with clients who communicate poorly in English, is an appropriate arrangement, pursuant to § 7106(b)(3). The Authority found that the proposal deals with consequences arising from the nature of work assigned and is merely a more specific description of the "fair and equitable" criterion enunciated in Office of Personnel Management, 3 FLRA 784. The proposal would only apply in the context of the application to an employee of performance standards established by management. The "allowance" was therefore negotiable. (proposal 7)

A proposal designed to prevent an employee's use of telephones designated for monitoring, from being construed as consent to monitoring undertaken in violation of the collective bargaining agreement, law, rule or regulation, is within the duty to bargain. The Authority found that the proposal was in no way intended to impede the agency's use of telephone monitoring as a tool in measuring employee performance or to shield employees from discipline. Rather, the proposal's sole purpose is to preserve the right to consent to telephone monitoring granted to employees and the union by their negotiated agreement, by the agency itself or by law. DIGEST NOTES

The Department of Justice requested that the Authority issue a general statement of policy and guidance on certain questions relating to the authority of the General Counsel to "unilaterally engage in the informal settlement of an unfair labor practice involving a violation of § 7116(b)(7)." The Authority considered Justice's request and determined that it did not satisfy the standards governing the issuance of general statements of policy or guidance set forth in section 2427.5 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

The Authority found that issuance of a general statement of policy or guidance with respect to the limitation on the role of the General Counsel suggested by Justice would not promote constructive and cooperative labor-management relationships or otherwise promote the purposes of the Statute. Rather issuance of the statement requested by Justice would impinge on the statutory duties and responsibilities of the General Counsel and would be inconsistent with the settlement policy articulated in the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

Where, upon the investigation of an unfair labor practice charge, the General Counsel issues a complaint but subsequently determines that it will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute to settle the matter, the General Counsel may then decide to cease prosecuting the complaint and enter into an informal settlement agreement. Such agreement may be either bilateral or unilateral depending on whether or not the charging party to the complaint is also a party to the settlement agreement. Once the General Counsel enters into an informal settlement agreement, Authority approval of that agreement is not required. The determination of the General Counsel to cease prosecuting a complaint and enter into informal settlement agreement is thus fully within his authority as expressed by Congress in enacting § 7104(f)(2).

The policy behind the informal settlement of unfair labor practice complaints was designed to foster constructive and cooperative labor-management relationships by encouraging parties involved in a labor-management disputes to communicate with one another in an attempt to resolve the matter and hopefully, to forestall the occurrence of future disputes. It was also designed to resolve disputes expeditiously without resort to possibly lengthy and costly litigation and, generally, to promote harmony at the workplace. The General Counsel, through his regional directors, clearly possesses the authority to informally settle all allegations of unfair labor practices where the offered settlement will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Bruno Stein filed by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reason stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions must be dismissed as untimely filed.

The Arbitrator's award is dated June 26, 1986, and appears to have been served on the parties by mail on the same day.

Under section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended,[1] and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended,[2] which amendments are applicable to exceptions pending or filed with the Authority on or after March 2, 1984, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award in this case had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority not later than the close of business on July 30, 1986. However, the Union's exceptions were not filed with the Authority until July 31, 1986, and are, therefore, untimely.

[1] Section 7122(b) of the Statute was amended by the Civil Service Miscellaneous Amendments Act of 1983 (Pub. L. No. 98-224, § 4, 98 Stat. 47, 48 (1984)) to provide that the 30-day period for filing exceptions to an arbitrator's award begins on the date the award is served on the filing party.

Accordingly, as the Union's exceptions were untimely filed, they are hereby dismissed.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Solbert M. Wasserstrom filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

In his award the Arbitrator found that the removal of the grievant was not justified and sustained the grievance. He ordered the grievant reinstated without backpay.

III. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority has determined that it is without jurisdiction to review the Union's exceptions. Section 7122(a) of the Statute pertinently provides:

> Either party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award pursuant to the arbitration (other than an award relating to a matter described in section 7121(f) of this title).

As relevant to this case, the matters described in section 7121(f) of the Statute include adverse actions under 5 U.S.C. § 7512, such as a removal. Review of an arbitration award relating to such matters must be obtained in the same manner and under the same conditions as if the matter involved had been decided by the Merit Systems Protection Board. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1857 and Sacramento Air Logistics Center, McClellan Air Force Base, 21 FLRA No. 41 (1986).

Because the Arbitrator's award relates to a matter covered by section 7512, under section 7122(a) of the Statute, exceptions to the award may not be filed with the Authority. Consequently, the Authority is without jurisdiction to review the exceptions.

IV. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons, the Union's exceptions are dismissed.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Don Hamilton filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration claiming that the grievant, an employee covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), had improperly been denied compensation for 15 minutes of overtime. According to the Arbitrator, the grievant alleged that her supervisor approached and asked her to complete some work that needed to be performed before the night shift came on duty and that completion of the work extended her worktime by 15 minutes for which she is entitled to overtime compensation under FLSA. The Arbitrator noted that the grievant acknowledged that her supervisor did not request that she work overtime and that the grievant did not seek permission of her supervisor to work overtime. The Arbitrator also noted that the supervisor testified that she was unaware that the grievant had extended her worktime by 15 minutes. In resolving the grievance the Arbitrator indicated that under FLSA compensable worktime includes time during which an employee is suffered or permitted to work. In particular, he cited 5 CFR § 551.102(e) which defines work that is suffered or permitted as follows:

> [A]ny work performed by an employee for the benefit of an agency, whether requested or not, provided the employee's supervisor knows or has reason to believe that the work is being performed and has an opportunity to prevent the work from being performed.

Applying that definition to the case presented to him, he denied the grievance, finding in effect that the 15 minutes in dispute was not time during which the grievant was suffered or permitted to work.

III. EXCEPTIONS

In its exceptions the Union essentially contends that the award is deficient because, contrary to the determination of the Arbitrator, the disputed 15 minutes was time during which the grievant was suffered or permitted to work within the meaning of FLSA and implementing regulations. Specifically, the Union asserts that therefore the denial of the grievance is contrary to FLSA and implementing regulations, is arbitrary and capricious, is in excess of the Arbitrator's authority, and fails to draw its essence from the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Union also asserts that the Arbitrator based his award on the fact that the grievant directly filed a grievance rather than requesting overtime compensation and that this constitutes a restraint on the use of the negotiated grievance procedure contrary to the Statute and the agreement.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

We conclude that the Union fails to establish that the award is deficient. As noted, the Arbitrator denied the grievance finding in effect that the disputed 15 minutes was not time during which the grievant was suffered or permitted to work. In its exceptions the Union fails to establish otherwise. The Union fails to substantiate in accordance with 5 CFR § 551.102(e) both that the grievant's supervisor knew or had reason to believe that work was being performed and that she had an opportunity to prevent the work from being performed. Instead, in disputing the determination of the Arbitrator, the Union is attempting to relitigate the merits of this case before the Authority by disagreeing with the Arbitrator's findings of fact and reasoning and conclusions in resolving the dispute before him. Consequently, the Union in this respect provides no basis for finding the award deficient. U.S. Department of Labor and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 12, 17 FLRA 952 (1985). We also conclude that no basis is provided for finding the award deficient as contrary to the Statute or the agreement as asserted by the Union. Contrary to the assertion of the Union, we find that the award was based on the Arbitrator's determination that no work was suffered or permitted to be performed by the grievant and not on the fact that the grievant directly filed a grievance claiming overtime compensation.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

ORDER DISMISSING PETITION FOR REVIEW

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute on a petition for review of a negotiability issue filed by the Union.

The record in this case indicates that by letter dated June 20, 1986, the Activity declared the Union's proposal concerning Mutual Rights and Obligations to be nonnegotiable. On July 7, 1986, pursuant to section 7117 of the Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Union filed a petition for review as to whether the disputed proposal was within the duty to bargain. Subsequently, in a letter dated July 16, 1986, the Agency withdrew the allegation of nonnegotiability.

Since the Agency has withdrawn the allegation concerning the Union's proposal, there is no longer an issue as to whether the proposal is within the parties' duty to bargain under the Statute.

Accordingly, and apart from other considerations, the petition for review in this case is hereby dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of eight Union proposals.

II. Procedural Issue

The Agency specifically acknowledged that its Statement of Position was not filed within the time limits established by section 7117(c)(3) of the Statute and section 2424.6 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. However, the Agency did not specifically allege or establish that the events occasioning the untimely filing were "extraordinary circumstances" warranting a waiver of time limits under section 2429.23(b) of the Rules and Regulations. Consequently, the untimely Statement of Position has not been considered in deciding this case. Further, the Agency head's determinations on the disputed proposals did not include any rationale supporting the allegations that the proposals were not negotiable.

III. Union Proposal 1

Employees subject to the Service Observation monitoring shall normally only be the subject > of one (1) such Service Observation during each six month period commencing from the effective date of the agreement.

A. Position of the Union

The Union, in its Reply Brief, characterizes this proposal as "a general procedure to be followed after the agency has made its substantive decision to conduct service monitoring." The effect of the proposal is explained in the following manner:

> This proposal would establish the normal frequency that employees would be subject to telephone monitoring. While the proposal sets this frequency at "normally" once every six (6) months the agency retains the right to perform service monitoring more or less often. Further, management would retain full discretion to determine who would be monitored, by whom and when.

B. Analysis

Based primarily on the Union's statements as to the intent and effect of Union Proposal 1, the Authority finds that it is not materially different from Proposal 7 under the heading "Measuring Productivity" in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, AFL-CIO and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 15 FLRA 909 (1984), rev'd as to other matters, Decision and Order on Motion for Reconsideration, (June 19, 1985). Proposal 7 in that case, deemed to be illustrative rather than restrictive, provided that employee's work products would be subject to "normal quality checks that are normally utilized." The Authority concluded, in effect, that use of the words, "normal" and "normally" in that proposal did not inhibit the agency in employing more rigorous scrutiny of employees' work when closer review was warranted. Thus, the Authority found the proposal to be within the duty to bargain because it did not interfere with management's rights to direct employees, to assign work and to determine the methods and means of performing work. In like manner, Union Proposal 1 in this case is within the duty to bargain.

C. Conclusion

Based on the rationale in Social Security Administration, and the Authority's interpretation of the proposal's purpose in that case, Union Proposal 1 in this case is within the duty to bargain.

IV. Union Proposal 2

> Any subjective term such as "courtesy" will have a universally accepted meaning accepted by all parties to this agreement and will be applied consistently in all affected SSA localities nationwide.

A. Position of the Union

The Union describes this proposal as establishing "general, nonqualitative criteria on which subjective performance standards will be based." The proposal, according to the Union, leaves the Agency with sole discretion to decide to use such subjective terms in evaluating performance, but requires a jointly developed standardized definition of such terms should management decide to use them. The Union asserts that its proposal is similar to proposals found negotiable by the Authority in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 7 FLRA 235 (1981), in that its proposal also seeks to standardize performance requirements "to prevent arbitrary, capricious and inconsistent management practices."

B. Analysis

The Union's attempt to analogize its proposal to proposals (presumably Union Proposals 1 through 5) in Internal Revenue Service is unpersuasive. In the cited case, the proposals only addressed the method of counting work production and left with management discretion to establish quantitative performance standards within the accounting procedures established by the proposals. Union Proposal 2 however, presents a different issue because "courtesy" has a qualitative rather than quantitative connotation.1/ By negotiating on the meaning of that word, as the proposal would require (note the requirement that the meaning "be accepted by all parties to this agreement"), the Union would be participating in defining what is acceptable performance with respect to that aspect of employee performance. Thus, as the proposal requires a performance standard to be established by means of collective bargaining, it is inconsistent with management's rights to direct employees and to assign work pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA 70 (1981) (Union Proposal 3), aff'd sub nom. AFGE, Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 926 (1983).

---

1/ The Random House College Dictionary (1973) defines "courtesy" in pertinent part, as follows:

> 1. excellence of manners or social conduct; polite behavior. 2. a courteous, respectful, or considerate act or expression.

C. Conclusion

Based on the reasoning and case cited in Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Union Proposal 2 is inconsistent with management's rights to assign and direct employees under sections 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute.

V. Union Proposal 3

> There will be no secret studies. All studies will be conducted on average workers under normal working conditions.

A. Position of the Union

The Union asserts that its proposal is "nearly identical" to the first paragraph of Union Proposal 4, found to be negotiable in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217 (1981).

B. Analysis

The record establishes that the words "average workers" in Proposal 3 are intended to convey the same meaning as "typical workers" in paragraph 1 of Union Proposal 4 found negotiable in Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Thus, the Authority finds Union Proposal 3 in this case is to the same effect as paragraph 1 of Union Proposal 4 in Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The Authority found the cited part of the proposal in that case, barring secret studies and requiring that studies be conducted on "typical workers under normal working conditions," to be a negotiable procedure management would observe in developing performance standards.

C. Conclusion

Based on the reasoning and case cited in Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Union Proposal 3 in this case is a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2).

VI. Union Proposal 4

> Errors involving judgmental or discretionary issues will be for informational purposes only.

A. Position of the Union

The Union explains that published Agency guidance frequently lists alternative permissable actions to be taken by an employee in a specific situation, and that the Agency considers all such alternatives proper. According to the Union, the purpose of its proposal is to protect employees from the adverse effect of choosing an authorized alternative with which the employee's supervisor subsequently disagrees. The Union points out that the proposal would not prevent management from deciding which situations may be handled in more than one way. Nor is management prohibited from determining what the allowable options are. The proposal would only apply after those decisions are reached.

B. Analysis

Union Proposal 4, in essence, is intended to protect employees who take actions in reliance on available Agency guidance when, upon review, the employee's supervisor disagrees with the course of action selected, although that action was among those prescribed by the Agency. While the proposal would not obligate management to communicate to employees what options, among those authorized, are preferred in various circumstances, failure to communicate a preference would, in effect, prevent the Agency from subsequently finding unacceptable an employee's choice among alternatives it had already identified as acceptable.

An Agency is required by 5 U.S.C. § 4302 to develop a performance appraisal system which, among other things, provides for establishment of performance standards and identification of critical elements and obligates management to communicate those standards and critical elements to affected employees. Proposal 4 clearly does not interfere with the Agency's authority to identify critical elements or to set performance standards. Nor does Proposal 4 protect employees from negative evaluations if they fail or refuse to seek advice, when directed by management, in selecting from among authorized options in a given case. Additionally, the proposal does not apply to an employee who fails to select the known preferred option from among authorized alternatives, nor does it prevent the Agency from eliminating options or from identifying one or more available options as preferable to the others in certain circumstances. Consequently, there is no interference with the rights to assign work or to direct employees pursuant to section 7106(a)(2) of the Statute. Rather, the Authority views Union Proposal 4 as being similar in effect to Union Proposal 5 in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 3 FLRA 784 (1980) which was construed as requiring that performance standards be applied in a "fair and equitable" manner. Noting in that case that "the proposal . . . does not impose on the Agency a particular decision as to the quantity, quality, and timeliness of production or the establishing of priorities, or otherwise establish the content of performance standards," the Authority concluded that the proposal was within the duty to bargain "as an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's authority under the Statute to direct employees and assign work through establishment of performance standards and to discipline employees for unacceptable performance."

In reaching this conclusion, the Authority stresses that it is relying solely upon the union's explanation that employees are given alternative courses of action and have the freedom to select any alternative so identified by the Agency. Similarly, the Authority notes the absence in the record of any explanation by the Agency as to the role an employee's judgment is expected to play in selecting among alternatives. There is no indication that the Agency has identified the exercise of sound judgment in choosing among alternative courses of action as a critical element of the positions involved. This is not to say, however, that an agency in exercising its reserved management rights cannot make the exercise of sound judgment a critical element and establish standards of performance for that element. Such actions would be outside the duty to bargain.

C. Conclusion

Therefore, the Authority finds Union Proposal 4, in those circumstances, to be a negotiable "appropriate arrangement" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

VII. Union Proposal 5

> Each technician will be given an appropriate list of errors, each defined in such a manner that all affected parties to this agreement will have a common understanding of what they are and how they will be applied. Any error definition will be applied consistently to all affected employees, regardless of location nationwide.

A. Position of the Union

According to the Union, this proposal would require the Agency to furnish each bargaining unit employee with a list of errors applicable to his or her work and would further require that the errors be defined in a manner understandable to all parties to the agreement. The Union points out that management would retain the authority to identify errors and that management would not need to negotiate over the definitions. The proposal only requires that the definitions be understood in both their meaning and application and that they be applied consistently throughout the bargaining unit.

B. Analysis

Adopting the Union's explanation, which is consistent with the language of the proposal itself, the Authority concludes that the purposes of the proposal are to assure that employees are informed of what errors the Agency has determined are applicable to their jobs and to ensure that those employees understand what constitute errors. Thus, Union Proposal 5 is similar in purpose to those proposals, found negotiable by the Authority, requiring management to give notice to employees of which elements of their jobs will be subject to performance rating and which of those elements are deemed by management to be critical. Specifically, in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3028 and Department of Health and Human Services, Public Health Service, Alaska Area Native Health Service, 13 FLRA 697 (1984), the Authority observed that such proposals merely obligate management to comply with the statutory requirement that performance standards and critical elements be communicated to employees.

C. Conclusion

The Authority finds, therefore, that Union Proposal 5 constitutes a "procedure" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(2) to be followed by management in directing employees and assigning work through application of its performance appraisal system. Consequently, the proposal is within the duty to bargain.

VIII. Union Proposal 6

> Evaluative conclusions based upon the observation of any employee must be supported and accompanied by evidence gathered by valid, objective commonly accepted and understood evaluative techniques. This other evidence must be sufficient to leave no reasonable doubt that the evidence does indeed represent improper activity or inefficiency by the employee.

A. Position of the Union

The Union contends that this proposal is "equivalent" to the proposal the Authority held to be negotiable in National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 8 FLRA 30 (1982), in that its proposal is neither intended to dictate what evaluative techniques the Agency is to use in evaluating employee performance nor to change the quantum of proof necessary to impose performance based discipline on employees. It characterizes Union Proposal 6 as establishing a general, nonquantitative standard and suggests that its proposal is negotiable pursuant to the Authority's holding with respect to Union Proposal 5 in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 3 FLRA 784 (1980).

B. Analysis

The Authority finds Union Proposal 6 to be to the same effect as the proposal held negotiable in the cited Internal Revenue Service case. In the cited case, the Authority determined that the proposal merely required that management validate its selected measurement techniques by application of other, established observation methods. As with the Internal Revenue Service proposal, the disputed proposal in this case does not purport to interfere with the Agency's selection of evaluation methods, nor does it preclude management's taking personnel actions based on application of those methods. Further this proposal likewise does not seek negotiation over critical elements or performance standards.

The primary thrust of the proposal is to assure the validity and objectivity of management's selected measurement techniques. A similar objective was found to be a negotiable "appropriate arrangement" in Office of Personnel Management where Union Proposal 5 sought to require management to apply the performance standards it had established in a fair and equitable manner. The proposal therefore was held to be within the scope of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

C. Conclusion

Therefore, based on the reasoning in the cited Internal Revenue Service and Office of Personnel Management cases, Union Proposal 6 constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement in accordance with section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of reserved rights.

IX. Union Proposal 7

> Employees who deal with claimants/ beneficiaries whose primary language is not English, will not be disadvantaged by their less frequent use of Direct Contact and lack of Service Observation.

A. Position of the Union

The Union explains that telephone contacts with clients whose primary language is not English are less frequent than with English speaking clients because of the communication difficulties involved. Consequently, management's opportunity to use its telephone monitoring technique in evaluating employees dealing with non-English speaking clients is reduced. Therefore, according to the Union,the proposal is intended to protect employees who, because of the nature of the work assigned them, do not provide management with the opportunity to employ telephone monitoring to the same extent that it is used in evaluating other employees.

B. Analysis

The Authority finds that Union Proposal 7 deals with consequences arising from the nature of the work assigned. That is, the proposal requires management to take into consideration the fact that there will be reduced opportunities to use telephone monitoring as a method of performance evaluation when it assigns employees to work with clients who communicate poorly in English. Hence, the proposal is similar in purpose and effect to the portion of Union Proposal 2 in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217 (1981) which required that agency performance standards "make allowances for factors beyond the control of the employee." The Authority found that the quoted part of the proposal was merely a more specific description of the "fair and equitable" criterion enunciated in Office of Personnel Management (3 FLRA 784) and "would apply only in the context of the application to an employee of performance standards established by management." Therefore, the Authority concluded that the "allowance" requirement was negotiable as an "appropriate arrangement" for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of a reserved right.

C. Conclusion

Based on the reasons and cases cited in Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Authority concludes that Union Proposal 7 is within the duty to bargain pursuant to section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

X. Union Proposal 8

> In no case will an employee's utilization of any telephone designated pursuant to #9 (of the memorandum) be construed as agreement with or consent to Service Observation/Monitoring of telephones.

A. Position of the Union

According to the Union, the telephones in question are those designated by management for monitoring in connection with evaluating employee performance. The Union states that the Agency is required, pursuant to its own regulations, to obtain employee consent prior to each instance of monitoring those telephones. The Union states that the proposal's purpose is to prevent an employee's use of the designated telephones from being construed as consent to monitoring undertaken in violation of the collective bargaining agreement, law, rule or regulation. The Union points out that the proposal does not authorize employees to refuse to participate in monitoring as a performance evaluation technique nor does it insulate employees from discipline for refusing to give the required consent to telephone monitoring.

B. Analysis

Based on the Union's explanation, it is clear that Union Proposal 8 is in no way intended to impede the Agency's use of telephone monitoring as a tool in measuring employee performance or to shield employees from discipline. Rather, the proposal's sole purpose is to preserve the right to consent to telephone monitoring granted to employees and the Union by their negotiated agreement, by the Agency itself or by law.

C. Conclusion

The Authority finds that Union Proposal 8 does not interfere with rights reserved to management under the Statute and the proposal does not appear to be nonnegotiable on any other ground. Consequently, the proposal is within the Agency's duty to bargain.

XI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposals 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8.[2] IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the petition for review as it relates to Union Proposal 2 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Upon consideration of the Petitioner's application for review, including all arguments in support thereof, the Authority concludes that no compelling reason exists for granting the application. Rather, the application in essence expresses mere disagreement with the Regional Director's findings which are based on precedent and have not been shown to be clearly erroneous or to have prejudicially affected the rights of any party.

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2422.17(f)(3) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the application for review of the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Objections be, and it hereby is, denied.

FEDERAL LABOR RELATIONS AUTHORITY
WASHINGTON, D.C.

Case No. O-PS-29

DECISION ON REQUEST FOR GENERAL STATEMENT OF POLICY OR GUIDANCE

The Authority received a request from the Department of Justice (Justice) that the Authority issue a general statement of policy or guidance on the following questions:

> (1) Whether the General Counsel of the Federal Labor Relations Authority, pursuant to his charter under 5 U.S.C. § 7105 and 7118, is vested with the authority to unilaterally engage in the informal settlement of an unfair labor practice involving a violation of 5 U.S.C. § 7116(b)(7); and, if so, whether and to what extent, this authority is limited.
> (2) Whether a settlement agreement which merely provides for posting a notice is, in itself, sufficient to constitute "tak[ing] any other appropriate disciplinary action" as required by 5 U.S.C. § 7120(f)(2).
> (3) Whether the act of calling for, or condoning, a strike, work stoppage, or slowdown by a labor organization, in violation of 5 U.S.C. § 7116(b)(7) is, in the absence of an actual strike, sufficient to require that the action set out at 5 U.S.C. § 7120(f) be carried out.

The Authority has carefully considered this request and has determined that it does not satisfy the standards governing the issuance of general statements of policy or guidance set forth in section 2427.5 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, which provides in pertinent part:

> § 2427.5 Standards governing issuance of general statements of policy or guidance.
> In deciding whether to issue a general statement of policy or guidance, the Authority shall consider:
> . . . .

> (c) Whether the resolution of the question presented would have general applicability under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute;
> . . . .
> (f) Whether the issuance by the Authority of a general statement of policy or guidance on the question would promote constructive and cooperative labor-management relationships in the Federal service and would otherwise promote the purposes of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

Underlying Justice's request, in our view, is a desire to have the Authority examine the role of the General Counsel in investigating, prosecuting and remedying conduct which is alleged to violate section 7116(b)(7) of the Statute.[1] Justice would apparently limit the role of the General Counsel in entering into unilateral informal settlement agreements in such cases.

Considering first the standard set forth in section 2427.5(f) of our Rules and Regulations, we find that issuance of a general statement of policy or guidance with respect to the limitation on the role of the General Counsel suggested by Justice would not promote constructive and cooperative labor-management relationships or otherwise promote the purposes of the Statute. Rather, issuance of the statement requested by Justice would have the opposite effect. It would impinge on the statutory duties and responsibilities of the General Counsel and would be inconsistent with the settlement policy articulated in the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

[1] Section 7116(b)(7) provides as follows:

> § 7116. Unfair labor practices
> (b) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization--
> . . . .
> (7)(A) to call, or participate in, a strike, work stoppage, or slowdown, or picketing of an agency in a labor-management dispute if such picketing interferes with an agency's operations, or
> (B) to condone any activity described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph by failing to take action to prevent or stop such activity[.]

Section 7104(f)(2) of the Statute defines the duties and reponsibilities of the General Counsel. Specifically, that section empowers the General Counsel to "investigate alleged unfair labor practices, . . . file and prosecute complaints, . . . and exercise such other powers of the Authority as the Authority may prescribe." Among these "other powers" is the "full and final authority and responsibility, on behalf of the Authority . . . to enter into and approve the informal settlement of charges" as set forth in Appendix B of our Rules and Regulations. Where, upon investigation of an unfair labor practice charge, the General Counsel issues a complaint but subsequently determines that it will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute to settle the matter, the General Counsel may then decide to cease prosecuting the complaint and enter into an informal settlement agreement. Such agreement may be either bilateral or unilateral depending on whether or not the charging party to the complaint is also a party to the settlement agreement. Once the General Counsel enters into an informal settlement agreement, Authority approval of that agreement is not required.2/ The determination by the General Counsel to cease prosecuting a complaint and enter into an informal settlement agreement is thus fully within his authority as expressed by Congress in enacting section 7104(f)(2) of the Statute.3/

Moreover, efforts by the General Counsel to informally resolve an allegation that an unfair labor practice has been committed are fully consistent with Appendix B of the Rules and Regulations, noted above, and the Authority's settlement policy.

2/ Formal settlement agreements, on the other hand, must be submitted to the Authority for approval. See generally section 2423.11 of the Rules and Regulations for a description of the different types of settlement agreements.

3/ Similarly, the General Counsel maintains the discretion to determine whether to issue a complaint in the first instance. Such action is not subject to review by the Authority and is generally not subject to judicial review. See Turgeon v. FLRA, 677 F.2d 937 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In exercising its leadership role under the Statute,[4] the Authority has long maintained a policy of encouraging the informal resolution of unfair labor practice charges. This policy, expressed in sections 2423.2 and 2423.11 of the Rules and Regulations, extends to any phase of an unfair labor practice proceeding where the purposes and policies of the Statute will be effectuated.[5] The settlement policy was designed to foster constructive and cooperative labor-management relationships by encouraging parties involved in a labor-management dispute to communicate with one another in an attempt to resolve the matter and, hopefully, to forestall the occurrence of future disputes. It was also designed to resolve disputes expeditiously without resort to possibly lengthy and costly litigation and, generally, to promote harmony at the workplace. No limitation on the "full and final authority and responsibility" of the General Counsel to effect informal settlements as expressed in Appendix B and elsewhere in the Authority's Rules and Regulations was stated or intended.

Therefore, based upon the role of the General Counsel set forth in section 7104(f)(2) of the Statute and the further delegation of duties as prescribed in our Rules and Regulations and given the considerations underlying the Authority's settlement policy, we find that the General Counsel, through his regional directors, clearly possesses the authority to informally settle all allegations of unfair labor practices where the offered settlement will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute. To grant Justice's request and resolve the questions raised in the manner suggested would not, in our view, promote constructive and cooperative labor-management relationships in the Federal service.

[4] Section 7105(a) of the Statute provides:

> § 7105. Powers and duties of the Authority
> (a)(1) The Authority shall provide leadership in establishing policies and guidance relating to matters under this chapter, and, except as otherwise provided, shall be responsible for carrying out the purpose of this chapter.

[5] See also Norfolk Naval Shipyard, 10 FLRA 641 (1982) and Veterans Administration Medical Center, Bath, New York and Veterans Administration, Washington, D.C., 12 FLRA 552 (1983).

We also find that the request does not meet the standard set forth in section 2427.5(c) in that resolution of the questions presented would not have general applicability under the Statute. As noted by Justice, there have been very few instances in which the General Counsel has entered into such settlement agreements and therefore very few instances in which such issues have arisen. Any questions concerning the authority of the General Counsel to act in this area have been addressed above.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Kenneth A. Perea filed by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reason stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions must be dismissed as untimely filed.

Accordingly, as the Union's exceptions were untimely filed, they are hereby dismissed.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority because of the Union's request for reconsideration of the Authority's Decision and Order on Negotiability Issues of July 15, 1986, in the above-entitled matter. For the reasons set forth below, the request must be denied.

In its decision the Authority held that because the disputed portion of Provision 1 provided non-appropriated fund (NAF) employees who are not covered by 5 U.S.C. § 4303 with an option to contest performance based non-disciplinary separations for cause through either the Agency's internal regulatory appeals procedure or through the negotiated grievance procedure which covers such matters, it was outside the duty to bargain. The provison was contrary to section 7121(a)(1) which establishes that, except for those matters set out in section 7121(d) and (e), the negotiated grievance procedure shall be the exclusive procedure for resolving all matters which fall within its coverage. The Authority found that the Agency's internal administrative appeals system did not constitute an "appellate procedure" within the meaning of section 7121(e)(1) which permits employees not covered by title 5 the option of challenging performance based non-disciplinary separations, through their negotiated grievance procedure or through the applicable "appellate procedure" which may exist under their non-title 5 personnel system.

In support of its request for reconsideration, the Union contends that since the position of the Agency as set forth in the record of the case does not address whether its administrative appeals procedure is an "appellate procedure" under section 7121(e), the Authority's decision is based on a matter that was not at issue in the case.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides that a party which can establish "extraordinary circumstances" may request reconsideration of an Authority decision. Here, however, the Union has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17. Rather, the Union's arguments essentially constitute nothing more than disagreement with the Authority's decision. Contrary to the Union's argument, the Authority must apply all relevant provisions of the Statute in resolving negotiability appeals and is not limited to considering only the arguments of the parties.

Consequently, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish the existence of extraordinary circumstances. Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's request for reconsideration be, and it hereby is, denied.

DIGEST NOTES

The activity filed an application for review seeking to set-aside in part, the Regional Director's finding that "seasonal supervisors" should be excluded from the certified unit during the period in which they are supervising seasonal employees, but should be considered to be within the unit for that part of the year when they have no subordinates reporting or assigned to them. The activity contended that the case raised a substantial question of law or policy and asserted that review should be granted because of the Regional Director's reliance on Executive Order law and the absence of Authority precedent on the subject. The Authority found no reason to change the long-standing policy with regard to "seasonal supervisors" established under the Executive Order cases. The Authority therefore concluded that no compelling reason existed for granting the application, which amounted to mere disagreement with the Regional Director's findings which were based on precedent and had not been shown to be clearly erroneous or to have prejudicially affected the rights of any party.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority found, in agreement with the Judge, that a contractual provision permitting union participation on rating panels does not interfere with any employee rights under the Statute. Nor was the union in violation of the Statute when in the selection of its own representative, it established a policy of only nominating union members for selection and service on the panels. Accordingly, the union did not violate § 7116(b)(1) and (8) by confining its nominees to rating panels to unit employees who were union members. The Judge found that it is well settled that a union must represent all unit employees equally and without regard to union affiliation. It is also well settled that a union is entitled to select its own representatives. To the extent that a union limits its representatives to union members, it could hardly be argued that it was discriminating against non-union unit members in violation of § 7114(a)(1). The Judge concluded that the contract provision did not constitute a benefit for unit employees but instead conferred a right of representation on the rating panels to the union.

The Authority concluded that the union did not violate § 7116(b)(1) when its steward informed a unit employee that the union would only nominate union members to be rating panel members. The Authority found that the pronouncement of this lawful policy did not interfere with, restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of statutory rights.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which provides that no position description will be changed for a minimum of 90 days, is inconsistent with FPM Chapter 511, Subchapter 4-3 and therefore, nonnegotiable. That regulation requires that position descriptions accurately state the duties and responsibilities assigned employees. Although, the Authority found that the proposal would not preclude the agency from assigning duties which if included in the position descriptions would result in reclassification of the position, it concluded that the proposal would prohibit the agency from including those duties in position descriptions for a minimum of 90 days even if duties are actually assigned to employees during that time period. The proposal would therefore result in inaccurate position descriptions, in violation of the FPM. The fact that the conflict with the FPM would occur for a specified time period did not change the Authority's conclusion because a proposal is nonnegotiable if it conflicts at all with a Government-wide rule or regulation under § 7117(a)(1).

A proposal which would require the agency to advertise, within 30 days, "all new positions" established by a reorganization, is negotiable only at the election of the agency and the agency has elected not to bargain concerning the matter. The Authority found that to the extent that the proposal would require the posting of notices concerning vacancies in bargaining unit positions only, and would not require management to fill such positions or select from any particular source, the proposal constitutes a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2). To the extent that the proposal would apply to positions outside the bargaining unit, it is negotiable only at the agency's election. Both the language of the proposal and the record indicated that the proposal applies to all newly created positions, not just those within the bargaining unit. The proposal does not, however, require the agency to fill any of those newly created positions or restrict management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(C) to select from any appropriate source.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority held that the activity did not violate § 7115(a)(1) and therefore did not commit an unfair labor practice under § 7116(a)(1) and (8) when it recouped overpayments of union dues previously remitted by the activity to the union by deducting such overpayments from subsequent remittances. The Authority adopted the Judge's findings that the activity properly recouped the overpayment of dues, on behalf of former unit employees who had been promoted to supervisory positions, by using the set-off method. The Judge correctly found that the Authority's supplemental decisions in Griffis, 15 FLRA 1032 (1984); and Goodfellow, 14 FLRA 795 (1984)(In both cases the Authority accepted the decisions of the circuit courts as the "law of the case," and held that the set-off method violated § 7115(a)), did not change Authority precedent which holds that use of the set-off method to recoup the overpayment of dues does not violate § 7115(a).

Section 7115(a) enables a bargaining unit member to have his employing agency deduct periodic union membership dues from his regular pay and forward it to the exclusive representative of the bargaining unit directly. An agency's recoupment of dues erroneously paid to an exclusive representative on behalf of an employee after his appointment to a supervisory position constitutes the correction of an administrative error in compliance with the terms of the Statute. The setoff of such overpayments against current allotments and remittances to the union constitutes a lawful and efficient means of recoupment. The Authority adheres to the position that such a method of recoupment does not violate either § 7115(a) or § 7116(a)(1) and (8). Further, when the agency corrects the overpayment by setoff against presently allotted dues before remittance to the exclusive representative, the right of current unit members to have their dues remitted to the union is not violated. Rather, the portion of the dues of the current unit members which was not remitted to the union was, in effect, "pre-paid" by the agency through previous overpayments. An agency need not maintain the dues allotments of current member employees intact until they are remitted to the union under § 7115(a), as long as the agency remits sufficient payments to the union to avoid arrearage on the part of employees properly covered by § 7115(a).

Under the "law of the case" doctrine, an issue of law as decided in a reviewing court becomes binding precedent to be followed in successive stages of litigation involving the same case.

DIGEST NOTES

The parties submitted to arbitration the issue of whether the failure to permit the grievants to exchange work locations violated the parties collective bargaining agreement. The Arbitrator determined that the activity had violated the agreement and sustained the grievance. Noting that each grievant had additional miles added to the distance between home and work as a result of the activity's improper actions, the Arbitrator as a remedy directed that the grievants be paid for their additional commuting expenses.

In its exceptions to the arbitrator's award the agency contended that the remedy directing that the activity pay the additional commuting expenses incurred by grievants was contrary to law because commuting expenses are not authorized as reimbursable travel expenses. The agency also maintained that the award of such expenses was not authorized under the Back Pay Act as an award of backpay. The Authority held that there is no provision in any relevant statute or regulation that permits the payment or reimbursement of the additional personal commuting expenses of the grievants. Unless essential to the transacting of official business, no costs or expenses incurred by federal employees for transportation between their residences and official duty stations are payable or reimbursable under law and regulation pertaining to travel expenses. Instead, federal employees must bear all such transportation costs as personal commuting expenses. Accordingly, there is no authorization under law or regulation for the payment directed by the arbitrator of the additional personal commuting expenses incurred by the grievants.

The Authority held that neither the Back Pay Act nor its implementing regulations authorized the payment or reimbursement of personal commuting expenses as part of an award of backpay. The Back Pay Act provides the appropriate authority to remedy with an award of backpay an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action that has denied an aggrieved employee "pay, allowances, or differentials" that the employee would have earned or received if the personnel action had not occurred. "Pay, allowances, and differentials" are defined in 5 CFR § 550.803 as "monetary and employment benefits to which an employee is entitled by statute or regulation by virtue of the performance of a federal function." "Pay, allowances, or differentials" encompassed by the Act constitute normal, legitimate employee benefits in the nature of employment compensation or emoluments. The additional personal commuting expenses incurred by the grievants as the result of the activity's unwarranted action are not proper components of an award of backpay under the Back Pay Act and its implementing regulations. Further the arbitrator did not find, as required by the Act, that the expenses directed by the arbitrator to be reimbursed are expenses which the grievants "normally would have . . . received during the period if the personnel action had not occurred."

DIGEST NOTES

A grievance was submitted to arbitration claiming that the grievant had been denied overtime work assignments in violation of the overtime provisions of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. At arbitration the activity explained that the overtime work was not assigned to the grievant because he did not possess the necessary familiarity with the inspection work in the particular shop, which was different from the work in the shop where the grievant normally worked, and did not possess the special skills required to assure the continuity and efficiency of the inspection work. The arbitrator found, contrary to the activity's determination, that the grievant had the special skills necessary for the performance of the work and that granted an opportunity to perform the work on overtime, the grievant had the capability to become sufficiently familiar with that inspection work. The arbitrator found that under the parties' agreement, the grievant should have been offered overtime work assignments and sustained the grievance. As a remedy the arbitrator directed the activity to assign the grievant overtime work in sufficient amounts to permit him to recoup that which he had been improperly denied.

In its exception to the arbitrator's award the agency contended that the award was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(B) because it interfered with management's right to assign work. The agency also argued that the arbitrator substituted his judgment for that of management in determining which employees were qualified to perform the work on overtime. The Authority found that the activity had not assigned overtime work to the grievant because it determined that he was not qualified. When the arbitrator as his award found that under the agreement the grievant was qualified for and entitled to have been offered overtime work assignments and directed that he be assigned such work, he negated the exercise by management of its rights to establish qualifications and to determine whether particular employees meet those qualifications . The arbitrator did not merely enforce a procedure of the parties' collective bargaining agreement by which parties previously judged by management to be equally qualified will be selected to perform certain work. Instead, the arbitrator enforced the agreement to improperly interfere with management's right to assign work in accordance with § 7106(a)(2)(B). The arbitrator's award was therefore, set aside.

DIGEST NOTES

A grievance was submitted to arbitration on the issue of whether the grievant was properly accorded an overall annual performance appraisal rating of "fully successful" rather than "exceeds." The arbitrator determined that the reviewing official failed to meet his responsibility under the performance appraisal regulation to review the grievant's rating for consistency with the ratings given other employees. The arbitrator determined that in the rating process of formulating performance ratings for the appraisal period in dispute, the grievant was unfairly discriminated against because the evidence showed that the grievant had been evaluated under standards different from those applied to other employees. As his award, the arbitrator directed that the grievant's performance be reevaluated. He also directed that the reevaluation be in accordance with an elaborate process that he specified in his award. That process provided that the grievant's rating must be reevaluated solely by a comparison with five samples, as specified by the award, and required under certain circumstances that the grievant's rating must be changed to "exceeds."

In its exceptions to the arbitrator's award the agency contended that the award was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) because the arbitrator substituted his judgment for that of management in the area of performance appraisal and had fashioned a remedy without basis in law, regulation, or the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Authority held that the arbitrator properly sustained the grievance and properly ordered the grievant reevaluated on finding that the grievant's appraisal was not reviewed for consistency with other appraisals, as required by the performance appraisal regulation, and that in the rating process, the grievant was unfairly discriminated against by having been evaluated under different standards from those applied to other employees. The Authority, however, concluded that the process prescribed by the arbitrator for reevaluation of the grievant's performance was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). By requiring that the grievant's performance must be reevaluated solely by comparison with a sample of five appraisals selected under a precise method prescribed by the arbitrator, the award interfered with management's right to determine the method by which it will evaluate an employee's work performance. Likewise by specifying the circumstances under which the grievant's performance must be evaluated as "exceeds," the arbitrator improperly substituted his judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's performance evaluation and rating should be. The award was modified to provide that the grievant be reevaluated under established elements and standards and in accordance with the general performance appraisal system.

In resolving disputes pertaining to performance appraisal matters, an arbitrator may resolve an employee's grievance claiming to have been adversely affected in his/her performance appraisal by management's application of the established performance standards. An arbitrator may sustain the grievance on finding that management applied the standards in violation of law, regulation or an appropriate provision of the parties' agreement. In sustaining the grievance, the arbitrator as a remedy may direct that the grievant's work product be properly evaluated. An arbitrator may not substitute his own judgment for that of management in the exercise of the rights under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) to direct employees and assign work.

ORDER DENYING APPLICATION FOR REVIEW

On July 21, 1986, the United States Department of Agriculture Forest Service, Intermountain Region, Challis National Forest (Activity) filed a timely application for review pursuant to section 2422.17(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, seeking to set aside in part, the Regional Director's Decision and Order in the above-named cases. In its application for review, the Activity contends that compelling reasons exist within the meaning of section 2422.17(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations for granting the application.

The Regional Director, citing Department of Interior, Bureau of Land Management, District Office, Lakeview Oregon, 2 A/SLMR 515 (1972) and United States Forest Service, Salmon National Forest, Salmon, Idaho, 5 A/SLMR 586 (1975), review denied by the Federal Labor Relations Council, 4 FLRC 89, 75A-107 (1976), found that "seasonal supervisors" should be excluded from the certified unit during the period in which they are supervising seasonal employees, but should be considered to be within the unit for that part of the year when they have no subordinates reporting or assigned to them.

In its application for review, the Activity contends that review should be granted based on the Regional Director's reliance on Executive Order law and in the absence of Authority precedent since the case raises a substantial question of law or policy. Contrary to the Activity's position, the Authority finds no reason to change the long-standing policy with regard to "seasonal supervisors" established under the cited Executive Order cases.

Upon consideration of the Activity's application for review, including all arguments in support thereof, the Authority concludes that no compelling reason exists for granting the application. Rather the application in essence expresses mere disagreement with the Regional Director's findings which are based on precedent and have not been shown to be clearly erroneous or to have prejudicially affected the rights of any party.

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2422.17(f)(3) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the application for review of the Regional Director's Decision and Order be, and it hereby is, denied. As the Activity's application for review only sought review of the Regional Director's findings with respect to three "seasonal supervisors," all other findings of the Regional Director are not at issue herein and are final.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR EMERGENCY STAY OF FURTHER ARBITRAL PROCEEDINGS

On September 8, 1986, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) requested an emergency stay of arbitral hearings ordered by Arbitrator Justin C. Smith until the Authority ruled on exceptions to awards previously rendered by Arbitrator Smith presently before the Authority in Case Nos. 0-AR-1207 and 0-AR-1210.

There is no basis in the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq.) for the issuance of a stay such as that requested by HHS. Accordingly, apart from other considerations and confirming oral advice, the Agency's motion is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision and the Respondent filed a brief in opposition to such exceptions.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendation that the complaint be dismissed.

In agreement with the Judge we find no showing that the contractual provision permitting union participation on the panel interferes with any employee rights under the Statute. Nor was the Respondent in violation of the Statute when in the selection of its own representative, it established a policy of only nominating union members for selection and service on such panels. Accordingly, we find that the Respondent did not violate sections 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute by confining its nominees to rating panels to unit employees who were union members. We note that the parties may clarify the matter in future negotiations.

While the Judge did not specifically resolve the General Counsel's argument regarding an independent violation of section 7116(b)(1), the Judge, as noted by the General Counsel, nonetheless made the necessary factual findings regarding this issue. Based on such findings, the Authority concludes that the Respondent did not violate the Statute when it informed a unit employee that it would only nominate union members to be panel members. In the Authority's view, the pronouncement of this lawful policy did not interfere with, restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of statutory rights. Accordingly, we find that the Steward's statement was not violative of section 7116(b)(1).

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 3-CO-50030 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. Section 7101 et seq. and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

Pursuant to an amended charge first filed on May 15, 1985, by The Library of Congress (hereinafter called the Library), a Complaint and Notice of Hearing was issued on July 31, 1985, by the Regional Director for Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Washington, D.C. The Complaint alleges that the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Local 2910, AFL-CIO (hereinafter called the Respondent or Guild), violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (hereinafter called the Statute), by virtue of its action in denying non-union unit employees the opportunity to serve on "Qualifications Rating Panels."

A hearing was held in the captioned matter on September 26, 1985, in Washington, D.C. All parties were afforded the full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. The General Counsel and the Respondent submitted post-hearing briefs on October 28, and October 25, 1985, respectively, which have been duly considered.[1]

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact,[2] conclusions, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

The Guild has, for many years, been recognized as the exclusive representative of approximately 1300 professional employees at the Library. The Guild's current collective-bargaining was negotiated in March 1983 and expires in March 1987. The Guild's 1983-1987 negotiated agreement replaced the Guild's initial collective-bargaining agreement with the Library which had been negotiated in 1978.

Article XI of the Guild's current negotiated agreement entitled "Merit Employment and Promotions" addresses the procedures which the Library will follow in making employment and promotion decisions affecting positions within the Guild's bargaining unit. The purpose of Article XI is to ensure that merit principles are applied in an equitable manner to all applicants and to ensure that the Library selects the best qualified candidates for unit position vacancies.

Section 9(A) of Article XI provides that whenever there are six (6) or more eligible applicants for an announced unit position vacancy, the Library will convene a qualifications rating panel. The function of a qualifications rating panel is to rate the applicants for a unit position in accordance with prescribed ranking factors, i.e., the qualifications rating panel develops a best qualified list and refers the names of the five best qualified applicants to the Library's selecting official. The final selection is made by the Library's selecting official.

Pursuant to Section 9(B) of Article XI, the Library's rating panels consist of three (3) members. Two of the members are from the Library's managerial and supervisory staff. The third member is a bargaining unit employee. In order to become eligible to serve on a rating panel, a bargaining unit employee must first receive training on rating panel procedures from the Library's Recruitment and Placement (R & P) Office. In this latter respect, Section 9(B) of Article XI states that: "Panel members from the unit will be nominated by the Guild for training on official time and selected from the Guild lists of nominees." This particular language was carried over from the Guild's 1978 negotiated agreement with the Library. The only difference between the two agreements is that the current agreement contains a provision whereby the Library agrees to rotate service on the rating panels among the eligible unit employee nominees who have received the qualifying training after being specifically nominated by the Guild for such training.

[1] In the absence of any objection, General Counsel's Motion to Correct Transcript, should be, and hereby is, granted.

[2] All parties agree that the facts for the most part are not in dispute.

From 1979 to the present, the Guild has been submitting the names of unit employees to the Library's R & P Office for the required rating panel training. Since the Guild nominates unit employees for rating panel training on an on-going basis and since once unit employees have been trained they are eligible for rating panel service as long as they remain employed by the Library, the Library's R & P Office has developed a cumulative listing of unit employees qualified for rating panel service. As of May 1985, there were approximately 271 Guild unit employees who were eligible for rating panel service.

The Library's R & P Office provides the names of Guild unit employees eligible for rating panel service to the various department heads in the Library.[3] Whenever there is a vacancy for a Guild unit position and there are the requisite number of qualified applicants, six or more, Library management at the department level where the position is located consults the lists of eligible panel members and decides which three (3) members will serve on the rating panel.

On or about April 15, 1985 bargaining unit employee Linda Miller telephoned Guild Chief Steward Josie Hawkins and requested to be nominated for training and service on the Library's rating panels. Ms. Miller was quite familiar with the duties and requirements of several unit position vacancies in her work area and she believed she would be a good candidate to serve as the unit employee member on any of the rating panels. Ms. Miller expressed this information to Ms. Hawkins and asked if the Guild would nominate her for training and service on the rating panels. Ms. Hawkins asked Ms. Miller if she was a Guild member. Ms. Miller replied she was not. Ms. Hawkins then informed Ms. Miller that it was the Guild's policy to only nominate dues-paying members for training and service on the Library's rating panels.

[3] The Library's R & P Office also provides the Library's department heads with the names of all managerial and supervisory staff who are qualified for qualifications rating panel service.

Following this conversation with Ms. Hawkins, Ms. Miller spoke with Mr. Donald Panzera, a former Guild official and chief negotiator of the Guild's current negotiated agreement. Ms. Miller recounted her conversation with Ms. Hawkins to Mr. Panzera. Unaware that the Guild had adopted such a members-only policy, Mr. Panzera contacted Ms. Hawkins in an attempt to help Ms. Miller get on the Guild's list of nominees. Ms. Hawkins confirmed to Mr. Panzera that the Guild had adopted a members-only policy but agreed to look into the Miller matter and call Mr. Panzera back. On May 3, 1985, Ms. Hawkins telephoned Mr. Panzera and suggested that Mr. Panzera contact the Guild's President Mary Ann Joyce, which Mr. Panzera proceeded to do that day. Ms. Joyce informed Mr. Panzera that the Guild was in the process of deleting the names of all non-members from the Guild's list of nominees and that in the future the Guild would only nominate Guild members for service on the Library's rating panels. Ms. Joyce further stated that the Guild would only consider nominating a non-member unit employee if there were no other members available in a particular department or section.

On May 6, 1985, Respondent's President Joyce forwarded to the Library's R & P Office a listing containing the names of 118 unit employees, effective from that day forward, which was to be used as the Guild's nominees for rating panel service. Respondent's May 6, 1985, list of nominees consisted solely of unit employees who were dues-paying members of Respondent. As had been indicated to Mr. Panzera, Respondent's May 6, 1985 list of nominees removed from consideration for rating panel service the names of approximately 153 unit employees who were presently qualified for rating panel service solely on the basis that these employees were not dues-paying members of Respondent. In this regard, Respondent's President Joyce testified that she was personally aware of who was a dues-paying member of Respondent; that she was aware that as of April 1985, there were approximately 281 Guild unit employees who were eligible for rating panel service, and that she prepared Respondent's May 6, 1985 list of 118 nominees with the specific purpose of removing the non-union member unit employees from consideration by the Library for rating panel service. Respondent's President Joyce defended her purging of all the non-union member unit employees qualified for rating panel service as a means of remedying her perception that the Library had discriminated against Guild members in the past in its selection of qualified unit employees for service on the qualifications rating panels. Respondent has not, however, filed any grievances over the Library's selection of unit employees to serve on the qualifications rating panels.

The Library has continued to utilize the complete listing of the approximately 281 unit employees who are eligible to serve on rating panels.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel takes the position that the Guild's May 6, 1985, policy of only nominating dues paying members of the Guild's bargaining unit for service on the Library's rating panel constitutes an unlawful discriminatory representational practice against the non-union members of the Guild's bargaining unit in violation of Sections 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

According to the General Counsel, Article XI of the contract dealing with nominations by the Guild to the qualification rating panels constitutes a negotiated contractual benefit for all unit employees irrespective of union membership. In such circumstances, the Guild's denial of such contractual benefit because of non-membership in the Guild constitutes "invidious discrimination" in "defiance of the mandates of Section 7114(a)(1)," which requires a union to represent all bargaining unit members equally and without regard to labor organization membership. In support of its position the General Counsel relies in the main on the Authority's decision in National Treasury Employees Union, 10 FLRA 519, aff'd, 721 F.2d 1402.

In support of his position that Section XI of the contract established a benefit for all unit employees, irrespective of union affiliation, the General Counsel points to the wording of various other provisions of the contract and notes that such provisions clearly state that the rights set forth run solely to the Guild as the unit representative, while in Section XI there is no clear statement that the nominated employee is to be a representative of the Guild.

The Guild on the other hand takes the position that the unit employees designated by the Guild for training and subsequent service on the qualification rating panels serve as the Guild representative on such panels in that they are there to ensure that "merit principles are applied in an equitable manner." In such circumstances, since they are to be representatives of the Union, the Union is free to select only unit members who are members of the Union to serve on the rating panels.

It is well settled that a union is obligated to represent all unit members equally and without regard to union affiliation. It is equally well settled that a union is entitled to select its own representatives. To the extent that a union limits its representatives to union members, it could hardly be argued that it was discriminating against non-union unit members in violation of Section 7114(a)(1) of the Statute.

Inasmuch as it appears that all parties to the instant proceeding recognize the above conclusions as the current state of the law, resolution of the instant controversy turns on whether Section XI of the collective bargaining agreement constitutes a contract benefit for unit employees or confers a right of representation on the rating panels to the Guild.

Contrary to the contention of the General Counsel, I can not agree that Section XI of the collective bargaining agreement establishes a contract benefit for all unit employees. In fact I can not see where service on a rating panel is beneficial to any employee, save several hours release from their normal daily duties.

In the absence of any bargaining history supporting a contrary conclusion, I find that Section XI of the collective bargaining agreement was designed to confer upon the Guild the right to have a representative on the rating panel to ensure that merit principles are applied in an equitable manner, etc. To the extent that other provisions of the collective bargaining contract may spell out the Guild's representational rights in other areas in clearer or less ambiguous terms, such fact does not require a contrary conclusion. If the Guild's nominee was not to serve as the Guild's representative on the rating panel, I question why the Guild was given the power to nominate panel members.

Having concluded that the nominees to rating panels serve as Guild representatives on such panels, I find that the Guild did not violate Sections 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by confining the nominees to unit employees who were Guild members. Accordingly, it is hereby recommended that the Authority adopt the following Order dismissing the Complaint in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed by the Union under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and presents issues concerning the negotiability of two Union proposals submitted in response to an announced Agency reorganization.

II. Union Proposal 1

> No Position Description will be changed except for pen and ink changes for branch changes, etc., for a minimum of 90 days.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends first that Union Proposal 1 is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation--specifically FPM Chapter 511, Subchapter 4-3--because it conflicts with the requirement of that regulation for position descriptions to accurately state the duties and responsibilities assigned to employees, as the Authority held in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1497 and Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colo., 9 FLRA 151 (1982) (Union Proposal 1). Second, the Agency asserts that the proposal interferes with management's rights to assign work, determine its organization, reduce in grade or pay, and promote. Finally, the Agency asserts that, in view of these restrictions on the exercise of management's rights, the proposal does not contribute to an effective and efficient government.

According to the Union, the intent of the proposal at issue here is to ensure that "unit employees will not be promoted or downgraded by deleting or adding duties" as a result of a reorganization. Union Petition at 2. The Union contends that Proposal 1 "merely establishes a procedure the Agency must follow in amending position descriptions, a matter which the Authority found was appropriate for collective bargaining" in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 6 FLRA 508 (1981) (Union Proposal III). Reply Brief at 2. Similar to the proposal in that case, the Union argues, its proposal here "merely prescribes a waiting period of 90 days before position descriptions may be changed, and imposes no restriction on the assignment of work to employees prior to the change in the position descriptions." Reply Brief at 2.

B. Analysis

The Union states that the purpose of Proposal 1 is to ensure that "unit employees will not be promoted or downgraded by deleting or adding duties" as a result of a reorganization. Union Petition at 2. This intent is consistent with the plain language of the proposal because a position description is the basis for classification of a position. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1497 and Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado, 9 FLRA 151, 153 (1982) (Proposal 1). By prohibiting the Agency from making substantive changes in position descriptions for a minimum of 90 days, the proposal would effectively preclude reclassifications of those positions for that period of time.

The Union also states that Proposal 1 does not restrict the Agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute and is intended only as a procedure for amending position descriptions. In Lowry, 9 FLRA 151, 153, we found a proposal nonnegotiable which limited the duties which could be included in a position description because it conflicted with Chapter 511, Subchapter 4-3 of the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM). That FPM provision requires position descriptions to accurately reflect the duties and responsibilities of positions. By limiting the duties which could be included in the position description, the proposal in Lowry conflicted with the FPM because it precluded the Agency from including certain duties in position descriptions even if those duties were assigned to employees. We concluded that the proposal implicitly necessitated "the certification of an inaccurate position description." 9 FLRA 151, 154.

Proposal 1 in this case has the same effect as the one in Lowry. Consistent with the Union's intent, the proposal would not preclude the Agency from assigning duties which if included in the position descriptions would result in reclassification of the position. The proposal would, however, prohibit the Agency from including those duties in position descriptions for a minimum of 90 days even if the duties are actually assigned to employees during that time period. Like the proposal in Lowry, the proposal would result in inaccurate position descriptions, in violation of the FPM and is nonnegotiable.

The fact that the conflict with the FPM would occur for a specified time period does not change this conclusion. A proposal is nonnegotiable if it conflicts at all with a Government-wide rule or regulation under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute. As noted in Lowry, 9 FLRA 151, 154-55, the provisions of Chapter 511 of the FPM constitute a rule or regulation within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1). Also, our decision in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 6 FLRA 508 (1981) (Proposal III), is not dispositive in this case because potential conflict between the proposal in that case and the FPM was not raised by the Agency or addressed by the Authority.

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 1 conflicts with FPM, Chapter 511, Subchapter 4-3, and, therefore, is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

III. Union Proposal 2

> All new positions, except lateral transfers, established by the reorganization, will be advertised within 30 days as promotional opportunities.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency asserts that, in view of the Union's stated intent that this proposal applies to all newly-established positions, including nonbargaining unit positions, it is negotiable only at the Agency's election and the Agency has elected not to bargain. The Agency also contends that, if the Union's intent is to prevent management from filling a position which has not been advertised as a promotional opportunity within 30 days, or if it would require the Agency to fill all newly created positions by promotions or lateral transfers only, the proposal is inconsistent with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute to select from any appropriate source or not to fill positions.

The Union contends that this proposal does not restrict the Agency's right to select or concern how new positions created by the reorganization are to be filled, and therefore does not interfere with management's right to select under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute. Rather, the Union asserts that the proposal would merely establish a procedural 30-day posting requirement and therefore is analogous to a proposal found negotiable by the Authority in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, International Council of United States Marshals Service Locals and Department of Justice, United States Marshals Service, 2 FLRA 765 (1980).

B. Analysis

The Authority has previously held that a proposal which would require the posting of vacancy announcements before filling positions within the bargaining unit constituted a negotiable procedure. See National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 7 FLRA 275, 285 (1981) (Union Proposal 4). Accordingly, to the extent that Union Proposal 2 in this case would require the posting of notice concerning vacancies in bargaining unit positions only, and would not require management to fill such positions or select from any particular source, the proposal constitutes a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute.

The Agency asserts without contradiction that the Union's proposal would require management to post all newly-established positions, including those outside the bargaining unit. To the extent that the proposals would apply to positions outside the bargaining unit, it is negotiable only at the Agency's election. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2 and Department of the Army, Military District of Washington, 4 FLRA 450 (1980). Contrary to the Union's assertion, the Marshals Service case cited above is not controlling. In that case, the Authority held that a proposal requiring the announcement of "all vacancies for which unit employees are eligible to apply regardless of how the vacancies are to be filled" constituted a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. However, there was no indication either in the language of the proposal or in the record that the proposal was intended to apply to positions outside the bargaining unit, and the Agency in that case did not so contend. As the Authority has previously stated in a related context, where neither the express language of a proposal nor the Union's stated intent requires a proposal to be applicable to nonunit employees, the proposal will be presumed to apply only to unit employees. See American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Local 2910 and 2477 and Library of Congress, 15 FLRA 717, 718-719 (1984). As noted above, both the language of Union Proposal 2 and the record in this case indicate that the proposal applies to all newly created positions, not just those within the bargaining unit.

However, consistent with the Union's stated intent, we conclude that nothing in Union Proposal 2 would require the Agency to fill any of those newly created positions or restrict management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute to select from any appropriate source.

C. Conclusion

Since Union Proposal 2 applies to positions outside the bargaining unit, it is negotiable only at the election of the Agency and the latter has elected not to bargain concerning the matter. The proposal does not conflict with management's right to select under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Charles B. Craver filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The parties submitted to arbitration the issue of whether the failure to permit the grievants to exchange work locations violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Arbitrator determined that the Activity had violated the agreement and sustained the grievance. Noting that each grievant had additional miles added to the distance between home and work as a result of the Activity's improper actions, the Arbitrator as a remedy directed that the grievants be paid for their additional commuting expenses.

III. EXCEPTIONS

In its exceptions the Agency contends that the remedy directing that the Activity pay the additional commuting expenses incurred by the grievants is deficient. Specifically, the Agency maintains that the award of such commuting expenses is contrary to law because it is not authorized as reimbursable travel expenses. The Agency further maintains that the award of such expenses is not authorized under the Back Pay Act as an award of backpay. The Agency states that the commuting expenses are not "pay, allowances, or differentials" awardable as backpay under the Act.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

We agree with the Agency. There is no provision in any relevant statute or regulation that permits the payment or reimbursement of the additional personal commuting expenses of the grievants as directed by the Arbitrator.

Both the Authority and the Comptroller General have indicated that unless essential to the transacting of official business, no costs or expenses incurred by Federal employees for transportation between their residences and official duty stations are payable or reimbursable under law and regulation pertaining to travel expenses. Internal Revenue Service, Houston District and National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 222, 18 FLRA No. 64 (1985); 60 Comp. Gen. 420 (1981); see Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq.; Federal Travel Regulations, 41 CFR part 101-7. Instead, Federal employees must bear all such transportation costs as personal commuting expenses. See IRS, Houston District, slip op. at 2. Accordingly, there is no authorization under law and regulation for the payment directed by the Arbitrator of the additional personal commuting expenses incurred by the grievants.

Similarly, neither the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, nor its implementing regulations, 5 CFR part 550, subpart H, authorize the payment or reimbursement of personal commuting expenses as part of an award of backpay. The Back Pay Act provides the appropriate authority to remedy with an award of backpay an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action that has denied an aggrieved employee "pay, allowances, or differentials" that the employee would have earned or received if the personnel action had not occurred. "Pay, allowances, and differentials" are defined in 5 CFR § 550.803 as "monetary and employment benefits to which an employee is entitled by statute or regulation by virtue of the performance of a Federal function." In Community Services Administration and National Council of CSA Locals, AFGE, AFL-CIO, 7 FLRA 206 (1981), the Authority concluded that "pay, allowances, or differentials" encompassed by the Act constitute normal, legitimate employee benefits in the nature of employment compensation or emoluments. 7 FLRA at 209. Accordingly, in this case, we find that additional personal commuting expenses incurred as the result of the Activity's unwarranted action are not proper components of an award of backpay under the Back Pay Act and its implementing regulations. Furthermore, in terms of the Act, the Arbitrator did not find, and it is not otherwise apparent, that the expenses directed by the Arbitrator to be reimbursed are expenses which the grievants "normally would have . . . received during the period if the personnel action had not occurred." 5 U.S.C. § 5596(b)(1)(A)(i).

V. DECISION

For these reasons we find that the award of additional personal commuting expenses incurred by the grievants as a result of the Activity's actions is not authorized by governing law and regulation and therefore is deficient and must be modified. Accordingly, the award is modified by striking the second sentence of the Arbitrator's award directing the Activity to make whole the two grievants for their additional commuting expenses.*/

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator J. Thomas King filed by the Department of the Navy (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration claiming that for an extended period of time, the grievant had been denied overtime work assignments in violation of the overtime provisions of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The grievant was a heavy equipment inspector assigned to shop 714 at the Activity. The overtime to which he claimed entitlement had been assigned to four heavy mobile equipment inspectors in shop 723. At arbitration the Activity explained that the overtime work of shop 723 was not assigned to the grievant because he did not possess the necessary familiarity with the inspection work of shop 723, which was different than shop 714, and did not possess the special skills required to assure the continuity and efficiency of that inspection work. Thus, the Arbitrator stated the dispositive issue to be whether the grievant had the requisite familiarity and special skills for the performance of the inspection work of shop 723. The Arbitrator found, contrary to the determination of the Activity, that the grievant had the special skills necessary for the performance of the work of shop 723 and that granted an opportunity to perform the work on overtime, the grievant had the capability to become sufficiently familiar with that inspection work. On this basis, the Arbitrator found that under the collective bargaining agreement, the grievant should have been offered overtime work assignments in shop 723, and he sustained the grievance. As a remedy the Arbitrator directed the Activity to assign the grievant overtime work in shop 723 in sufficient amounts to permit him to recoup that which he had been improperly denied since 1983.

III. EXCEPTIONS

In its exceptions the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute because it interferes with management's right to assign work. In particular, the Agency argues that the Arbitrator has substituted his judgment for that of management in determining which employees were qualified to perform the work of shop 723 on overtime.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority agrees with the Agency. The Authority has repeatedly held that an arbitration award may not interpret or enforce a collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly deny an agency the authority to exercise the rights enumerated in section 7106(a) of the Statute. See, for example, Southwestern Power Administration and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 1002, 22 FLRA No. 48 (1986). Section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, in particular, reserves to management officials the authority to assign work. Encompassed within that right is the discretion to establish the particular qualifications needed to perform the work assignment and to exercise judgment in determining whether a particular employee meets those qualifications. National Marine Fisheries Service, Northeast Region, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, United States Department of Commerce, Gloucester, Massachusetts and International Organization of Masters, Mates and Pilots, AFL-CIO, Boston, Massachusetts, 22 FLRA No. 43 (1986); U.S. Customs Service, Laredo, Texas and Chapter 145, National Treasury Employees Union, 17 FLRA 68 (1985).

In this case the Activity had not assigned overtime work of shop 723 to the grievant because the Activity determined he was not qualified: he did not possess the necessary familiarity with the inspection work of shop 723 and the special skills required to assure the continuity and efficiency of that inspection work. Thus, the Arbitrator has negated the exercise by management of the rights to establish qualifications and to determine whether particular employees meet those qualifications when the Arbitrator as his award found that under the agreement the grievant was qualified for and entitled to have been offered overtime work assignments in shop 723 and directed that he be assigned such work. See U.S. Customs Service, Laredo, Texas, 17 FLRA at 69. Thus, the Arbitrator has not merely enforced a procedure of the parties' collective bargaining agreement by which employees previously judged by management to be equally qualified will be selected to perform certain work. See National Marine Fisheries Service, Northeast Region. Instead, the Arbitrator has enforced the collective bargaining agreement to improperly interfere with management's right to assign work in accordance with section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons, the Arbitrator's award is set aside.*/

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator William Stix filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration on the substantive issue of whether the grievant was properly accorded an overall annual performance appraisal rating of "fully successful" rather than "exceeds" for the appraisal period ending March 31, 1985. The Arbitrator determined that the reviewing official failed to meet his responsibility under the performance appraisal regulation to review the grievant's rating for consistency with the ratings given other employees. In particular, the Arbitrator determined that in the rating process of formulating performance ratings for the appraisal period in dispute, the grievant was unfairly discriminated against because the evidence showed that the grievant had been evaluated under standards different from those applied to other employees. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator directed that the grievant's performance be reevaluated. In addition, he directed that the reevaluation be in accordance with an elaborate process that he specified in his award. In sum, the process provides for the selection, by a method specified by the Arbitrator, of a sample of five performance appraisals in which the appraised employee was rated "exceeds" for the appraisal period in dispute and provides for the comparison by the grievant's new reviewing official of the grievant's appraisal with the sample appraisals. In addition, it provides that the grievant's rating must be reevaluated solely by a comparison with the samples and requires under certain circumstances that the grievant's rating must be changed to "exceeds."

III. EXCEPTIONS

In its exceptions the Agency contends that the award is deficient by sustaining the grievance and by directing that the grievant be reevaluated in accordance with the procedure specified by the Arbitrator. Specifically, the Agency primarily argues that the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute because the Arbitrator has substituted his judgment for that of management in the area of performance appraisal and has fashioned a remedy without basis in law, regulation, or the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority in a number of recent decisions has discussed in detail the role of an arbitrator in resolving disputes pertaining to performance appraisal matters. Mare Island Naval Shipyard and International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 11, AFL-CIO-CLC, 23 FLRA No. 32 (1986); Veterans Administration Hospital, Bath, New York and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 491, 22 FLRA No. 103 (1986) (and cases cited in the decision). The Authority has found that an arbitrator may resolve an employee's grievance claiming to have been adversely affected in his or her performance appraisal by management's application of the established performance standards. An arbitrator may sustain the grievance on finding that management had not applied the standards which it established to the grievant or had applied the standards in violation of law, regulation, or an appropriate provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In sustaining the grievance, the arbitrator may direct that the grievant's work product be properly evaluated. The Authority, however, has cautioned that an arbitrator may not substitute his or her own judgment for that of management in the exercise of the rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) to direct employees and assign work as such rights pertain to matters of performance appraisal. In particular, the Authority has repeatedly held that the arbitrator may not substitute his or her own judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's evaluation and rating should be. The Authority has also held that section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) encompass the right to determine the methods to be used in evaluating employee work performance. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, AFL-CIO and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 23 FLRA No. 21 (1986) (Proposals 2-6).

Applying these decisions to this case, we conclude contrary to the argument of the Agency that the Arbitrator properly sustained the grievance and properly ordered the grievant reevaluated on finding that the grievant's appraisal was not reviewed for consistency with other appraisals, as required by the performance appraisal regulation, and that in the rating process, the grievant was unfairly discriminated against by having been evaluated under different standards from those applied to other employees. However, in agreement with the Agency, we conclude that the process prescribed by the Arbitrator for reevaluation of the grievant's performance is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. By requiring that the grievant's performance must be reevaluated solely by comparison with a sample of five appraisals selected under a precise method prescribed by the Arbitrator, the award interferes with management's right to determine the method by which it will evaluate an employee's work performance. Likewise, by specifying the circumstances under which the grievant's performance must be reevaluated as "exceeds," the Arbitrator improperly substituted his judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's performance evaluation and rating should be. Accordingly, this portion of the award is deficient and must be modified.

V. DECISION

For these reasons, the Arbitrator's award is modified by striking paragraphs 3 and 4 and substituting the following language as paragraph 3:*/

3. To remedy the discrimination, management shall reevaluate the grievant's performance for the appraisal period in dispute under the established elements and standards and in accordance with the general performance appraisal system as contained in Program Statement 3430.7.

Case No. 5-CA-50046

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

In this unfair labor practice case, the Administrative Law Judge dismissed the General Counsel's complaint alleging that the Respondent committed an unfair labor practice under section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). The General Counsel asserted that the Respondent violated section 7115(a) of the Statute in recouping overpayments of union dues previously remitted by the Respondent to the Charging Party (the Union) by deducting such overpayments from subsequent remittances. The Judge found that the Respondent properly recouped the overpayment of dues, on behalf of former unit employees who had been promoted to supervisory positions, by using that setoff method.

The case is now before the Authority on the General Counsel's exceptions to the Judge's Decision. Both the General Counsel and the Respondent have filed briefs in support of their opposing positions.

II. Background

In 1978 and again in 1982, the Respondent in this case entered into master labor agreements with the Union. Both agreements provided that "[a]dministrative errors in remittance checks [to the Union] and/or improper deductions will be corrected by the [Respondent] and adjusted in the next remittance check to be issued to the Union local." An official of the Respondent charged with effecting these adjustments at the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Ohio testified that, in practice, payroll transactions and adjustments are processed by computer upon receipt of a Standard Form 50 for each change in employment status, and that such adjustments were made during a subsequent pay period. He testified further that underpayments and overpayments of dues were corrected as a matter of course by adding to or subtracting from the amount remitted to the Union during any given pay period, and that he undertook this method of adjustment, in reliance on the master labor agreements' provision quoted above, since at least as early as August of 1981.

For pay periods ending on June 23, 1984, September 15, 1984, September 22, 1984, and September 29, 1984, the Respondent deducted from the amount allotted and remitted to the Union a total of $220.50, representing dues allotments withheld erroneously in the past from the salaries of unit employees who had once authorized such allotments but later became ineligible to do so when they were promoted to supervisory positions. The Respondent then reimbursed the supervisors for the amount of dues erroneously withheld from their salaries. This proceeding before the Authority ensued.

III. Decision of the Administrative Law Judge

In finding the Respondent's dues recoupment procedure to be lawful, the Judge discounted the General Counsel's contention that it violated section 7115(a) of the Statute under the Authority's supplemental decisions in Department of the Air Force, Griffiss Air Force Base, Rome, New York (Griffiss), 15 FLRA 1032 (1984), and Department of the Air Force, 3480th Air Base Group, Goodfellow Air Force Base, Texas (Goodfellow), 14 FLRA 795 (1984). The Judge noted that those decisions were rendered on reversal and remand from the U.S. Courts of Appeals for the Second and Fifth Circuits,[1] and that the Authority's language in the supplemental decisions indicated that it simply "accepted" the Court's decision in each case as "the law of the case." 14 FLRA at 796; 15 FLRA at 1033. The Judge found that the Authority had not altered its own original interpretation of the Statute in issuing the two decisions on remand because they contained no implication that the Authority was doing so. He therefore concluded that the Respondent's method of recouping erroneously allotted union dues did not violate the Statute under existing Authority precedent.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel contends in its brief that the Judge should have found that the Authority's supplemental decisions on remand in Griffiss and Goodfellow did indeed alter the Authority's position on the lawfulness of the agencies' method of dues recoupment under section 7115(a) of the Statute. The General Counsel argues that the Authority made it clear in the Griffiss and Goodfellow supplemental decisions that an agency may not recoup erroneously withheld union dues of former unit members by deducting overpayments from union dues allotments for current unit members, and then reimbursing the former unit members whose dues had been incorrectly withheld.

The General Counsel maintains further that, as the Courts held in Griffiss and Goodfellow, section 7115(a) of the Statute imposes an affirmative duty on an agency to honor the assignments of current unit members by remitting regular and periodic dues deducted from their accrued salaries to their exclusive representative, so that an agency's application of a portion of the pay of current unit members to extinguish a debt to former unit members abrogates the agency's statutory duty to its current member employees. This statutory duty, the General Counsel urges further, cannot be waived by an exclusive representative in a collective bargaining agreement and, even if it could, parole evidence in this case shows that the provision of the master labor agreement regarding the correction of "administrative errors" was intended to apply to "arithmetical errors" only.

The Respondent contests these arguments in its reply brief. The Respondent contends that it cannot be found to have committed an unfair labor practice by acting, as it did, in accord with a reasonable interpretation of the master labor agreement: "Improper deductions" fall within the agreement's provision with respect to "administrative errors." It also argues that an exclusive representative is indeed empowered to negotiate restrictions on a statutory right of its members. The Respondent argues in addition that the Authority has correctly not modified its position on the propriety of the Respondent's method of recoupment, despite its compliance with the remand orders in Griffiss and Goodfellow.

V. Analysis

In challenging the Judge's Decision in this case, the General Counsel acknowledges that the Authority's supplemental decisions in Griffiss and Goodfellow "may be interpreted as being limited to those cases" in the Second and Fifth Circuits. It argues that the Authority did not "intend" such a result, however, because it would lead to the anomalous situation of different decisions on the same issue in different federal circuits. We find no merit to this argument.

Under section 7123(a) of the Statute, the Authority's decisions and orders are reviewable by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, or another of the U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeals depending on the parties' geographic location. Since one circuit court of appeals is not bound by another's decisions, judicial review of the Authority's decisions may result in inconsistent rules of law on the same or similar issues among the various circuits. Such inconsistency among the circuit courts may be resolved only by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The Judge correctly found that our supplemental decisions in Griffiss and Goodfellow, in which we accepted the decisions of the circuit courts in those cases as the "law of the case," were not intended to convey that the Authority had changed its opinion on the matter. Under the "law of the case" doctrine, an issue of law as decided in a reviewing court becomes binding precedent to be followed in successive stages of litigation involving the same case. The Authority was therefore bound to accept the circuit courts' decisions in Griffiss and Goodfellow. We have consistently held that an agency's recoupment of dues erroneously remitted to the exclusive representative of a bargaining unit on behalf of a former unit member, by deducting the previous overpayment from the subsequent remittance of dues for current members, is not inconsistent with the requirements of section 7115(a) and does not violate section 7116(a)(1) or (8) of the Statute.2/ For the following reasons we continue to follow this precedent and respectfully disagree with the Second and Fifth Circuits.

Section 7115(a) of the Statute enables a bargaining unit member to have his employing agency deduct periodic union membership dues from his regular pay and forward it to the exclusive representative of the bargaining unit directly. Section 7115(b) also provides that such an allotment "shall terminate when . . . the agreement between the agency and the exclusive representative involved ceases to be applicable to the employee . . . ." Section 7112(b) provides that a bargaining unit may not be deemed "appropriate" if it includes a supervisor, and, by way of defining "collective bargaining" and "employee," section 7103 of the Statute provides that a supervisor may not be a member of a bargaining unit.

Consistent with these provisions, at the time a bargaining unit member is promoted to a supervisory position, he may no longer be included in the unit and, therefore, his statutory right to dues allotment ceases immediately by operation of law. Consequently, an agency's recoupment of dues erroneously paid to an exclusive representative on behalf of an employee after his appointment to a supervisory position constitutes the correction of an administrative error in compliance with the terms of the Statute. The setoff of such overpayments against current allotments and remittances to the union constitutes a lawful and efficient means of recoupment. The Authority adheres to the position that such a method of recoupment does not violate either section 7115(a) or section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

In the Goodfellow case, the Fifth Circuit held as follows:

> Section 7115(a) . . . imposes an affirmative duty on a federal agency to honor the current assignments of unit employees by remitting regular and periodic dues deducted from their

2/ In addition to the Griffiss and Goodfellow cases noted above, see Dugway Proving Grounds, Dugway, Utah, 9 FLRA 409 (1982); National Archives and Records Service and National Archives Trust Board, General Services Administration, Washington, D.C., 9 FLRA 413 (1982); and Internal Revenue Service, Fresno Service Center, Fresno, California, 7 FLRA 371 (1981), reversed as to other matters sub nom. > accrued salaries to their exclusive representative. Until the funds thus deducted are delivered to the union, they remain the property of the particular members from whose earned wages they are taken. By applying a portion of the pay of unit employees to extinguish the debt owed another, [the agency] abrogated its statutory duty to the former.

Goodfellow, supra, 715 F.2d at 228. The Authority respectfully disagrees.

Once an agency deducts membership dues from the salary of a unit employee for remittance to the exclusive representative, that money becomes part of a fund designated for forwarding to the union in due course. The employee does not have immediate access to his portion of the fund before it is forwarded to the union. He is also precluded by the terms of section 7115(a) from revoking a dues allotment other than at intervals of one year, unless (1) the bargaining agreement between the agency and the exclusive representative ceases to apply to the employee, as discussed above; or (2) when the employee is suspended or expelled from membership in the exclusive representative, which is inapplicable here. See U.S. Army, U.S. Army Materiel Development and Readiness Command, Warren, Michigan, 7 FLRA 194, 199 (1981). There is no adverse impact on an employee's statutory right to a dues allotment which might result from an agency's use of the setoff method of recouping dues overpayments in this case, and the Fifth Circuit mentioned none in Goodfellow, other than the unspecific "impinge[ment] upon employee protections secured by § 7115(a) . . . ."[3/]

In the Griffiss case, the Second Circuit considered the legislative history of section 7115(a) of the Statute, and noted Congress' rejection of proposals for mandatory payment of union dues on behalf of all unit employees as well as proposals leaving the issue of dues check-off to negotiation. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2612 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 739 F.2d 87 (2d Cir. 1984). The Court found that Congress' final enacted provision, specifying that no dues could be deducted from an employee's paycheck unless he authorized the deduction in writing, was intended "to allow the employee alone to control the manner of dues payment." Id. at 89. The Court found that, in view of this legislative intent, "an agency's obligation to honor dues check-off authorizations is mandatory and nondiscretionary." Id. The Court therefore concluded that current unit members who assigned portions of their wages for the payment of union dues had the right to expect their assigned wages to be used for that purpose. The Court concluded further that the agency's method of recouping its overpayment of dues on behalf of former unit members by setoff against dues allotments for present unit members violates the current unit members' right to allotment under section 7115(a), and thus constitutes an unfair labor practice under section 7116(a)(1) and (8). In the Authority's view Congress did not intend this interpretation of section 7115(a).

[3/] The Fifth Circuit even acknowledged in Goodfellow, 715 F.2d 229, that the Government has the right "to recover by offset or otherwise sums illegally or erroneously paid," quoting from Lodge 2424, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO v. United States, 564 F.2d 66, 71 (Ct. Cl. 1977).

When an agency allots and remits more membership dues to the exclusive representative of a bargaining unit than it should have -- in this case by remitting dues withheld from former unit employees who had become supervisors and were therefore no longer eligible for inclusion in the unit or entitled to authorize dues withholding -- the union receives more dues under section 7115(a)'s dues deduction provisions than it would have if the overpayment had not occurred. When the agency corrects the overpayment by setoff against presently allotted dues before remittance to the exclusive representative, the right of current unit members to have their dues remitted to the Union is not violated. Rather, the portion of the dues of current unit members which was not remitted to the union was, in effect, "pre-paid" by the agency through previous overpayments. An agency need not maintain the dues allotments of current member employees intact until they are remitted to the union under section 7115(a) of the Statute, as long as the agency remits sufficient payments to the union to avoid dues arrearage on the part of employees properly covered by section 7115(a).4/

The Judge did not pass on the General Counsel's two additional contentions: (1) that the provisions of the master labor agreement quoted above did not permit the Respondent to recoup overpayments of union dues; and (2) that the Respondent and the Union could not waive the statutory right of employees to have dues withheld if they

4/ The Second and Fifth Circuits would appear to place on management the statutory duty of setting apart or retaining intact the individual and collective dues allotted by employees until the dues are remitted to the Union. Aside so authorize their employer in writing. In view of our interpretation of section 7115(a) of the Statute, it is unnecessary to consider these two additional contentions.

VI. Conclusion

Having considered all of the facts and circumstances of this case, as well as the positions of the parties, the Authority concludes that the Respondent did not violate section 7115(a) of the Statute and therefore did not commit an unfair labor practice under section 7116(a)(1) or (8), as charged by the General Counsel. Accordingly, we shall dismiss the General Counsel's complaint against the Respondent.

from the fact that dues are not allotted or transferred in any individually identifiable form, we respectfully disagree that the Statute imposes such a duty. To require such an interpretation of the Statute would be comparable to the common law recovery action of replevin, in which a plaintiff seeks to have his wrongfully withheld property returned to him without alteration or substitution. See Kelley v. Dunne, 369 F.2d 627 (1st Cir. 1966); Honeywell Information Systems, Inc. v. Demographic Systems, Inc., 396 F. Supp. 273 (S.D.N.Y. 1975). Such an action does not apply to the recovery of money, however, unless the plaintiff can show that the money he seeks to recover constitutes unique currency and may be identified specifically so that recovery of the same money wrongfully withheld by another is both justifiable and possible. DECISION

This case arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.

Upon an unfair labor practice charge filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Council 214, AFL-CIO, against the Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio (herein referred to as Respondent), the General Counsel of the Authority, by the Regional Director for Region V, issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing alleging Respondent violated the Statute when it recouped erroneous union dues checkoff allotments previously transmitted to the Union by reducing subsequent dues remittances.

A hearing on the Complaint was conducted in Dayton, Ohio at which all parties were represented and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. Briefs were filed by Respondent and the General Counsel, and have been carefully considered.

Upon the entire record in this matter, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

On January 13, 1978 the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, was certified as the exclusive representative of a consolidated unit of all non-supervisory non-professional employees, with certain exclusions, paid from appropriated funds and serviced by the Air Force Logistics Command (AFLC) Civilian Personnel Offices at various AFLC facilities including Kelly Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas. At all times material herein the American Federation of Government Employees, Council 214, AFL-CIO (the Union) has been an agent of the American Federation of Government Employees with respect to the employees of Respondent, including the employees at Kelly Air Force Base, and Respondent and the Union have been parties to a Master Labor Agreement (MLA) covering the employees described above. The MLA contains a dues withholding provision (Article 8) that includes the following language under the caption "Administrative Errors" in Section 8.08:

> "Deductions will not be made for an employee who has been in a nonpay status for a pay period. Administrative errors in remittance checks and/or improper deductions will be corrected by the Employer and adjusted in the next remittance check to be issued to the Union local. If the Union local is not scheduled to receive a remittance check after discovery of the error, the Union agrees to promptly refund the amount of the erroneous remittance."

Pursuant to section 7115(a) and (b) of the Statute[1] and Article 8 of the MLA, supra, management officials at Kelly Air Force Base regularly

[1] Section 7115(a) and (b) of the Statute provides:

> "(a) If an agency has received from an employee in an appropriate unit a written assignment which authorizes the agency to deduct from the pay of the employee amounts for the payment of regular and periodic dues of the exclusive representative of the deduct union dues from the salaries of employees who are members of the bargaining unit who executed written assignments for such allotments and transfer said dues allotments to AFGE local 1617 in a single remittance check. For pay periods ending June 23, 1984, September 15, 1984, September 22, 1984 and September 29, 1984, management officials at Kelly Air Force Base, relying upon MLA Section 8.08 supra, deducted from the total amount due to the local for dues certain amounts representing dues allotments withheld erroneously in the past from the salaries of individuals who had for a period of time been ineligible for dues withholding by virtue of their promotion to supervisory positions. The total amount deducted from the amount due the local for the four above-described pay periods was $220.50. Management officials used these funds to reimburse the supervisors from whose salaries dues had been erroneously withheld and continue to use the above described method of recouping erroneously withheld dues remitted to the union.

The Master Labor Agreement was first negotiated in 1978 and renegotiated in 1982. The "Administrative Errors" section of the dues withholding provision, supra, was the same in both agreements. Val Buxton, Chief of Labor and Employees Relations Division and Respondent's chief negotiator during the negotiations which gave rise to the 1978 and 1982 agreements, testified that during the 1978 negotiations the language of Section 8.08 was adopted to reflect many existing local arrangements. He further testified that during the 1978 negotiations the parties discussed employees leaving the unit and Respondent erroneously continuing dues checkoff. However, Buxton did not provide any significant details regarding the specific nature of those discussions.[2/]

John Mullholland, AFGE's Director of Labor-Management Service Department, testified that in 1978 he was the chief negotiator for Council 214 during negotiations with Respondent for the MLA. According to Mullholland, during the 1978 negotiations there were no discussions about employees being promoted to supervisory positions and the application of Section 8.08 of the agreement to that situation. Rather, according to Mullholland the limited discussion of Section 8.08 concerned the recoupment of money which was occasioned by computer and arithmetical errors and not recouping money erroneously collected and paid to the Union.

Major Thayne H. Cuevas, Chief of the Accounting and Finance Branch at Kelly AFB testified to the dues deduction and remittance procedures at the facility. According to Cuevas, the total amount of dues deducted during a pay period is adjusted by those dues which might not have been previously deducted but should have been and dues erroneously deducted. That adjusted sum is then remitted to local 1617. Cuevas testified that such underpayments and overpayments would be corrected when documentation (a Standard Form 50) regarding a payroll change reached his office. Thus, an action requiring a payroll change might occur in one payroll period but would not be reflected in actual payments until a subsequent payroll period when the Standard Form 50 was received and acted upon in the Finance and Accounting Branch. A promotion of someone out of a position eligible for dues checkoff or a voluntary request to terminate dues checkoff could cause such an adjustment. The payroll transactions are computer processed and a recapitulation of adjustments to the remittance check is sent to local 1617. Cuevas testified he relied on Section 8.08 of the agreement to make these adjustments and this procedure has been followed since August 1981 to his personal knowledge and "as long as there's been a dues checkoff" according to some of his payroll employees.

Discussion and Conclusions

Respondent contends its recoupment actions herein were permissable based upon: (1) Existing Authority decisions, particularly Department of the Air Force, 3480th Air Base Group, Goodfellow Air Force Base, Texas, 9 FLRA 394 (1982) and Department of the Air Force, Griffiss Air Force Base, Rome, New York, 12 FLRA 198 (1983); (2) A contractual right provided in Section 8.08 the Master Labor Agreement; and (3) Rulings of the Comptroler General.

In support of its allegations the General Counsel contends: (1) Since the Authority's decisions in Goodfellow and Griffiss were set aside by

[2/] I found Buxton's testimony to be confusing and inconclusive both as to the intent and meaning of Section 8.08 of the agreement as it applies to the issues herein.

Circuit Courts of Appeals[3] and in each case the Authority in Supplemental Decisions accepted the Court's opinion as "the law of the case,"[4] such conduct warrants the conclusion that the Authority has reversed it positions on the issue; and (2) Section 8.08 of the Master Labor Agreement does not privilege Respondent to recoup union dues and, in any event, the parties could not waive the employees' Statutory right to have dues deductions used by Respondent only as authorized by the employees.

Respondent's recoupment herein is virtually identical to that previously considered by the Authority in Goodfellow and Griffiss and found to be permissible conduct under the Statute. The General Counsel recognizes that Administrative Law Judges are obligated to follow Authority precidents and denial of enforcement of an Order of the Authority by a Court of Appeals does not "in and of itself, constitute a change of Authority law." The General Counsel argues however that accepting the decisions of the Circuit Courts in Goodfellow and Griffiss as "the law of the case" in those cases warrants the conclusion that the Authority has reversed its position on the matter.

I do not agree. In my opinion the Authority's action of accepting a Courts' decision as "the law of the case," whether it be one Court of Appeals or more,[5] gives no indication that the Authority is reversing its approach to the matter. If the Authority desired to change its position on recoupment it had ample opportunity to expressly do so in Goodfellow and Griffiss when it considered the reversals from the Courts of Appeals. However, the Authority merely accepted the Courts' decisions as "the law of the case", expressing no view contrary to that articulated in its underlying decisions. Accordingly, since I am constrained to follow the Authority's holding until such time as the Authority specifically revises its position on the matter or it becomes apparent that the Authority will no longer adhere to this position, I conclude that based upon existing Authority precident Respondent's conduct herein did not violate the Statute and I recommend the Authority issue the following:

DIGEST NOTES

Grievances were submitted to arbitration on behalf of eight employees covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). The grievants sought overtime compensation for time spent as witnesses for the union attending an arbitration hearing. Two of the eight employees attended the hearing on official time for the period of the hearing when they otherwise would have been in a duty status. However, they remained at the hearing when the hearing extended beyond the end of their regularly scheduled duty hours. These two employee claimed overtime compensation for the time spent attending the hearing while they were not on official time. Six employees attended the hearing during time they were not scheduled to be in a duty status and they claimed overtime compensation for the entire time spent attending the hearing. The arbitrator determined that the activity had violated the intent of parties agreement and past practice by not rescheduling the worktime of the employees to fully coincide with the time of the hearing. She found that the intent of the agreement was that employees appearing as witnesses will not suffer any loss of pay, including overtime pay. The arbitrator sustained the grievance and ordered that employees be compensated at overtime rates or granted compensatory time off.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its exceptions to the arbitrator's award the agency asserted that time spent attending an arbitration hearing as a union witness is not hours of work officially ordered or approved that constitutes overtime work, under the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 5542(a), for which overtime pay or compensatory time off is authorized. The agency also argued that such time likewise is not hours of work under 29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq., and 5 CFR part 551, subpart D, for which overtime pay or compensatory time off is authorized for nonexempt employees. The Authority held that time spent attending an arbitration hearing as union witnesses was not the performance of hours of work officially ordered or approved that constitutes overtime work under 5 U.S.C. § 5542(a) so as to entitle the employees to overtime pay or compensatory time off. The Authority also held that time spent attending the arbitration hearing as union witnesses is not hours of work under 5 CFR § 551.401(a) which would entitle the employees to overtime pay or compensatory time off under FLSA, and further, that 5 CFR § 551.424(a) (providing that time spent by an employee adjusting his or her grievance is hours of work) does not apply to the grievant's attendance as a union witness at the arbitration hearing to which he was not a party and at which his attendance was not otherwise required. The Authority, however, further concluded that the six employees were entitled to compensation for the time spent at the arbitration hearing in as much as they had been denied official time under the terms of the parties' agreement. Where official time properly authorized by the provisions of a collective bargaining agreement is wrongfully denied and the covered activities are thereafter performed on nonduty time, § 7131(d) entitles the aggrieved employee to be paid for the amount of time that should have been official time. Where employees are not engaged in union representational activities, § 7131(d)(2) expressly provides for official time for bargaining unit employees "in connection with any other matter covered by the Statute which clearly encompasses testifying as a union witness at an arbitration hearing. The arbitrator found that under the parties agreement the six employees denied official time should have been granted official time for the usual number of hours of their shift. Consequently the award should have granted those six employees compensation for the usual number of hours of their shift at the appropriate straight-time rates. Compensation at straight-time rates was appropriate because the performance of those activities even on official time did not constitute overtime work. The Authority, therefore modified the arbitrator's award to strike the award to all eight employees of overtime or compensatory time off and to provide that the six employees attending the hearing entirely outside the regularly scheduled duty hours be compensated for the usual number of hours of their shift at appropriate straight-time rates.

The activity did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it refused to bargain over a proposal submitted by the union during negotiations over the impact and implementation of management's decision to downgrade certain positions. The proposal concerned what shall constitute declination of a reasonable offer of a comparable position, resulting in loss of retained grade and pay, where employees have been downgraded by reclassification. The Authority held that the proposal conflicted with OPM's Government-wide regulatory requirements for determining what constitutes a "reasonable offer." See 5 CFR § 536.206. The proposal would allow affected employees to reject an otherwise "reasonable offer" when the employee "believes" that he could not perform the duties of the offered position -- implicitly regardless of an agency determination of qualification -- or when he "believes" that accepting the offered position would create an "undue personal hardship." The proposal would also permit affected employees to reject an otherwise "reasonable offer" on the basis of his immediate eligibility for retirement. By granting such broad discretion to employees, the proposal would thwart all good faith efforts by the activity to to make "reasonable offers" of reassignment.

A proposal which would allow employees who were downgraded as a result of a reclassification to reject an otherwise reasonable offer of a comparable position, under conditions additional to those specified by OPM, and without a loss of retained grade and pay, does not conflict with management's rights to direct and assign work to employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). The Authority found that the proposal involved employees who have been placed in lower-graded positions for reasons other than personal cause and who are entitled to retained grade and pay for up to two years. An employee's entitlement to retained grade and pay ends if the employee declines a "reasonable offer" of another position with a grade and pay equivalent to or greater than the employees' former position. While the employee clearly has the right to refuse such an offer, to do so terminates the employee's entitlement to retained grade and pay and the employee would remain in the lower-graded position. The proposal concerns only what constitutes such a "reasonable offer," and not whether management can, for example, "involuntarily assign an employee to any position.

An agency has discretion to add to the six elements of a "reasonable offer" required by 5 CFR § 536.206. The regulatory requirements are the "minimum conditions which must be met for an offer to be reasonable . . . Agencies may also establish additional conditions which must be met" before an "offer" of reassignment or promotion may be deemed "reasonable." Therefore, in addition to the regulatory requirements for continued entitlement to retained grade and pay for two years after a downgrade based on position reclassification, other requirements for such retention may be negotiable.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority rejected a proposal to establish a regulatory time limit for the issuance of negotiability decisions. While the Authority found that a timely resolution of negotiability disputes is essential to the effective administration of the Federal labor-management relations program, it concluded that the establishment of a 60-day limit applicable to all negotiability appeals would not assist in accomplishing that goal. Negotiability cases vary substantially. The length of time it takes to decide a particular case depends upon such factors as the number and complexity of proposals at issue; the relationship of the disputed proposals to other cases; the size and composition of the Authority's case docket; the need to give priority consideration to some cases; and the availability of resources. The assumption that all negotiability decisions could be issued within a fixed regulatory time limit would ignore the existence of all these factors and might well reduce the operational flexibility necessary to enable the Authority to effectively carry out our responsibilities under the Statute.

The Authority rejected a proposed amendment to its rules which would allow the pursuit of unfair labor practice remedies in situations where an agency simply refuses to negotiate over contract proposals on the basis that they are outside the duty to bargain. Sections 2423.5 and 2424.5 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provide, in pertinent part, that where a labor organization files an unfair labor practice charge which involves a negotiability issue and also files a petition for review of the same negotiability issue, it is required to choose which procedure to pursue first. Cases which involve only an agency's allegation that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter proposed to be bargained, and which do not involve alleged unilateral changes in conditions of employment, must be processed exclusively under the negotiability procedures in part 2424 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. These regulations are consistent with § 7117 and 7118 of the Statute, which specify separate procedures for resolving negotiability and unfair labor practice cases respectively. They are consistent with the legislative history of the Statute, which indicates that Congress considered but rejected a provision which would have required all negotiability disputes to be resolved in unfair labor practice proceedings. Unfair labor practice remedies are available in appropriate refusal to bargain situations, such as (1) where the refusal to negotiate is accompanied by unilateral changes in conditions of employment; and (2) where an agency refuses to bargain over a proposal substantially identical to one which the Authority has previously determined to be negotiable under the Statute. The Authority concluded that the petitioner's suggestion to provide unfair labor practice remedies beyond these circumstances would be contrary to the language and legislative history of the Statute as well as Authority precedent.

The union filed requests for issuance of a general statement of policy or guidance on the issue of whether a labor organization is entitled to market value attorney fees where fees received are paid into a separate litigation account used solely for litigation purposes; and seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision modifying the arbitrator's award in this case. The Authority's Rules and Regulations provides that in deciding whether to issue a general statement of policy or guidance, the Authority shall consider, among other things, whether the question presented can more appropriately be resolved by other means. In this case, the Authority found that the issue presented by the union in its request can be, and was, more appropriately resolved through case processing procedures and is therefore unsuitable for resolution by issuance of a general statement of policy or guidance. As to the union's request for reconsideration, the Authority held that the union had not established "extraordinary circumstances and that the request essentially constituted nothing more than disagreement with the merits of the Authority's decision and an attempt to relitigate the matter.

DIGEST NOTES

The grievance concerned the suspension of the grievant for inattention to duty. The activity proposed to suspend the grievant for 14 days. During the advance notice period of the proposed disciplinary action, the grievant consulted with an EEO counselor concerning the proposed suspension pursuant to the precomplaint procedures of 29 CFR § 1613.213. The proposed penalty was reduced to a 10-day suspension and the activity issued a final decision suspending the grievant for 7-days. The grievant filed the grievance which was submitted to arbitration protesting that the suspension was not for just cause. The activity argued that the grievance was barred because the grievant's contact with the EEO counselor raised the matter of his suspension under the statutory EEO procedures, therefore, raising the matter under the negotiated grievance procedure was precluded by § 7121(d). The Arbitrator determined that the matter raised under the negotiated procedure was not the same matter that the grievance had raised under the statutory procedures. The arbitrator concluded that the grievance was not precluded by § 7121(d) and set aside the suspension, but stated that the activity may issue a written reprimand.

In its exception to the arbitrator's award the agency contended that the grievance was barred by § 7121(d) since the same matter was raised by the grievant under both the statutory and negotiated grievance procedures. The Authority held that the grievance was filed before the grievant initiated the action under the statutory EEO complaint procedures and that the grievance was not precluded by § 7121(d) by the grievant's previous contact with the EEO counselor. Under the provisions of § 7121(d), a grievance timely filed in writing in accordance the negotiated grievance procedure is only precluded or barred by the grievant having earlier raised the same matter by the timely filing of a formal written complaint in accordance with 29 CFR § 1613.213. Consultation with an EEO counselor pursuant to the precomplaint process of 29 CFR § 1613.213 does not preclude the subsequent filing of a grievance. One of the primary purposes of § 7121(d) is to preclude litigation of the same matter under both the applicable statutory procedure and the negotiated grievance procedure. This purpose is not served by having grievances filed under the negotiated grievance procedure precluded or barred by an employee's informal contact with an EEO counselor under 29 CFR § 1613.213. The precomplaint stage of the statutory EEO process is not a formal litigation proceeding.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority concluded that the activity's refusal, based on its arguable interpretation of the parties' national agreement, to proceed to negotiations on ground rules until the union submitted substantive proposals on the subject matter did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (5). The Authority agreed with the Judge's findings that the activity did not refuse to bargain on ground rules, but only insisted, consistent with its view of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, that bargaining on ground rules be deferred until the union also submitted its substantive proposals. The activity merely insisted that the union comply with a condition precedent to beginning negotiations on ground rules, namely, the submission of substantive proposals concerning the impact and implementation of a change in employees working conditions. The Authority also found, as did the Judge, that this case involved differing and arguable interpretations of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In such cases involving disputed interpretations of the parties collective bargaining agreement, the aggrieved party's remedy lies within the grievance and arbitration procedures in the negotiated agreement rather than through the unfair labor practice procedures.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Marian Kincaid Warns filed by the Department of the Air Force (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

This case involves grievances filed and submitted to arbitration on behalf of eight employees covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). The grievants sought overtime compensation for time spent as witnesses for the Union attending an arbitration hearing on another grievance. Apparently, two of the eight employees, including the grievant in the initial grievance, attended the hearing on official time for the period of the hearing when they otherwise would have been in a duty status. However, they remained at the hearing when the hearing extended beyond the end of their regularly scheduled duty hours. These two employees claimed overtime compensation for the time spent attending the hearing while they were not on official time. The regularly scheduled duty hours of the other six employees were not rescheduled by the Activity to coincide with the hearing. Consequently, these six employees attended the hearing during time they were not scheduled to be in a duty status and they claimed overtime compensation for the entire time spent attending the hearing.

The Arbitrator determined that the Activity had violated the intent of the parties' collective bargaining agreement and past practice by not rescheduling the worktime of the employees to fully coincide with the time of the hearing. She found that the intent of the parties' agreement is that employees appearing as witnesses will not suffer any loss of pay, including overtime pay. Accordingly, the Arbitrator sustained the grievances and ordered that the employees be compensated at overtime rates or granted compensatory time off for the time spent attending the arbitration hearing for which they were not otherwise compensated. Specifically, she ordered that the two employees who had attended the hearing on official time be compensated for the time spent beyond their regularly scheduled duty hours. She ordered that the other six employees be compensated at overtime rates for the usual number of hours of their workday and for any additional time spent attending the hearing.

III. EXCEPTION

The Agency contends that the award of overtime compensation or compensatory time off is contrary to governing law and regulation. Specifically, the Agency argues that time spent attending an arbitration hearing as a union witness is not hours of work officially ordered or approved that constitutes overtime work under the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 5542(a) for which overtime pay or compensatory time off is authorized. The Agency also argues that such time likewise is not hours of work under FLSA, 29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq., and implementing regulations, 5 CFR part 551, subpart D, for which overtime pay or compensatory time off is authorized for nonexempt employees. The Agency further maintains as to one of the employees who was also the grievant in the initial grievance that 5 CFR § 551.424(a), providing that time spent adjusting grievances shall be considered hours of work, does not apply to time spent as a union witness attending an arbitration hearing to which the grievant was not a party. Accordingly, the Agency asserts that the award is deficient and should be set aside. In the alternative, the Agency asserts that if the Authority views this matter as involving a wrongful denial of official time, the award should be modified to provide appropriate compensation at straight-time rates.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

We agree with the Agency that the award of overtime compensation is contrary to governing law and regulation.

The basis for overtime pay is 5 U.S.C. § 5542(a) which provides that all hours of work officially ordered or approved in excess of 8 hours in a day or 40 hours in an administrative workweek are overtime work entitling the employee to overtime compensation or where appropriate under 5 U.S.C. § 5543 to compensatory time off. See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees and Social Security Administration, 21 FLRA No. 14 (1986). The Authority has specifically held that a union official's performance of representational activities on nonduty time, outside regular work hours, was not the performance of hours of work officially ordered or approved that constituted overtime work for which overtime pay or compensatory time off could be granted. Id.; Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 104 (1985); Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1164, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 4 (1985). On the basis of these decisions, we similarly find in this case that time spent attending an arbitration hearing as union witnesses was not the performance of hours of work officially ordered or approved that constitutes overtime work under section 5542(a) so as to entitle the employees to overtime pay or compensatory time off.

Employees, as in this case, who are covered by FLSA are also entitled to overtime pay or compensatory time off in accordance with FLSA and provisions of 5 CFR part 551 implementing the Act for nonexempt Federal employees. Under these provisions covered employees are entitled to overtime compensation or where appropriate compensatory time off for all hours of work in excess of 40 in a workweek. 5 CFR § 551.501(a). Under 5 CFR § 551.401(a), all time spent by an employee performing an activity for the benefit of an agency and under the control or direction of the agency is "hours of work." In Warner Robins Air Logistics Center, Warner Robins, Georgia and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 987, 23 FLRA No. 35 (1986), we specifically held that time spent by a union representative on nonduty time, outside regular work hours, representing an aggrieved employee at a meeting to resolve the grievance was not hours of work under 5 CFR § 551.401(a). On the basis of Warner Robins ALC and for the reasons set forth in that decision, we similarly find in this case that time spent attending the arbitration hearing as union witnesses is not hours of work under subsection 401(a) which would entitle the employees to overtime pay or compensatory time off under FLSA.

We also agree with the Agency that the one employee who was the grievant in the initial grievance was not entitled to overtime pay or compensatory time off under 5 CFR § 551.424(a). This provision provides:

> Time spent by an employee adjusting his or her grievance (or any appealable action) with an agency during the time the employee is required to be on the agency's premises shall be considered hours of work.

We find that this provision does not apply to the grievant's attendance as a union witness at the arbitration hearing to which he was not a party and at which his attendance was not otherwise required. This was not time spent by the employee "adjusting his . . . grievance . . . during the time the employee is required to be on the agency's premises" within the meaning of subsection 424(a). Consequently, the Arbitrator's award of overtime compensation or compensatory time off is deficient as to all eight employees as contrary to governing law and regulation.

As recognized by the Agency, the Authority has determined that the Statute effectively provides a remedy when official time under section 7131(d) of the Statute is wrongfully denied. For example, American Federation of Government Employees and Social Security Administration, 21 FLRA No. 14 (1986) (and cases cited in the decision). Specifically, where official time properly authorized by provisions of a collective bargaining agreement is wrongfully denied and the covered activities are thereafter performed on nonduty time, section 7131(d) entitles the aggrieved employee to be paid for the amount of time that should have been official time. In this case, although the employees were not engaged in union representational activities, section 7131(d)(2) expressly provides for official time for bargaining-unit employees "in connection with any other matter covered by [the Statute]" which clearly encompasses testifying as a union witness at an arbitration hearing. See U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 22 FLRA No. 16 (1986); U.S. Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons, Federal Correctional Institution, Seagoville, Texas and American Federation of Government Employees, Council of Prison Locals, Local No. 1637, 22 FLRA No. 5 (1986).

In this case, the Arbitrator found that it was the intent of the collective bargaining agreement and the practice of the Activity to reschedule the workday of employees scheduled to be union witnesses at an arbitration hearing to coincide with the hearing to enable them to be on official time to the extent of their workday. Thus, the Arbitrator found that under the parties' agreement the six employees denied official time should have been granted official time for the usual number of hours of their shift. Consequently, the award should have granted those six employees compensation for the usual number of hours of their shift at the appropriate straight-time rates. Therefore, the award will be modified accordingly. Compensation at straight-time rates is appropriate because the performance of those activities even on official time does not constitute overtime work. As indicated in Warner Robins ALC, 23 FLRA No. 35, the key under 5 CFR § 551.424(b) to whether time spent outside regular working hours performing representational activities on official time is overtime work is that the union official must already have been in an overtime duty status at the direction of the agency at the time an event arises which calls for the performance of representational functions. Slip op. at 2 (citing NTEU v. Gregg, No. 83-546 (D.D.C. Sept. 28, 1983)). Apart from the consideration of whether 5 CFR § 551.424(b) applies to official time under section 7131(d)(2) rather than (d)(1) alone, the six employees concerned were not already in an overtime duty status at the direction of the Activity at the time of the arbitration hearing, and, therefore, compensation at straight-time rates only is warranted.

V. DECISION

For these reasons the award is modified to strike the award to all eight employees of overtime compensation or compensatory time off and to substitute for the last sentence of paragraph 2 of the award the following remedy for the wrongful denial of official time to the six employees whose workdays were not rescheduled by the Activity:

> Each of the six employees who attended the arbitration hearing as union witnesses entirely outside regularly scheduled duty hours shall be compensated for the usual number of hours of their shift at appropriate straight-time rates.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority, in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by the parties, who have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. Both the Respondent and the General Counsel have filed briefs for the Authority's consideration.

The complaint alleges that the Respondent committed an unfair labor practice in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by improperly refusing to bargain over one of the three proposals submitted by the Charging Party (the Union) during negotiations over the impact and implementation of management's decision to downgrade certain positions. The disputed proposal concerns what shall constitute the declination of a reasonable offer of a comparable position, resulting in the loss of retained grade and pay, where employees have been downgraded by reclassification.

II. Background

In 1981, officials in the Respondent's Dallas Regional Office conducted an audit of its "Mail and Supply Clerk" positions at the GS-4 level. They concluded that the position was not properly classified at the GS-4 level, and reclassified it at the GS-3 level. As a result of this reclassification, the Respondent immediately discontinued filling its Mail and Supply Clerk positions at the GS-4 level.

In 1983, the Respondent downgraded its GS-4 Mail and Supply Clerks located in Dallas, Fort Worth, Waco, Houston, and Brownsville, Texas, and Albuquerque, New Mexico, to the GS-3 level. Consistent with Federal regulations, the Respondent afforded retained grade and pay for a period of two years to its Mail and Supply Clerks who were downgraded as the result of the reclassification of their positions.[1]

In connection with this action, the Respondent sought specific proposals from the Union as to the impact and implementation of the downgradings, noting that affected employees could seek reassignment and compete for higher-graded positions during the two-year retention period. Under Federal regulations, eligibility for grade retention ceases if the employee declines a "reasonable offer" of a position for which the grade is equal to or higher than the retained grade, and eligibility for pay retention ceases if the employee declines a "reasonable offer" of a position for which the rate of basic pay is equal to or higher than the retained pay.[2]

The Union replied to the Respondent's solicitation with the following three bargaining proposals:

I. Management will take all necessary actions to assure that the affected employees will have the opportunity to exercise their full range of rights to priority consideration for other positions as afforded under applicable law, regulations, contract provisions, past practice and the Agency policy. Management will engage in no acts to discourage the exercising of the priority considerations.

[1] 5 C.F.R. § 536.101(a).

[2] 5 C.F.R. §§ 536.207 and 536.209. The definition of a "reasonable offer," the declination of which may terminate eligibility for retained grade and pay, is set forth at 5 C.F.R. § 536.206, promulgated on Dec. 30, 1980; 45 Fed. Reg. 85656.

II. The failure to utilize a priority consideration will not constitute a Declination of a Reasonable Offer.

III. The failure to accept the offer of a position under any one of the following circumstances will not constitute a Declination of a Reasonable Offer: (1) The employee does not believe that he (or she) could perform satisfactorily in the offered position, (2) The employee has attained minimum age and length of service for retirement, (3) The employee believes that the change in positions would create undue personal hardship.

The Respondent agreed to bargain on the first two proposals, but declined to bargain on the third. The Respondent took the position that the third proposal was not negotiable because it was contrary to Government-wide policy concerning the requisite elements of a reasonable offer, as set forth in the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) by the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM). The Union asserted that the FPM specifically provides that an agency may establish factors in addition to those required by regulation for determining whether an offer of reassignment or promotion to another position constitutes a "reasonable offer." The Respondent disagreed, and contended that, in any event, additional factors must be established at the Agency's national level, not at the regional level involved here. The Union then filed its unfair labor practice charge, and the complaint in this case was issued.

III. Positions of the Parties

A. The General Counsel makes the following arguments in support of its contention that the last of the Union's three proposals was negotiable:

1. While management has the full authority to reduce its employees in grade or pay as a consequence of a proper reclassification of their positions, it must nonetheless negotiate, under section 7106(b)(2) and (3) of the Statute, as to "procedures" and "appropriate arrangements" for those bargaining unit members who have been adversely affected because of a reduction in grade and pay.

2. The Respondent recognized its duty to bargain in this case when it notified the Union of the impending action and solicited specific proposals regarding the impact and implementation of the action.

3. The Respondent's insistence that it had no (or very limited) authority to add to the requisite elements of a "reasonable offer" is expressly contradicted by the language of the FPM on which the Respondent relies in support of its position in this regard.

B. The Respondent, on the other hand, makes the following arguments in support of its position that the last of the Union's proposals is not negotiable:

1. A classification action is explicitly excluded under section 7103(a)(14)(B) and (C) of the Statute as a negotiable "condition of employment."

2. The classification action in this case does not constitute an exercise of a retained management right under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute so as to be subject to impact and implementation bargaining under section 7106(b)(2) and (3).

3. Even if the impact and implementation of classification actions were negotiable in general, this case presents an exception because the Respondent's management had "very little discretion under applicable statutes and regulations to bargain over such matters."

4. Pertinent legal precedent, as well as the parties' own bargaining agreement, provide that agency management is bound by existing Government-wide rules and regulations,[3] and that the OPM provision concerning the definition of a "reasonable offer" for purposes of pay and grade retention constitutes a Government-wide rule or regulation which imposes the parameters of such a

---

[3] In addition to the provisions of the pertinent bargaining agreement, section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute itself specifically provides that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to matters "inconsistent with any Federal law or any Government-wide rule or regulation . . . ." See discussion in the text.

"reasonable offer" to the exclusion of the terms of the Union's proposal.

5. In conclusion, the proposal conflicts with management's right to direct the work force and assign work to employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute.

IV. Analysis

A. Negotiability of the Union's Proposal In General

In March Air Force Base, Riverside, California, 13 FLRA 255 (1983), the Authority held that, consistent with section 7103(a)(14)(C) of the Statute and Authority precedent, bargaining proposals which relate directly to the classification of positions do not concern "conditions of employment" and therefore are not within the duty to bargain under the Statute. The Authority further found, however, that the duty to bargain does apply to the implementation of downgradings to be effected as the result of the reclassification of positions, and to the impact of such reclassification on affected employees, "to the extent consonant with law and regulation." The Authority followed this finding in Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 19 FLRA No. 61 (1985), concluding that the agency was obligated to bargain over the procedures and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the agency's decision to reclassify positions, resulting in downgrades, reassignments, and promotions. The same rule of law applies equally here.

Also in the March Air Force Base decision, the Authority discounted the agency's argument that, even if a duty to bargain existed, the agency had little discretion under applicable statutes and regulations to bargain on such matters. The Authority noted that grade and pay retention are specifically provided for by law and regulation, and therefore may not be subject to bargaining under section 7103(a)(14)(C) of the Statute. The Authority concluded, however, that the agency had presented no evidence that the union's proposals were removed from the scope of bargaining, either because they were specifically provided for within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14)(C), or because the agency was left with no discretion to act under those particular circumstances. The Authority therefore ordered the agency to take certain steps to offer the union the opportunity to negotiate about the impact and implementation of its reclassification and downgrade action.

Under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute, a Federal agency's duty to bargain does not extend to proposals that are "inconsistent with any Federal law or any Government-wide rule or regulation . . . ." In this case, an OPM regulation at 5 C.F.R. § 536.206 provides that a "reasonable offer," the declination of which terminates eligibility for grade and pay retention, is composed of six specific elements.[4] The terms of that regulation clearly require that, at a minimum, all six elements must be present for an offer to be a "reasonable offer." An FPM provision published subsequently by OPM stipulates that the regulatory requirements are the "minimum conditions which must be met for an offer to be reasonable . . . ," so that "[a]gencies may also establish additional conditions which must be met" before an "offer" of reassignment or promotion may be deemed "reasonable." FPM ch. 536, subch. 5, sec. 5-1(f)(2) (Oct. 1, 1981). This FPM provision represents OPM's interpretation of its own regulations, see FPM Introduction (Feb. 14, 1983), and FPM ch. 171-5, sec. 2-1 (June 25, 1984), and is adopted for purposes of this decision because it is consistent with the regulation.

[4] The six specific elements of a "reasonable offer," set forth at 5 C.F.R. § 536.206, are as follows:

(1) The offer must be in writing, and must include an official position description of the offered position; and

(2) The offer must inform the employee that an entitlement to grade or pay retention will be terminated if the offer is declined and that the employee may appeal the reasonableness of the offer as provided in § 536.302; and

(3) The offered position must be of tenure equal to or greater than that of the position creating the grade or pay retention entitlement; and

(4) The offered position must be in an agency, as defined in 5 U.S.C. § 5102, although not necessarily in the same agency in which the employee is serving at the time of the offer; and

(5) The offered position must be full-time, unless the employee's position immediately before the change creating entitlement to grade or pay retention was less than full-time, in which case the offered position must have a work schedule of no less time than that of the position held before the change; and

(6) The offered position must be in the same commuting area as the employee's position immediately before the offer, unless the employee is subject to a mobility agreement or a published agency policy which requires employee mobility.

The Respondent also asserted that "changes in the current policy" with regard to the requirements of a "reasonable offer" could only be effectuated at the Agency's national level because the regional office was not empowered to do so. The Respondent offered no evidence to support its assertion. In fact, the record indicates that the Respondent, in deciding to downgrade the GS-4 Mail and Supply Clerks at certain locations within the Dallas Region, sought specific proposals from the Union concerning the impact and implementation of that decision on these unit employees.

The Authority concludes that the Respondent has discretion to add to the six elements of a "reasonable offer" required by Federal regulation. In addition to the regulatory requirements for continued entitlement to retained grade and pay for two years after a downgrade based on position reclassification, other requirements for such retention therefore may be negotiable.

B. Negotiability of the Union's Proposal

The Union proposed three circumstances under which the downgraded employees would not be deemed to have declined a "reasonable offer" which would terminate their eligibility for retained grade and pay. Those three circumstances are as follows:

(1) Where the employee believes that he could not perform satisfactorily in the offered position;

(2) Where the employee has attained the minimum age and length of service for retirement; and

(3) Where the employee believes that taking on an offered position would create an undue personal hardship.

The Respondent contends that this proposal would eliminate its discretion to exercise its reserved management rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute to "direct" and "assign work" to the employees reduced in grade or pay as a result of the reclassification of their positions.

Contrary to the Respondent's position, we find that the disputed proposal in this case does not conflict with management's rights to "direct" and "assign work" to employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. Rather, it involves employees who have been placed in lower-graded positions for reasons other than personal cause and who are entitled to retained grade and pay for up to two years under law and Governmentwide regulation. 5 U.S.C. §§ 5361-66; and 5 C.F.R. part 536. Under this law and regulation, an employee's entitlement to retained grade and pay ends if the employee declines a "reasonable offer" of another position with a grade and pay equivalent to or greater than the employee's former position. While the employee clearly has the right to refuse such an offer, to do so terminates the employee's entitlement to retained grade and pay and the employee would remain in the lower-graded position. The proposal in this case concerns only what constitutes such a "reasonable offer," and not whether management can, for example, "involuntarily" assign an employee to any position.

The Union's proposal would allow an affected employee to reject an otherwise "reasonable offer" when the employee simply "believes" that he could not perform the duties of the offered position -- implicitly regardless of an agency determination of qualification -- or when he "believes" that accepting the offered position would create an "undue personal hardship." The proposal also would permit the affected employee to reject an otherwise "reasonable offer" on the basis of his immediate eligibility for retirement. By granting such broad discretion to affected employees, the disputed proposal could thwart all good faith efforts by the Respondent to make "reasonable offers" of reassignment. Employees who represented that they "believe" subjectively that they cannot perform the duties of the offered positions or that the positions would result somehow in an "undue personal hardship," or who coincidentally happen to be qualified for retirement, would be entitled to decline otherwise reasonable offers. The Authority finds that the proposal conflicts with OPM's Government-wide regulatory requirements for determining what constitutes a "reasonable offer."[5] Accordingly, the Union's proposal is not negotiable, and the complaint in this case is dismissed.

V. Conclusion

The Authority has considered all the facts and circumstances of this case, including the positions of the parties, and concludes that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) or (5) of the Statute, as alleged. We shall therefore dismiss the complaint.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 6-CA-40044 be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

FEDERAL LABOR RELATIONS AUTHORITY
WASHINGTON, D.C.

PETITION FOR AMENDMENT OF RULES Case No. 0-MC-10

DECISION ON PETITION FOR AMENDMENT OF RULES

The Petition for Amendment of Rules was filed pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 553(e) and 5 U.S.C. § 7134 and seeks an amendment to three provisions in the Authority's Rules and Regulations, specifically 5 CFR §§ 2423.5, 2424.5 and 2424.10.

I. Establishment of Deadlines for Deciding Scope of Bargaining Issues Under Section 7117(c)

Petitioner proposes the following amendment to section 2424.10(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations to provide a deadline for issuance of Authority negotiability decisions:

> Except in cases in which hearings are held, decisions in cases arising under 5 U.S.C. § 7117(c) shall be issued within 60 days of the submission of the union's response to the agency's statement of position.

In support of this proposed revision, the Petitioner relies on section 7117(c)(6) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) which requires the Authority to expedite negotiability proceedings.

The Authority rejects the proposal to establish a regulatory time limit for the issuance of negotiability decisions. While the timely resolution of negotiability disputes is essential to the effective administration of the Federal labor-management relations program, we do not believe that the establishment of a 60-day time limit applicable to all negotiability appeals will assist in accomplishing that goal. Negotiability cases vary substantially. The length of time it takes to decide a particular case depends upon such factors as the number and complexity of the proposals at issue; the relationship of the disputed proposals to other cases; the size and composition of our case docket; the need to give priority consideration to some cases; and the availability of resources. The assumption that all negotiability decisions could be issued within a fixed regulatory time limit would ignore the existence of all these factors and might well reduce the operational flexibility necessary to enable us to effectively carry out our other responsibilities under the Statute.

The Authority has established goals which will significantly reduce the time taken to issue all of our decisions. Our immediate goal is to decide all cases within six months of their receipt. As of April 1, 1986, there were 512 cases that would be six months old on September 30, 1986; as of August 31, 1986 that figure was reduced to 232. We will continue our efforts until the goal is met.

II. Recognition of the Relationship Between Scope of Bargaining Disputes and Failure to Bargain Disputes.

The petitioner proposes that sections 2423.5 and 2424.5 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations should be replaced by the following:

> (a) If a union files an unfair labor practice charge over an agency's failure to bargain over a matter, and the union has already filed an appeal of the agency's allegation that the duty to bargain does not extend to that matter, a complaint shall be issued and the agency required to answer, but further proceedings concerning the unfair labor practice charge will be suspended pending decision on the duty to bargain issue.
> (b) If during the investigation of a charge that an agency has failed to bargain in good faith, the agency alleges as a defense that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter sought to be bargained, the agency will be instructed to submit its allegation in writing to the union. If the union files a timely appeal of the allegation, a complaint on the unfair labor practice charge will be issued and an answer required, but further proceedings concerning the unfair labor practice charge will be suspended pending decision on the duty to bargain issue.
> (c) If at any time after issuance of the complaint the agency alleges as a defense that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter sought to be bargained, the agency will be instructed to submit its allegation in writing to the union. If the union files a timely appeal of the allegation, further proceedings concerning the unfair labor practice charge will be suspended pending decision on the duty to bargain issue.

(d) Upon issuance of the Authority's decision on the duty to bargain issue, the proceedings on the unfair labor practice case will be resumed in a manner consistent with that decision.

The petitioner asserts that adoption of this proposal is necessary to allow for the pursuit of unfair labor practice remedies in situations where an agency simply refuses to negotiate over contract proposals on the basis that they are outside the duty to bargain.

The Authority rejects this proposal for the following reasons. Sections 2423.5 and 2424.5 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provide, in pertinent part, that where a labor organization files an unfair labor practice charge which involves a negotiability issue and also files a petition for review of the same negotiability issue, it is required to choose which procedure to pursue first. Cases which involve only an agency's allegation that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter proposed to be bargained, and which do not involve alleged unilateral changes in conditions of employment, must be processed exclusively under the negotiability procedures in part 2424 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. In our view, these regulations are consistent with the language of sections 7117 and 7118 of the Statute, which specify separate procedures for resolving negotiability and unfair labor practice cases, respectively. They are also consistent with the legislative history of the Statute, which indicates that Congress considered but rejected a provision which would have required all negotiability disputes to be resolved in unfair labor practice proceedings.*/

Unfair labor practice remedies are available in appropriate refusal to bargain situations, such as (1) where the refusal to negotiate is accompanied by unilateral changes in conditions of employment (Veterans Administration,

Rec. 29184 (1978), reprinted in Sub-comm. on Postal Personnel and Modernization of the House Comm. on Post Office and Civil Service, 96th Cong., 1st Sess., Legislative History of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, at 927 (Comm. print No. 96-7).

Washington, D.C., 22 FLRA No. 69 (1986)); and (2) where an agency refuses to bargain over a proposal substantially identical to one which the Authority has previously determined to be negotiable under the Statute. See Department of the Air Force, U.S. Air Force Academy, 6 FLRA 548 (1981), *affirmed sub nom. We conclude that Petitioner's suggestion to provide for unfair labor practice remedies beyond these circumstances, such as where an agency is merely alleging--in the absence of clear precedent to the contrary--that a disputed proposal is nonnegotiable, would be contrary to the language and legislative history of the Statute as well as Authority precedent.

III. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the proposed amendments to the Authority's Rules and Regulations contained in the Petition for Amendment of Rules must be rejected. Accordingly, the Petition is denied.

ORDER DENYING APPLICATION FOR REVIEW

On July 31, 1986, the National Association of Government Employees (NAGE), SEIU/AFL-CIO, Local R8-14 (NAGE), filed a timely application for review, pursuant to section 2422.17(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, seeking to set aside the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Objections in the above-named case. In its application for review, NAGE contends that compelling reasons exist within the meaning of section 2422.17(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations for granting the application.

Upon consideration of NAGE's application for review, including all arguments in support thereof, the Authority concludes that no compelling reason exists for granting the application. Rather, the application in essence expresses mere disagreement with the Regional Director's findings which are based on record evidence and have not been shown to be clearly erroneous or to have prejudicially affected the rights of any party.

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2422.17(f)(3) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the application for review of the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Objections be, and it hereby is, denied.

ORDER

This matter is before the Authority at this time on requests filed by the Union asking the Authority to issue a general statement of policy or guidance on the issue of whether a labor organization is entitled to market value attorney fees where the fees received are paid into a separate litigation account used solely for litigation purposes and seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of May 22, 1986, modifying the Arbitrator's award in this case.[1]

In his supplemental opinion and award,[2] the Arbitrator determined that attorney fees were warranted in the interest of justice for the legal services rendered in conjunction with certain allegations giving rise to the underlying grievance. The Arbitrator granted the Union's application for attorney fees in part and ordered that the Union be compensated for the allowable time at an hourly rate at or near the prevailing rate of legal compensation in the locality. In its exceptions to the supplemental award, the Activity argued, among other things, that the Arbitrator's supplemental award of attorney fees to the Union at the prevailing private practice rate was contrary to law as enunciated by the Federal courts and the Merit Systems Protection Board. The Authority held, based upon its decision in Naval Air Development Center, Department of the Navy and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1928, AFL-CIO, 21 FLRA No. 25 (1986), that because the attorneys who represented the grievant were employees of the Union, attorney fees for their services could only be awarded on a cost-plus basis and modified the Arbitrator's award accordingly.

[1] The Union incorporates by reference the brief in support of its request for a general statement of policy or guidance into the record to support its request for reconsideration.

[2] The underlying grievance in this case concerned the 10-day suspension of the grievant for alleged failure to process tax remittance and tax returns in a timely manner. The Arbitrator sustained the grievance and left the record open to permit the parties to file briefs on whether reasonable attorney fees should be granted pursuant to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596. The Union filed an application for an award of fees and the Arbitrator ruled on the application in a supplemental opinion and award.

In support of its requests, the Union essentially argues that its maintenance of a litigation fund separate from the general treasury eliminates the potential for unethical fee splitting and that therefore the Union is entitled to recover attorney fees calculated at the prevailing market-value rate.

Section 2427.5 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides that in deciding whether to issue a general statement of policy or guidance, the Authority shall consider, among other things, whether the question presented can more appropriately be resolved by other means. In this case, the Authority finds that the issue presented by the Union in its request can be, and was, more appropriately resolved through case processing procedures and is therefore unsuitable for resolution by issuance of a general statement of policy or guidance.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations permits a party that can establish "extraordinary circumstances" to move for reconsideration of a decision of the Authority. Here, however, the Union has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17. Rather, the arguments presented by the Union in support of its request essentially constitute nothing more than disagreement with the merits of the Authority's decision and an attempt to relitigate the matter.

Accordingly, the Union's requests for reconsideration and for a general statement of policy and guidance are denied.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Seymour Strongin filed by the Department of Justice (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition and the Office of Personnel Management filed a brief as an amicus curiae.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case concerns the suspension of the grievant for inattention to duty. On October 3, 1983, the Activity proposed to suspend the grievant for 14 days, and during the advance notice period of the proposed disciplinary action, the grievant on November 10, 1983, consulted with an equal employment opportunity (EEO) counselor concerning the proposed suspension pursuant to the precomplaint procedures of 29 CFR § 1613.213. On December 7, 1983, the proposed penalty was reduced to a proposed 10-day suspension, and on January 23, 1984, the Activity issued a final decision suspending the grievant for 7 days. On February 3, 1984, the grievant filed the grievance which was submitted to arbitration protesting that the suspension was not for just cause.

In the proceeding before the Arbitrator, the Activity argued that because of the contact with the EEO counselor on November 10, 1983, the subsequently filed grievance was barred by section 7121(d) of the Statute.[1] Specifically, the Activity maintained that by consulting with the counselor under the precomplaint procedures of 29 CFR § 1613.213, the grievant raised the matter of his suspension under the statutory EEO complaint procedures. Consequently, the Activity contended that raising the matter subsequently under the negotiated grievance procedure was precluded by section 7121(d), which permits an employee to raise such a matter under the statutory EEO procedures or the negotiated grievance procedure, but not under both. The Arbitrator however determined that the "matter" raised under the negotiated grievance procedure was not the same "matter" that the grievant had raised under the statutory EEO procedures. On that basis, the Arbitrator ruled that the grievance was not precluded by section 7121(d) of the Statute. On the merits, the Arbitrator set aside the suspension, but stated that the Activity may issue the grievant a written reprimand.

[1] Section 7121(d) of the Statute pertinently provides:

> An aggrieved employee affected by a prohibited personnel practice under section 2302(b)(1) of this title which also falls under the coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure may raise the matter under a statutory procedure or the negotiated procedure, but not both. An employee shall be deemed to have exercised his option under this subsection to raise the matter under either a statutory procedure or the negotiated procedure at such time as the employee timely initiates an action under the applicable statutory procedure or timely files a grievance in writing, in accordance with the provisions of the parties' negotiated procedure, whichever event occurs first.

III. EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its exception the Agency contends that the grievance was barred by, and the award is consequently deficient as contrary to, section 7121(d) of the Statute. In support, the Agency essentially argues that the matter raised by the grievant under both the statutory and negotiated procedures was the same and that such matter was earlier raised under the statutory EEO complaint procedures by initiating the pre-complaint procedures of 29 CFR § 1613.213.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

Section 7121(d) provides that when an employee affected by a prohibited personnel practice under section 2302(b)(1)[2] has raised the matter under a statutory procedure, the matter subsequently may not be raised as a grievance. Thus, the elements of section 7121(d), both of which must attach in order for a grievance to be precluded, are: (1) the matter which is the subject of the grievance is the same matter which is the subject of the action initiated under the statutory procedure, and (2) such matter was earlier raised by the employee timely initiating an action under the statutory procedure.

In this case, without deciding whether the matters raised under the statutory and negotiated procedures were the same, the Authority concludes that the grievance was filed before the grievant initiated the action under the statutory EEO complaint procedures and that therefore the grievance was not precluded by section 7121(d) of the Statute by the grievant's previous contact with an EEO counselor.

[2] Section 2302(b)(1) pertinently provides:

> (b) Any employee who has authority to take, direct others to take, recommend, or approve any personnel action, shall not, with respect to such authority--
> (1) discriminate for or against any employee or applicant for employment--
> (A) on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, as prohibited under section 717 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964[.]

Section 7121(d) provides with respect to grievances that the employee shall be deemed to have exercised the option to raise the matter under the negotiated grievance procedure when the employee timely files a grievance in writing in accordance with the provisions of the negotiated grievance procedure. However, with respect to statutory procedures, section 7121(d) merely provides that the option is exercised at the time the employee timely initiates an action under the applicable statutory procedure. In addition, 29 CFR part 1613, governing equal employment opportunity in the Federal government, does not specify when a matter of discrimination under section 717 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is raised under the statutory EEO complaint procedures or when an action is initiated under those procedures.[3]

For the reasons that follow, we conclude that under the provisions of section 7121(d) of the Statute, a grievance timely filed in writing in accordance with the negotiated grievance procedure is only precluded or barred by the grievant having earlier raised the same matter by the timely filing of a formal written complaint in accordance with 29 CFR § 1613.214. Contrary to the argument of the Agency, consultation with an EEO counselor pursuant to the precomplaint process of 29 CFR § 1613.213 does not preclude the subsequent filing of a grievance.

One of the primary purposes of section 7121(d) is to preclude litigation of the same matter under both the applicable statutory procedure and the negotiated grievance procedure. This purpose is not served by having grievances filed under the negotiated grievance procedure precluded or barred by an employee's informal contact with an EEO counselor under 29 CFR § 1613.213. The precomplaint stage of the statutory EEO process is not a formal litigation proceeding. As emphasized by the court in Mertz v. Marsh, 786 F.2d 1578, 1580-81 (11th Cir. 1986), in denying attorney fees for services performed during the precomplaint process, that stage of the process is different in purpose and nature from the proceedings after the filing of a formal written complaint under section 1613.214.

[3] We note that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has proposed to amend its regulations to provide at 29 CFR § 1613.219 that an election to proceed under EEO procedures is indicated only by the filing of a formal written complaint and that the use of the precomplaint process of 29 CFR § 1613.213 does not constitute an election of remedies. 51 Fed. Reg. 29482, 29483, 29488-89 (Aug. 18, 1986).

Specifically, the court noted that the precomplaint process is informal; the identity of the complainant is confidential; the claim need not be in writing; the counselor has a duty to give counsel as well as to seek a solution on an informal basis; and if this stage does not bring the matter to solution, the aggrieved person must be notified of the right to file a complaint of discrimination. In short, the court affirmed for purposes of the statutory provisions authorizing attorney fees the "drawing of a line between the ameliatory system of .213 and the formal complaint procedure of .214." 786 F.2d at 1581. We agree that the precomplaint process is a predominantly informal, confidential, and conciliatory process. We note in addition that at the conclusion of the process nothing precludes an employee from seeking a formal resolution of the employee's concern by filing a formal complaint of discrimination. As we have previously indicated, one of the purposes of section 7121(d) is to preclude relitigation of a matter previously litigated in a fashion binding on all parties. This purpose is best served if, in determining whether an election has occurred under section 7121(d), the line is drawn between the informal and confidential counseling system of section 1613.213 and the litigation proceedings commenced by the filing of a formal written complaint under section 1613.214.

In addition, this determination in our judgment best facilitates the settlement of disputes between employees and their employing agencies involving conditions of employment. Certainly, employees contact EEO counselors seeking information, advice, and counseling on a wide variety of matters and may be advised that there is no basis for a discrimination complaint under applicable EEO laws and regulations. Under the interpretation of section 7121(d) advanced by the Agency in this case, an employee in such circumstances would be precluded from raising under the negotiated grievance procedure any matter that was discussed with the EEO counselor. We find that such a result was not intended by section 7121(d) and does not promote the purpose of the Statute of encouraging the settlement of disputes.

Similarly, this determination is consistent with the provision of 29 CFR § 1613.403 specifying when a "mixed case complaint"[4] is filed for purposes of the election between a mixed case complaint or a "mixed case appeal"[5] to the Merit Systems Protection Board. In this situation, which is similar to the election of the statutory EEO complaint procedure involved in this case, 29 CFR § 1613.403 specifies that the election of the mixed case complaint occurs when the formal written complaint is filed pursuant to 29 CFR § 1613.214.

[4] 29 CFR § 1613.402(a) defines a mixed case complaint.

IV. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons, the Agency's exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient as contrary to section 7121(d) of the Statute and the exception is denied.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to a ruling of Arbitrator Alvin L. Goldman filed by the Activity under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The matter submitted to arbitration concerned the grievant's reduction in grade for unacceptable performance under 5 U.S.C. § 4303. Before considering the merits of the grievance, the Arbitrator issued a final ruling and opinion on the Union's motion to require the Activity to make a prehearing disclosure of certain documents and information. The Arbitrator essentially sustained the motion and ordered the Activity to produce a substantial portion of the material requested. The Activity's exceptions in this case are to the Arbitrator's final ruling on the motion.

III. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

We conclude that we are without jurisdiction to review the Activity's exceptions. We find, apart from any consideration of whether a challenge to the ruling is interlocutory, that the ruling on the Union's motion is not separate and distinct from the matter of the grievant's reduction in grade. Section 7122(a) of the Statute pertinently provides:

> Either party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award > pursuant to the arbitration (other than an award relating to a matter described in section 7121(f) of this title).

As relevant to this case, the matters described in section 7121(f) of the Statute include those covered under 5 U.S.C. § 4303 which applies to a reduction in grade for unacceptable performance. Review of an arbitration award relating to such matters must be obtained in the same manner and under the same conditions as if the matter involved had been decided by the Merit Systems Protection Board. Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Pacific Region and Overseas Education Association, 16 FLRA 34 (1984).

Because we find that the Arbitrator's final ruling on the Union's motion relates to a matter covered by section 4303, exceptions to the award may not be filed with the Authority under section 7122(a) of the Statute. See Headquarters, Department of the Army, Washington, D.C. and U.S. Army Training Center Engineer and Fort Leonard Wood, Fort Leonard Wood, Missouri, 22 FLRA No. 71 (1986), slip op. at 5 n.2 and Veterans Administration Medical Center, Hines, Illinois and Illinois Nurses Association, Hines Local Unit, 20 FLRA No. 61 (1985) In VA Medical Center, Hines, Illinois, the Authority found that a supplemental award of attorney fees was not separate and distinct from the original award which related to a matter described in section 7121(f) of the Statute. Consequently, the Authority ruled that it was without jurisdiction to resolve the exceptions to the award of attorney fees and the exceptions were dismissed.

IV. DECISION

Accordingly, the Activity's exceptions are dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed by the General Counsel to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The complaint alleged that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by refusing to bargain over ground rules for scheduled negotiations between the Respondent and the Charging Party (the Union) concerning the impact and implementation of the Respondent's decision to relocate its Babylon, Long Island Branch Office to Lindenhurst, Long Island.

II. Background and Judge's Conclusion

The basic facts are not in dispute, having been stipulated at the hearing. By letter of February 8, 1985, the Union asked the Respondent if it planned to move its Babylon Branch Office. The Respondent replied that it planned to move the Office as of March 1, 1985. The parties met shortly before the move and identified several areas of disagreement. The move took place as scheduled. Shortly after the move, the Union requested to bargain over the impact and implementation of the move, submitted ground rules proposals, and proposed to meet on these proposals. The Respondent replied that it was unwilling to meet on ground rules alone, since the parties' negotiated agreement required the submission of substantive proposals prior to bargaining on anything, including ground rules. The Union then filed the charge that led to the complaint before the Judge in this case.

The Judge found that the Respondent's refusal to bargain over the Union's ground rules proposals was not unlawful in the circumstances of this case. The Judge observed that the Respondent gave proper notice of the move to the Union, met with the Union to discuss preliminarily what problems the move posed, and admitted its obligation to bargain over the impact and implementation of the move. The Judge further found that the issue raised by the Respondent--that is, whether substantive proposals must be submitted prior to bargaining--is a long-standing, unresolved issue between the parties. She then found that Article 4, Section 1 of the parties' agreement does not distinguish between ground rules and substantive proposals, but only provides that "proposals" shall be submitted within a reasonable time after notice of a proposed change is given, and prior to bargaining. Acknowledging that ground rules are an integral part of the bargaining process, the Judge found that the Respondent's interpretation was arguably correct, and that the dispute therefore may be resolved through the grievance/arbitration machinery of the parties' contract but not through the unfair labor practice procedures of the Statute. She therefore concluded that the Respondent's refusal to proceed to bargaining on ground rules until the Union had submitted substantive proposals was not a violation of the Statute, and recommended dismissal of the complaint.

III. Positions of the Parties

In its brief to the Judge, the Respondent argued that it was justified in refusing to bargain about ground rules alone because Article 4, Section 1 of the parties' agreement required the Union to submit substantive proposals before the Respondent was obligated to bargain concerning ground rules.

In exceptions to the Judge's Decision, the General Counsel argues that ground rules are an integral part of the bargaining process, and that the Respondent was thus obligated to bargain about ground rules prior to the submission of proposals on substantive matters. The General Counsel argues further that the Union did not waive its right to insist on such ground rules bargaining when it agreed to the terms of Article 4, Section 1 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

IV. Analysis

The Authority agrees with the Judge, who placed importance upon the fact that the meaning of Article 4, Section 1 of the parties' agreement has long been in dispute, and that the Respondent has consistently taken the position, since the inception of the parties' agreement, that the agreement obliges the Union to submit substantive proposals (as well as ground rules proposals, if any) prior to bargaining. The Judge acknowledged that ground rules are an integral part of the collective bargaining process, about which management must bargain, citing Authority precedent. She made a careful distinction in this case, however. The Judge found that the Respondent did not refuse to bargain on ground rules, but only insisted, consistent with its view of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, that bargaining on ground rules be deferred until the Union also submitted its substantive proposals. The General Counsel's argument concerning waiver is thus inapposite. Consistent with the Judge, we find that the Respondent merely insisted that the Union comply with what the Respondent viewed as a negotiated condition precedent to beginning negotiations on ground rules, namely, the submission of substantive proposals concerning the impact and implementation of the change.

We find, in essential agreement with the Judge, that this case involves differing and arguable interpretations of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Respondent relied upon what it argued was a clear requirement of the parties' agreement that the Union's substantive proposals must be submitted before it was required to meet its obligation to bargain as to ground rules. In such cases involving disputed interpretations of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, the aggrieved party's remedy lies within the grievance and arbitration procedures in the negotiated agreement rather than through unfair labor practice procedures.

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties, and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommended Order dismissing the complaint. We therefore conclude that the Respondent's refusal, based on its arguable interpretation of the parties' National Agreement, to proceed to negotiations on ground rules until the Union submitted substantive proposals on the subject matter did not violate section 7116(a)(1) or (5) of the Statute.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 2-CA-50221 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. 7101 et seq. (1982), commonly known as the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, and hereinafter referred to as the Statute, and the rules and regulations issued thereunder and published at 5 CFR 2411 et seq.

Pursuant to a charge of unfair labor practices filed on March 26, 1985, by Stanley Chodos on behalf of the Charging Party, the Regional Director, Region II, of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (Authority) investigated and, on May 29, 1985, served the complaint initiating this action.

The complaint alleges that Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1), and (5)[1] of the Statute by refusing to bargain over ground rules for negotiations between Respondent and the Charging Party concerning the impact and implementation of a management-initiated change relocating a branch office.

On July 16, 1985, a hearing was held in New York City at which the parties appeared and submitted a Stipulation of Facts with Joint Exhibits 1 through 31. Jon Steen stated the position of the General Counsel and Melvin Steuerman stated that of Respondent. The General Counsel's proposed order and notice to be entered in this case was received as General Counsel's Exhibit No. 1. Briefs were filed by the General Counsel and Respondent on August 15. Based upon the record made in this case and the briefs, I enter the following findings of fact and conclusions of law and recommend the entry of the following order.

Findings of Fact

1. The charge herein was filed by the Charging Party on March 26, 1985, and a copy thereof was served upon the Respondent by certified mail on March 27, 1985 (Joint Exhibit 1 to Stipulation).

2. On May 29, 1985, the General Counsel by the Regional Director for Region II, acting pursuant to Section 7104(f)(2) of the Statute, and 5 CFR 2423.9(a)(4), issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing (Joint Exhibit 2 to Stipulation). On June 19, 1985, the Respondent served an Answer to the Complaint on the Regional Director (Joint Exhibit 3 to Stipulation).

3. At all times material herein, the Charging Party has been, and is now, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 7103(a)(4) of the Statute.

4(a). At all times material herein, the Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration (SSA) has been, and is now, an agency within the meaning of Section 7103(a)(3) of the Statute.

[1] Section 7116 provides, in pertinent part, that:

> (a) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency -
> > (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter; . . . [or]
> > (5) to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with a labor organization as required by this chapter; . . . .

(b). At all times material herein, SSA, Field Operations, New York Region has been, and is now, a constituent entity within the Department of Health and Human Services, SSA, and an agent acting on its behalf.

5(a). At all times material herein, the following named persons occupied the positions set forth below, opposite their names:

Peter DiSturco - Regional Commissioner, SSA, New York Region;
Alex W. Bussey - Assistant Regional Commissioner for Field Operations, SSA, New York Region;
Michael DiSalvo - Manager, Babylon, New York Branch Office, SSA;
Melvin Steuerman - Labor Relations Specialist, SSA, New York Region.

(b). At all times material herein, the individuals named above in paragraph 5(a), have been, and are now, supervisors or management officials as defined in Section 7103(a)(10) and (11), respectively, of the Statute, and have been, and are now, agents of the Respondent acting on its behalf.

6(a). At all times material herein, the Charging Party has been, and is now, the certified exclusive representative of a unit of certain employees of Respondent, including all employees employed in the District and Branch Offices of the SSA in the States of New York and New Jersey, excluding all management personnel, professional federal employees, employees engaged in personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, guards and supervisors.

(b). At all times material herein, the Charging Party has delegated to the National Council of SSA Field Operations Locals (Council) authority to act as its representative for the purposes of collective bargaining for certain of Respondent's employees, including employees in the New York Region, and the Council's delegation has been recognized by Respondent.

(c). At all times material herein, the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3369, AFL-CIO (AFGE Local 3369) has acted as agent for the Council for the purposes of collective bargaining for certain of Respondent's employees, including employees at the Babylon, New York Branch Office. AFGE Local 3369's delegation has been recognized by Respondent.

7. SSA, Field Operations, New York Region consists of all Branch and District Offices of the Respondent in the States of New York and New Jersey including the branch office located at Babylon, New York on Long Island.

8. On February 7, 1985, Charging Party, by its agent Stanley Chodos, Grievance Vice President for AFGE Local 3369, learned of a rumor that the Babylon, New York Branch Office would be moved.

9. By letter dated February 8, 1985, the Charging Party, by its agent Stanley Chodos, questioned the Respondent concerning the rumor of the office relocation (Joint Exhibit 4 to Stipulation).

10. On February 21, 1985 the Respondent, by its agent Melvin Steuerman, Labor Relations Specialist, notified Stanley Chodos by telephone that the Babylon Branch Office would move on March 1, 1985. Mr. Steuerman informed Mr. Chodos that consultations should take place before negotiations were requested.

11. By letter dated February 21, 1985, the Respondent, by its agent Alex Bussey, confirmed that the relocation of the Babylon Branch Office was tentatively scheduled to begin on March 1, 1985 and that the office would be open to the public at its new location on March 4, 1985. The letter further provided that the move might be delayed. See Joint Exhibit 5 to Stipulation.

12. The February 21, 1985 oral notification referred to above in paragraph 10 was the first notification the Charging Party received from Respondent regarding the relocation of the Babylon Branch Office. The Babylon Branch Office had no local on-site representative of the Charging Party.

13. On February 22, 1985 Stanley Chodos contacted Michael DiSalvo, the Branch Manager in charge of the Babylon Branch Office, and scheduled an appointment for February 28, 1985 for consultation over the office relocation.

14. Pursuant to Article 30, Appendix F, Section I, of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, generally, depending on the level affected by the change, the parties consult prior to formal negotiations being requested (Joint Exhibit 6 to Stipulation). The majority of management proposed changes result in no negotiations taking place.

15. On February 28, 1985 Stanley Chodos and Michael DiSalvo, the Babylon Branch Manager, met to consult over the Babylon office relocation. Mr. Chodos and Mr. DiSalvo viewed both the old and new office facilities during the consultation. Mr. Chodos informed Mr. DiSalvo that he would subsequently request bargaining in writing.

16. By letter dated March 12, 1985, Mr. Chodos requested negotiations over the relocation of the Babylon Branch Office and pursuant to Section 7114 of the Statute requested copies of old and new leases and any information on the exterminator service (Joint Exhibit 7 to Stipulation). That letter stated that ground rule proposals were enclosed but none were contained with the letter. The ground rule proposals were inadvertently omitted and by a second letter dated March 12, 1985 the Charging Party acknowledged that error and provided its ground rule proposals (Joint Exhibit 8 to Stipulation).

17. By letter dated March 12, 1985, Mr. Chodos wrote to Mr. DiSalvo and provided minutes of their February 28, 1985 consultation (Joint Exhibit 9 to Stipulation). The minutes named six issues as being unresolved by the labor-management consultation.

18. By letter dated March 19, 1985, Mr. DiSalvo informed Mr. Chodos of his position that there were certain errors contained in Mr. Chodos's consultation minutes (Joint Exhibit 10 to Stipulation).

19. The Babylon Branch Office moved on March 1, 1985 and the office was open for business at the new location on March 4, 1985. Even though the office has moved to its new location in Lindenhurst it is still referred to as the Babylon Office.

20. The parties have stipulated that, at all times material herein, including March 21, 1985, the Respondent was under an obligation to bargain pursuant to the Statute regarding the impact and implementation of the move of the Babylon branch office inasmuch as the move created actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse impact of more than a de minimis nature on bargaining unit employee working conditions.

21. On March 21, 1985, Mr. Chodos spoke with Mr. Steuerman by telephone. Mr. Chodos informed Mr. Steuerman that Mr. Chodos and Sharon Schwartz would be the Union's negotiators and that they would prepare substantive proposals on the move on March 25, 1985 and that those proposals would be provided when the parties met to negotiate ground rules. Mr. Steuerman informed Mr. Chodos that Respondent would not negotiate ground rules until the Union provided substantive proposals pursuant to the Respondent's position that Article 4, Section 1 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement requires the Union to submit its impact and implementation proposals, not just ground rule proposals, within a reasonable period after the notice of the proposed change. Mr. Steuerman also informed Mr. Chodos that the information requested on March 12, 1985, was in the process of being obtained.

22. By letter dated April 1, 1985 Mr. Bussey informed Mr. Chodos that the Respondent would not take any action on the Charging Party's ground rule proposals until the Union submitted its impact and implementation proposals (Joint Exhibit 11 to Stipulation). The Respondent's action was based on its position that Article 4, Section 1 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement requires the Union to submit its impact and implementation proposals, not just ground rule proposals, within a reasonable period after the notice of the proposed change. In this letter Respondent also provided the information requested by Mr. Chodos, to the extent that it existed.

23. The Respondent and AFGE Local 3369 have engaged in very few negotiations. The majority of management proposed changes never result in negotiations. Findings 25 through 32 detail the only instances of negotiations between the Respondent and AFGE Local 3369 during the term of the current agreement.

24. In May of 1982 AFGE Local 3369 requested negotiations over the opening of the Glendale (Ridgewood) Branch office and the reorganization of the Bushwick District Office. Negotiations took place in June through July of 1982 with agreements being reached on July 25 and 30, 1982, respectively (Joint Exhibit 12 to Stipulation). The parties negotiated a single set of ground rules - prior to the submission of substantive proposals - reaching agreement on July 21, 1982 (Joint Exhibit 13 of Stipulation). The Respondent was of the position that these ground rules negotiations were under the old agreement, since the bargaining request was made under that agreement. The effective date of the current agreement is June 11, 1982.

25. In March 1984, AFGE Local 3369 requested negotiations over the Boro Hall District Office relocation. In those negotiations proposed ground rules were submitted on or about April 30, 1984 by AFGE Local 3369 without any substantive proposals being included (Joint Exhibit 14 to Stipulation). By letter dated May 10, 1984 the Respondent insisted, pursuant to its interpretation of the contract, that substantive proposals be submitted (Joint Exhibit 15 to Stipulation). Substantive proposals were submitted on or about May 23, 1984 (Joint Exhibit 16 to Stipulation). Negotiations ultimately did take place over ground rules which went to impasse in June of 1984 which ultimately resulted in an agreement on ground rules in December 1984. Negotiations over the adverse impact of the relocation are still pending.

26. In October of 1983 AFGE Local 3369 requested negotiations over the relocation of the South Bronx District Office. Ground rule proposals alone were submitted with the bargaining request (Joint Exhibit 17 to Stipulation). By letter dated November 1, 1983 the Respondent insisted, pursuant to its interpretation of the contract, that substantive proposals be submitted (Joint Exhibit 18 to Stipulation). By letter dated November 7, 1983 AFGE Local 3369 informed Respondent that it did not agree with the position that negotiations required the submission of substantive proposals prior to the negotiation of ground rules but that to expedite negotiations, due to the impending move, substantive proposals would be, and were, provided (Joint Exhibit 19 to Stipulation). The parties went to impasse on both ground rules and substantive issues in May of 1984. Ground rules were finalized in May 1985; the negotiations on the substantive proposals are still pending.

27. In January 1984 AFGE Local 3369 requested negotiations on the Respondent's Employee Counseling Service (Joint Exhibit 20 to Stipulation). Ground rule proposals alone were submitted on March 8, 1984 (Joint Exhibit 21 to Stipulation). By letter dated March 27, 1984 Respondent responded to the letter of March 8, 1984 (Joint Exhibit 22 to Stipulation). AFGE Local 3369 submitted its substantive proposals on May 3, 1984 (Joint Exhibit 23 to Stipulation). No negotiations actually took place on the employee counseling service as an unfair labor practice charge was filed over the matter and no obligation to negotiate was found.

28. In July of 1984 AFGE Local 3369 requested negotiations over the elimination of telephones for certain work locations at the South Bronx District Office (Joint Exhibit 24 to Stipulation). AFGE Local 3369 submitted both its ground rules and substantive proposals simultaneously (Joint Exhibit 25 to Stipulation). No negotiations ever took place as an unfair labor practice charge was filed over the matter and no obligation to negotiate was found.

29. On August 20, 1984 AFGE Local 3369 requested negotiations over the move of the Riverdale Contact Station. Both ground rule and substantive proposals were submitted together (Joint Exhibit 26 to Stipulation). These negotiations are pending with the assistance of mediation. The ground rules were negotiated before the parties proceeded to the substantive proposals.

30. The Jackson Heights Branch Office Smoking Policy was negotiated in February and March of 1984. Both ground rule and substantive proposals were submitted by AFGE at the same time. Ground rules were negotiated first; the substantive agreement was then negotiated in March of 1984.

31. The parties are currently involved in negotiations over the use of a medical release form. Bargaining was requested by letter dated December 31, 1984 (Joint Exhibit 27 to Stipulation). Ground rule proposals were submitted on February 5, 1985 (Joint Exhibit 28 to Stipulation). By letter dated February 19, 1985 the Respondent notified AFGE Local 3369 that it would not act on the ground rule proposals until substantive proposals were submitted (Joint Exhibit 29 to Stipulation). On April 8, 1985 AFGE Local 3369 submitted its substantive proposals under protest (Joint Exhibit 30 to Stipulation). By letter dated April 11, 1985 AFGE Local 3369 informed Respondent that it disagreed with Respondent's interpretation of Article 4 Section 1 (Joint Exhibit 31 to Stipulation). The Respondent's conduct in regard to the medical release form ground rule negotiations is the subject of a separate pending unfair labor practice charge.

32. Neither the Charging Party nor AFGE Local 3369 has ever agreed with Respondent's interpretation of Article 4, Section 1 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement to the extent it would require submission of substantive proposals rather than just ground rules prior to bargaining.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel has not established, by the preponderance of the evidence,[2] that Respondent has engaged in the alleged unfair labor practices, to wit, refusal to bargain over ground rules for negotiations concerning the impact and implementation of the relocation of a branch office.

[2] This is the statutory burden of proof. See 5 U.S.C. §§ 7118 (7) and (8).

It is undisputed that ground-rule negotiations are an integral part of the collective bargaining process, both during formal contract negotiations, and negotiations conducted as a result of a change in conditions of employment made during the term of a collective bargaining agreement. See Harry S. Truman Memorial Veterans Hospital, Columbia, Missouri, 16 FLRA 944, 945 (1985). But this is not a case where an agency has refused to negotiate ground rules. Here, the agency is merely insisting that a ground rule negotiated in the parties' National Agreement be followed, to wit:

> Article IV Negotiations During the Term of the Agreement
> Section 1 - General
> The Administration will provide the Union reasonable advance notice prior to implementation of changes affecting conditions of employment subject to bargaining under 5 USC 71. Upon notice from the Administration of a proposed change, the designated union representative will notify the designated management representative of its desire to consult and/or negotiate on the change.
> The Union will submit written proposals if applicable within a reasonable period after notice of the proposed change. Bargaining will begin as soon as possible, and will not exceed ten (10) working days. All issues not resolved at that time may be referred to the Federal Service Impasses Panel for resolution under its rules.

See page 7 of Joint Exhibit 6 to the Stipulation, emphasis added.

Here, the Respondent gave notice of the proposed change to the Union on February 21, 1985. On February 28 the parties met to consult on the change, in accordance with the contract, prior to formal negotiations being requested. On March 12, the Union requested formal negotiations and submitted proposals for ground rules. On March 21, and again on April 1, management informed the Union that Respondent would not negotiate ground rules until the Union provided substantive proposals pursuant to its interpretation of Article 4 of the contract. The Union does not agree that Article 4 requires the submission of substantive proposals rather than just ground rules prior to bargaining, and has not furnished them.

Of course, to the extent that the Union believes the interpretation given to Article 4 by the Respondent is in error, it can resort to the negotiated grievance and arbitration procedures provided for in Articles 24 and 25 of the contract. See pages 44-53 of Joint Exhibit 6 to the Stipulation and compare Social Security Administration, 15 FLRA 614, 622 (1984).

But, arguably, the Respondent has placed the correct interpretation upon Article 4, which does not distinguish between ground rules and substantive proposals — it just says that "proposals" shall be submitted within a reasonable time after notice of a proposed change is given. That this Article is in the nature of a ground rule was established by the Authority in Environmental Protection Agency, 16 FLRA 602, 613 (1984).

Although, as all agree, the Statute requires the parties to negotiate ground rules before proceeding to the negotiation of substantive proposals, the Statute also obligates the parties to "avoid unnecessary delay." See Section 7114(b)(3) of the Statute. Respondent's interpretation of Article 4 of the parties' National Agreement is consonant with this obligation, in that negotiation of the substantive proposals could follow immediately upon the negotiation of the ground rules, in the event that the agreed-upon ground rules so allowed.

Thus, on this record, I am unable to conclude that Respondent committed an unfair labor practice by refusing to proceed to ground-rule negotiations until the Union complied with a reasonable interpretation of a ground rule which the parties had negotiated in their National Agreement.3/

Ultimate Findings and Recommended Order

The General Counsel has not established, by the preponderance of the evidence, that the Respondent has engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint.

Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED that the complaint be, and hereby is, dismissed.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority held, in agreement with the Judge, that the activity violated § 7116(a)(1) and (6) when it failed to cooperate in impasse procedures by issuing notices of transfer of function and notices of RIF, thus, failing to maintain the status quo to the maximum extent possible while an impasse concerning the issuance of those very notices was pending before the Federal Service Impasses Panel (Panel). The Authority has determined that once parties have reached an impasse in their negotiations and one party timely invokes the services of the Panel, the status quo must be maintained to the maximum extent possible, that is, to the extent consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency, in order to allow the Panel to take whatever action is deemed appropriate. While the foregoing policy would not preclude agency management from taking action which alters the status quo to the extent that such action is consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency, the agency taking the action would be required to provide affirmative support for the assertion that the action taken was consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency if its actions were subsequently contested in an unfair labor practice proceeding. The Authority and the Judge rejected the agency's argument the costs associated with the maintenance of the status quo justified its action of issuing the notices. While costs are a legitimate factor in deciding what is necessary for the efficient functioning of an agency, cost alone cannot justify such action. The record showed that the daily costs cited by the agency would have continued until Congressional approval was received, and therefore, could not be attributable solely to the maintenance of the status quo while awaiting Panel action. Further, the costs of rerunning the transfers of function and RIF actions could have been avoided by compliance with the activity's statutory obligation in the first instance.

DIGEST NOTES

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the arbitrator's award, filed by the grievant. It is clear that the activity and the union participated as "parties" in the proceeding. However, it appears that the grievant did not participate as a "party" in the proceeding before the arbitrator. Consequently, the Authority held that the grievant was without standing under the Authority's Rules and Regulations to file exceptions to the arbitrator's award under 2425.1(a) of the Authority's rules of procedure. The exceptions therefore, were dismissed.

DIGEST NOTES

The three Clarification of Unit petitions arise out of the Department of Labor's reorganization in which the Labor Management Services Administration (LMSA) was abolished and concern the effects of the reorganization on the bargaining unit of LMSA employees represented by NUCO. The Authority found, contrary to the Regional Director, that the Office of Pension and Welfare Benefit Programs (OPWBP) employees were severed from and no longer share a community of interest with other employees in the NUCO unit and should be excluded therefrom. The Authority further found, that pursuant to § 7135(a)(1), the previous unit represented by NUCO which now includes only Office of Labor-Management Standards (OLMS) employees continues to exist.

Office of Pension and Welfare Benefit Programs employees were severed from and no longer share a community of interest with other employees in the NUCO unit because as a result of a reorganization OPWBP employees are now part of new separate activity; are under separate supervision and authority; and have little or no contact, interchange or transfer with other employees in the unit. The Authority found that the OPWBP employees constituted a functionally distinct group of employees who no longer share a community of interest with the employees of the existing unit. The Authority ordered that the certification be clarified to exclude the subject employees.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

The Authority found that the OPWBP investigators administer statutes relating to labor-management relations within the meaning of § 7112(c) and therefore could not be represented by unions representing other employees within DOL. The investigators investigated allegations of fiduciary breaches to title I of ERISA, and a considerable portion of their work involved review of joint labor-management administered plans established under 29 U.S.C. § 186(c).

The exclusion of OPWBP employees as a result of reorganization did not substantially change the scope and character of the unit historically represented by NUCO, which consists of all OLMS employees, therefore NUCO remained the exclusive representative of the unit after the reorganization. The remaining employees were transfered intact into the OLMS which was established to handle the function previously handled by these employees prior to the reorganization. The Authority has required, consistent with § 7135(a), that an activity continue to recognize units that were appropriate under Executive Order 11491, where it found that a reorganization did not substantially change the character and scope of the existing units.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This consolidated unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed by the Respondents to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The Charging Party (the Union) filed cross-exceptions and an opposition to the Respondents' exceptions. The issue is whether the Respondents, by issuing notices of transfer of function and of reduction-in-force (RIF) actions to unit employees while the Federal Service Impasses Panel (the Panel) had before it the parties' impasse regarding ground rules matters, violated section 7116(a)(1) and (6) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute).

II. Background and the Judge's Conclusion

Following an announcement by the Respondents in early 1983 of a proposed major field reorganization, the Union requested to negotiate concerning the impact and implementation of the reorganization. The parties met, but reached an impasse on certain ground rules. The services of the Panel were invoked, and the Panel asserted jurisdiction. The Judge found, and it is not disputed, that the Respondents issued notices of transfer of function and of RIF actions to unit employees while the Panel had before it the parties' impasse. The Panel, among other things, ordered the Respondents to extend the effective dates of certain RIF notices.

The Judge found that the Respondents violated the Statute as alleged. In so finding, he rejected the Respondents' argument that the costs of maintaining employees in their then current job functions justified the position that their action in issuing the notices was consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Respondents argue first that the Panel was without jurisdiction to resolve a dispute over negotiation ground rules, and that the Judge therefore should not have found a violation in the Respondents' alleged failure to cooperate in the Panel's procedures. They point to the fact that the Judge did not find them to have bargained in bad faith, and to the fact that they complied with the Panel's final order.

As to the Judge's remaining findings, the Respondents take issue with his rejection of their argument as to cost justification. The Respondents argued before the Judge that maintenance of the status quo would cost approximately $30,000 a day, plus approximately $300,000 "to rerun the RIF." The Respondents also assert that the daily costs could have continued for a very long time because "[i]f the agency refused to comply" with a Panel decision, the process of resolving the noncompliance "would normally take several years[.]" Respondents Brief in Support of Exceptions at 3.

The Union argues generally in support of the Judge's findings and conclusions, pointing particularly to the fact that lack of good faith bargaining was not alleged and arguing that costs alone do not relieve the Respondents of their statutory duty to bargain.

IV. Analysis

In Department of the Treasury, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 18 FLRA No. 61 (1985), issued subsequent to the Judge's decision in this case, the Authority determined that once parties have reached an impasse in their negotiations and one party timely invokes the services of the Federal Service Impasses Panel (the Panel), the status quo must be maintained to the maximum extent possible, that is, to the extent consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency, in order to allow the Panel to take whatever action is deemed appropriate. The Authority further found that, while the foregoing policy would not preclude agency management from taking action which alters the status quo to the extent that such action is consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency, an agency taking such action would be required to provide affirmative support for the assertion that the action taken was consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency if its actions were subsequently contested in an unfair labor practice proceeding.

We agree with the Respondents that costs are a legitimate factor in deciding what is necessary for the efficient functioning of an agency. We find that in the circumstances of this case, however, the Judge was correct in rejecting the Respondents' specific argument that costs alone justified their actions. While the amount of the daily costs is not disputed, the length of time the costs would have continued, conditioned on an assumption of noncompliance with an unfavorable Panel order, is purely speculative. The daily costs of retaining the employees subject to the RIF were to continue at least until the RIF notices became effective. The record contains evidence that daily costs would have continued until Congressional approval was received, and therefore those daily costs may not be attributable solely to the maintenance of the status quo while awaiting Panel action. In this case, the matter was resolved by the Panel's designee prior to the original effective dates of the transfers of function and the RIFs. The Respondents, in complying with the Panel's final order, extended the effective dates of the RIF notices, thus actually continuing the daily personnel costs and also incurring the costs of issuing new notices of some transfers of function. The costs of rerunning the transfers of function and RIF actions could have been totally avoided by compliance with the Respondents' statutory obligation in the first instance. We also note that, prior to impasse, the Respondents had offered to postpone the transfers and RIFs and that among the impasse items originally submitted to the Panel were (1) the completion of bargaining prior to implementation of any part of the reorganization, and (2) the content and scope of the notices, particularly the RIF notices, that were to be sent to unit employees.

Thus, in agreement with the Judge, we find that the Respondents failed to maintain the status quo to the maximum extent possible, while an impasse concerning the issuance of those very notices was pending before the Panel. Accordingly, we agree with the Judge's conclusion that the Respondents thereby unlawfully failed to cooperate in impasse procedures by issuing the notices while the dispute was pending.[1] We shall therefore order, as did the Judge, that the Respondents not repeat such unlawful action in the future. In view of the fact that the Respondents have complied with the Panel's final order, and in the absence of exceptions to the Judge's order, we find it unnecessary to require that the Respondents take further action to rerun RIFs or issue further new notices, or otherwise return to the status quo that existed prior to the unlawful action taken.

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed,[2] and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions, the opposition and cross-exceptions, and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order. We therefore conclude that the Respondents, by failing to cooperate in impasse procedures by issuing notices of transfer of function and notices of RIF while the dispute was pending before the Panel, violated section 7116(a)(1) and (6) of the Statute.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Kansas City Region, Kansas City, Missouri shall:

---

[1] In so concluding, it is noted that the Authority has previously found that ground rules negotiations are a part of the negotiation process leading to an agreement. Department of Defense Dependents Schools, 14 FLRA 191 (1984).

[2] The Judge denied the Union the right to cross-examine one of the Respondents' witnesses, solely on the ground that the General Counsel had declined to cross-examine. The Union excepted to this ruling. While we find that the Judge was in error in so ruling, in view of the disposition of these cases, the Authority concludes that such ruling has resulted in no prejudice to the Charging Party.

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to cooperate in impasse proceedings by issuing notices of transfer of function and/or notices of reduction-in-force actions while an impasse concerning the impact and implementation of that reorganization is pending before the Federal Service Impasses Panel.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing their employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Post at their facilities wherever bargaining unit employees are located, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Secretary, Department of Housing and Urban Development, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply.

Statement of the Case

This proceeding, under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the United States Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.,[1] and the Final Rules and Regulations issued thereunder, 5 C.F.R. § 2423.1, et seq., concerns whether Respondent's issuance of notices of transfer of function and specific notices of RIF after the National Council of HUD Locals #222, American Federation of Government

[1] For convenience of reference, sections of the Statute hereinafter are, also, referred to without inclusion of the initial "71" of the Statute reference, e.g., Section 7116(a)(6) will be referred to, simply, as "§ 16(a)(6)".

Employees, AFL-CIO (hereinafter referred to as the "Union") had filed a request for the assistance of the Federal Service Impasses Panel (hereinafter referred to as "FSIP"), violated §§ 16(a)(6) and (1) of the Statute. This case was initiated by a charge filed on August 2, 1983, in Case No. 7-CA-30523 which alleged violations of §§ 16(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute (G.C. Exh. 1(a); a first amended charge in Case No. 7-CA-30523 filed on November 21, 1983, which alleged violations only of §§ 16(a)(1) and (6); a charge filed on August 15, 1983, in Case No. 7-CA-30537(1) (G.C. Exh. 1(c)) and a first amended charge in Case No. 7-CA-30537(1) filed on November 21, 1983 (G.C. Exh. 1(g)), each charge in Case No. 7-CA-30537 (1) alleging violation of §§ 16(a)(1) and (6) of the Statute; Order Consolidating Case Nos. 7-CA-30523 and 7-CA-30537(1), Consolidated Complaint and Notice of Hearing, for a hearing at a date and location to be determined, in Case Nos. 7-CA-30523 and 7-CA-30537(1) issued on November 30, 1983 (G.C. Exh. 1(1); by a Charge filed in Case No. 3-CA-3072-1 on August 31, 1983, alleging violation of §§ 16(a)(1) and (6) of the Statute; a Complaint and Notice of Hearing in Case No. 3-CA-30726-1 issued on November 28, 1983, for a hearing on February 1, 1984 (G.C. Exh. 1(j); by Order dated November 30, 1983 (G.C. Exh. 1(m)) Case Nos. 7-CA-30523 and 7-CA-30537(1) were transferred to Region III; by Order dated December 16, 1983, Case Nos. 7-CA-30523, redesignated as Case No. 37-CA-30523, and 7-CA-30537(1), redesignated as Case No. 37-CA-30537(1), were Consolidated with Case No. 3-CA-30726-1 for hearing on February 1, 1984, pursuant to which a hearing was duly held on February 1, 1984, in Washington, D.C. before the undersigned.

All parties were represented at the hearing, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved, and were afforded opportunity to present oral argument. At the close of the hearing, March 2, 1984, was fixed as the date for filing post-hearing briefs, which time was subsequently extended, upon timely motion of Respondent, to which the other parties did not object, for good cause shown, to April 2, 1984. Respondent, the Union and the General Counsel each timely filed an excellent brief on April 2, 1984, which have been carefully considered. Upon the basis of the entire record,[2] I make the following findings and conclusions:

[2] Respondent filed a Motion to Correct Transcript, to which no opposition was filed, and said motion is granted expect as noted hereinafter: a) the requested change on p. 18, 1.8 to change "evidence" to "evident" is denied; b) p. 18, 1. 17 to change "controls" to controlled" is denied and on my own motion the word "controls" is deleted; c) p. 138, 1. 25, to correct spelling is denied as the name does not appear at 1. 25; and on my own motion the same name at p. 139, 1. 25 is corrected from "DeDyn" to De Deyn"; p. 20, 1. 3 the second correction, "insert 'the" after "one" is denied, and on my own motion the word "one" is deleted and the word "the" is inserted. The transcript is hereby corrected as fully set forth in the Appendix hereto.

Findings

1. At all times material, the Union was the designated agent of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, the exclusive representative of two consolidated units consisting of approximately 9,000 of Respondent's nonprofessional and professional employees. At all times material, Respondent and the Union have been parties to a collective bargaining agreement (Jt. Exh. 1), which expired on November 10, 1982, but which the parties agree continued to govern (Tr. 7-8).

2. On February 22, 1983, Respondent announced a proposed major field reorganization (46 F.R. 7562 (1983), Res. Exh. 5) pursuant to which Respondent's field organization would be restructured and the field staff reduced.

3. The Union requested negotiations concerning the impact and implementation of the proposed reorganization and reduction-in-force and on, or about, June 17, 1983, the parties reached agreement on ground rules to be used to negotiate the impact and implementation (Tr. 37, 105) and the ground rules agreement was executed on June 27, 1983, (Res. Exh. 1, Tr. 37, 105). The following day, June 28, 1983, the parties began negotiations.

4. Prior to agreeing to ground rules, the Union's chief negotiator, Ms. Jane E. Newberry, had, inter alia, on June 17, demanded that Respondent pay travel and per diem expenses for the Union negotiators. Mr. Melvin S. Weinstein, Respondent's chief negotiator had responded, in essence, that the expired contract provided that payment of per diem and travel expenses was discretionary with management and that Respondent would not agree to payment of the Union negotiators' travel and per diem expenses (Tr. 44). Ms. Newberry first stated that she had been instructed to go to impasse on that issue; however, Ms. Newberry subsequently called Mr. Weinstein and informed him that payment by management of travel and per diem for Union negotiators was "not an issue"; that the Union agreed to the ground rules; and that she would see him on June 28 (Tr. 108).

5. Negotiations on the impact and implementation of the field reorganization and RIF began at 9:00 a.m. on June 28, 1983 (Tr. 37, 108-109). Mr. John Lynn, a member of Respondent's negotiating team, gave a briefing on the reorganization in which he highlighted information set forth in the February 22, 1983, Federal Register notice (Res. Exh. 5) and pointed out changes that had been made (Tr. 38). At the conclusion of the briefing, the parties caucused, at the Union's request, until about 1:00 p.m. During the caucus, the Union delivered a letter to Mr. Weinstein in which it requested the following information.

> "1. Current staffing plans/new approved staffing plans.
> "2. Current out-stationed positions and proposed out-stationed positions.

"3. All proposed transfers of function.

"4. FPM Chapter 351, as amended.

"5. Cost-benefit analysis of the field reorganization as required under the Dole Amendment." (Res. Exh. 3).

6. Negotiations resumed after lunch (Tr. 60) and the Union's request for information was discussed. Mr. Weinstein stated that Respondent had, in fact, already furnished the Union with current staffing data, proposed staffing plans (see, for example, Res. Exh. 2, Tr. 58), proposed out-stationed positions, FPM Chapter 351, and the cost benefit analysis required by the Dole Amendment (Tr. 113-115); however, he stated that Respondent could not provide the final, approved staffing plans because they were not yet available. Mr. Weinstein stated, however, that the proposed staffing plans should be 90-95 % of what the final approved plans will reflect and that the only changes expected were in supervisory positions (Tr. 113). Mr. Weinstein suggested that, since one of the major things the Union was looking for was final approved staffing plans, the negotiations be recessed until the final approved staffing plans were available. The Union responded with "AFGE proposal #1" (G.C. Exh. 2) which provided, in part, as follows:

> "1. . . . negotiations . . . be deferred until such time as the Employer furnishes the . . . information as outlined in UNION'S letter of 6/28/83. . . .
> "2. Additionally, the negotiations shall be delayed for two weeks. . . .
> "3. Employer agrees to pay travel, per diem and related expenses. . . .
> "4. Employer agreed that implementation of any part of this reorganization will not take place without first fulfilling its obligation to bargain including the furnishing of requested information." (G.C. Exh. 2).

Thereafter, Respondent submitted a handwritten counter proposal, the first paragraph of which read: "Negotiations on the proposed field reorganization will be deferred until the employer furnish the following:", and, at Respondent's request, the Union specified the items of information that it desired which Mr. Weinstein entered in the counter proposal as 1a. - e. (Tr. 117-118). The handwritten counter proposal was then typed and given to the Union (Tr. 118). "Management's Counter Proposal - 6/28/83" (G.C. Exh. 3), provided as follows:

"1. Negotiations on the proposed Field reorganization will be deferred until the Employer furnish the following:

a. Current staffing plans to include PFT's and Staff years by account by Region by Office;

b. New approved staffing plans;

c. Proposed out-stationed positions by Region by Office;

d. All proposed functional transfers designated by physical or administrative moves; and

e. Copies of response(s) to Congress reflecting management's compliance with DOLE.

2. Negotiations shall be delayed 48 hours after the final documents are sent to Jane Newberry, Executive Vice President for Council.

3. Employer agrees to pay travel and per diem for . . . [four employees] NTE three workdays for negotiations. Per diem will not include weekends.

4. Employer agrees to meet its obligations under law, rules, regulations and contract with the Union prior to implementing the reorganization." (G.C. Exh. 3).

Upon receipt of Respondent's counter proposal, the Union gave Mr. Weinstein copies of two unfair labor practice charges and negotiations were adjourned for the day (Tr. 118).

7. A general RIF notice had been issued on June 9, 1983, which was subsequently rescinded. On June 28, 1983, Respondent "shared" with the Union a preliminary letter prior to the issuance of the general RIF notice (Res. Exh. 8, Tr. 97) and this "preliminary letter was issued to all HUD employees on, or about, June 29, 1983 (Tr. 97). The general RIF notice was dated June 28, 1983 (Jt. Exh. 3, Attachment); was shown to the Union "on or about the same the same day" it was actually issued which was, apparently, June 30, 1983 (Tr. 172).

8. Negotiations reconvened at 9:00 a.m. on June 29, 1983. Following a caucus, the Union submitted "AFGE Proposal #2" which provided, in part, as follows:

"1. (same as Respondent's Counterproposal - 6/28/83)

> "2. Negotiations shall be delayed for 10 working days after the final documents are received by all UNION designated negotiators.
> "3. Employer agrees to pay travel, per diem, and related travel expenses for UNION designated negotiators . . . UNION . . . negotiators shall be on official time and in travel status for negotiations and up to three working days preparation time prior to the resumption of bargaining.
> "4. [Essentially the same as Respondent's Counter Proposal 6/28/83].
> "5. Employer shall not issue a General Notice of Reduction-in-Force until such time as negotiations with the UNION have been completed.
> "6. Employer agrees to include the following in any General Notice of Reduction-in-Force:
>
> > 'a. Notice to employees of the right to UNION representation.
> > 'b. Written acknowledgement form for employee to request or decline UNION representation by signature.
> > 'c. A statement that Employer has agreed with UNION to a minimum General Notice period of ninety days prior to the effective date of any Reduction-in-Force.'
> "7. The parties to this agreement agree that any dispute over the application of this agreement shall be referred directly to arbitration . . .the prevailing party shall not be held liable for any expenses related to arbitration." (G.C. Exh. 4).

Subsequently, at about 4:30 p.m., Respondent gave the Union "Management's Counter Proposal #2 - 6/29/83" which provided, in part, as follows:

> "1. (Same as Respondent's Counterproposal - 6/28/83).
> "2. Management will provide the information in 1 above to the union team of Jane Newberry, Dave Ronaldi, Sharon Turner, Ernestine Napue and Norris Crenshaw.

> "3. Upon receipt of the above stated information, the union team will be allowed two consecutive work days of official time at their duty stations to analyze the information. The Team will then be paid travel and per diem for two workdays to Washington, D.C. to prepare for negotiations. On the third workday in Washington, the Union team will present their proposals . . . The negotiations shall be limited to three workdays for which the union will be paid travel and per diem. Per diem and travel will not apply for Norris Crenshaw.
> "4. (Same as Respondent's Counter Proposal - 6/28/83)."

Negotiations were adjourned for the day without discussion of Respondent's second counterproposal. During the day, the Union had contacted the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and requested the services of a mediator and a Mr. Emmett De Deyn, a FMCS mediator, had agreed to be present the following day.

9. Mr. De Deyn met with parties on June 30, 1983, and at his request the Union prepared and submitted a counter proposal to Respondent's second counter proposal. "AFGE Proposal #3", provided, in part, as follows:

> "1. (Same as Respondent's Counterproposal - 6/28/83).
> "2. Employer shall provide the information in #1 above to five members of the UNION team designated by the Council President.
> "3. The UNION team will be paid be Employer for travel, per diem and related travel expenses for five days in Washington, D.C. to prepare for negotiations. On the following day in Washington, the UNION team shall present their proposals . . . negotiations shall be limited to ten days for which the UNION team shall be paid travel, per diem and related expenses. Should negotiations continue beyond ten days the UNION will continue to be on official time without entitlement to per diem.
> "4. The parties shall not be bound by provisions #2 of the 6/27/83 ground rules.[3]
> (5, 6, 7 and 8 same as Paragraphs 4, 5, 6 and 7 of AFGE Proposal #2.) (G.C. Exh. 6).

---

[3] Section 2 of the Ground Rules agreement (Res. Exh. 1) provided for the daily schedule for negotiations. As Mr. Weinstein stated, this was a new item (Tr. 134) and Mr. Weinstein stated that the intent was not made clear (Tr. 134).

The parties then discussed each section of AFGE Proposal #3. Mr. Weinstein testified that Respondent would agree to Sections 1 and 2 but would not agree to Sections 4, 5, 6 and 7(c) (Tr. 133 - 137). With respect to Section 3, Mr. Weinstein stated that Respondent would agree to the concept of payment of travel and per diem but objected to the amount (Tr 134). With respect to Section 7(a) and (b), Mr. Weinstein was agreeable to the concept but requested the specific language that the Union wanted to include in the General RIF notice which the Union did not provide (Tr. 135 - 136). Mr. Weinstein stated that Respondent would agree to Section 8, arbitration, if the Union agreed to insert a clause expressly waiving the applicability of the negotiated procedure contained in the expired agreement (Tr. 137).

Mr. De Deyn asked Respondent to prepare a counterproposal to AFGE Proposal #3 which Respondent did. "Management Proposal #3 - 6/30/83" provided as follows:

> "The following options are presented to the Union for their choice as to a course of action:
> '1. Proceed to negotiate the impact and implementation of the regional reorganization, or
> '2. Recess the present negotiations and provide the desired information to the Union. Subsequently have the Union return to Washington, D.C. for negotiations in accordance with the June 27, 1983 Ground Rules.'" (G.C. Exh. 7).

Mr. Weinstein stated that the Union found this proposal unacceptable, because, as Ms. Newberry stated, ". . . it appeared to me that management pulled everything off the table they had previously given us and there was no where for me to try to negotiate with them cause they took all their proposals off the table." (Tr. 49). Mr. Weinstein conceded that "In our proposal of 6/30/83, we were no longer offering per diem and travel." (Tr. 144). Although there is a dispute whether Mr. De Deyn stated that the parties were at impasse and that they should go to the FSIP (compare, Newberry Tr. 49, 73 and Weinstein Tr. 139 - 140), there is no dispute that Ms. Newberry asked Mr. Weinstein if he would like to "go on a joint submission" to FSIP (Tr. 49, 139) and Mr. Weinstein said he would not (Tr. 49). The Union served two more unfair labor practice charges and left (Tr. 140). No further meetings were requested (Tr. 140).

10. On July 6, 1983, the Union filed a request with FSIP for assistance (Jt. Exh. 3).

11. On July 18, 1983, Respondent issued notices of transfer of function (Consolidated Complaint, Pars. 8(a) and 9(a) (G.C. Exh. 1(1)); Answer (G.C. Exh. 1(q); G.C. Exh. 8)).

12. By letter dated July 28, 1983, Respondent advised FSIP that it rejected the Union's proposal of July 22 whereby the Union would withdraw their request for FSIP assistance in return for Respondent's agreeing to allow one day of preparation for negotiations, "Capping" negotiations at five days, and withdrawing the specific RIF notices [actually, transfer of function notices] issued in Region VII (Res. Exh. 11).

13. On, or about, August 2 and 3, 1983, Mr. Weinstein gave the Union negotiating team the final approved staffing plans (Tr. 85, 86; Res. Exh. 4).

14. On August 4, 1983, Respondent issued about 1565 specific RIF notices[4] to its employee, 758 of whom were bargaining unit employees.

15. On August 4, 1983, FSIP asserted jurisdiction and referred "all issues in dispute" to FSIP Chairman Robert G. Howlett for mediation-arbitration.

16. At 9:00 a.m. on August 22, 1983, the parties met with Chairman Howlett. Mr. Harold W. Henry, Acting Deputy Director of Personnel and Respondent's spokesman, asserted that the parties were not at impasse, because the Union had never presented any "substantive" bargaining proposals and questioned the jurisdiction of FSIP. (Tr. 159 - 160) Mr. Henry stated that the Union stated that ". . . they were there because management had refused to give it the information that it needed to develop substantive negotiating proposals dealing with the implementation of the reorganization." (Tr. 159 - 160). Mr. Henry stated that Chairman Howlett stated that, ". . . he was serving as a mediator, that he was not interested on (sic) what took place prior to that date [August 22], that he was more interested in finding out what the Parties' positions were, and to see if he could not get the Parties to come to some agreement." (Tr. 161). After Mr. Henry, at Chairman Howlett's request, had explained the field reorganization, Chairman Howlett asked the Union if they had any bargaining proposals and the Union said they did not and requested two weeks to prepare them (Tr. 162). The Chairman gave the Union two days, until August 25, to develop their proposals (Tr. 162).

17. On August 25, 1983, the meetings with Chairman Howlett reconvened and the Union gave the Chairman its proposals (Jt. Exh. 5). Mr. Henry again ". . . raised the issue of whether or not he [Chairman Howlett] had jurisdiction, because these proposals had never been presented to management prior to that date; that had those same proposals been put on the negotiating table on June the 28, it was highly unlikely that we would be before the Impasses Panel; that most of those proposals simply could have been submitted on the 28th of June, without regard to the information that the Union was insisting on, that supposedly brought us before that impasses panel." (Tr. 164). Mr. Henry stated that, ". . . the Chairman again reminded me that he was not interested on (sic) fault finding, that there were simply other avenues available for management to pursue or to use, if we wanted to find out who was at fault; that he was more concerned for the Parties trying to reach an agreement on those proposals and, therefore, asked me to go through each proposal, item by item, and state the management position, which I did." (Tr. 164). Thereafter, the session broke up and for the rest of the day Chairman Howlett conducted "shuttle negotiations" with the parties separately (Tr. 164 - 165).

[4] As far as separations, there were approximately 200 (Tr. 148), the balance involved transfers, reassignments, demotions, etc. (Tr. 148).

18. The parties reconvened as a group on the morning of August 26. Chairman Howlett " . . . explained pretty much to the Parties where he was coming out on each of those proposals" (Tr. 165); Respondent agreed to some of the Union's proposals but did not agree to others (Tr. 165). Mr. Henry stated that Chairman Howlett then stated that, as there was not an agreement, ". . . he was going to put on his arbitrator's hat and artitrate and issue an award, which he did." (Tr. 165).

19. Chairman Howlett's "Arbitrator's Opinion and Decision" (Jt. Exh. 6; 83 FSIP 115) was issued by the Executive Director of FSIP on September 2, 1983. It is conceded that Respondent complied with that decision in its entirety (Tr. 165, 153, 84-85).

20. The first, of 14, issues addressed in the decision was:

> "1. Notification of Employees.
> The Union requests that the general and specific reduction-in-force notices be withdrawn and that new ones be issued. It contends that the failure of the Agency to bargain with it prior to sending out the notices requires that such action be taken. . . ." (Jt. Exh. 6, Arbitrator's Opinion and Decision, pp. 2-3).

Chairman Howlett addressed each of the Union's 14 proposals and specifically ordered that as to employees assigned to position outside their commuting areas who have been directed to move to their new position on September 12, 1983, > ". . . the notice period shall be extended to a date no later than November 7, 1983, or an earlier date if requested by the employee." (Jt. Exh. 6, Arbitrator's Opinion and Decision, p. 8).

Conclusions

The Union on July 6, 1983, filed a request with FSIP for assistance and on August 4, 1983, FSIP asserted jurisdiction. On July 18, 1983, Respondent issued notices of transfer of function and on August 4, 1983, Respondent issued specific RIF notices to some 758 employees in the bargaining unit (1565 specific RIF notices were issued in total). Implementation of the reorganization by the issuance of notices of transfer of function[5] and the specific notices of RIF while the dispute was pending before the FSIP, violated the Statute inasmuch as the law requires that parties maintain the status quo while a matter at impasse is pending before the FSIP. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, supra; Warner Robins Air Logistics Center, Robins Air Force Base, Georgia, A/SLMR No. 912, 7 A/SLMR 859 (1977); U.S. Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 5 FLRA No. 39, 5 FLRA 288 (1981); National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Headquarters, Washington, D.C., 12 FLRA No. 94, 12 FLRA 480 (1983). In concluding that Respondent violated § 16(a)(6) of the Statute, and derivatively § 16(a)(1) of the Statute, by issuing notices of transfer of function and the specific notices of RIF while the dispute was pending before the FSIP, and that a remedial order should issue, I have given long and thoughtful consideration to the fact that the FSIP took action on the notices issued by Respondent: inter alia, directed that a letter, to be prepared by the Union, be transmitted to the 758 employees in the bargaining unit, and that the notice period for employees being moved outside the commuting area be extended to November 7, 1983 (from September 12, 1983) unless the employee requests an earlier date; and the further fact that Respondent has fully complied with the decision of the FSIP. Because the FSIP took action with respect to the notices issued by Respondent and Respondent has complied with the decision of the FSIP, a compelling argument can be made that it would not effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute to find as an unfair labor practice that the same notices, as to which the FSIP has already acted, nevertheless violated the Statute. cf., Department of the Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, 13 FLRA No. 95, 13 FLRA 571 (1984). I have, with considerable reluctance, rejected this argument for the reason that, although the FSIP acted with respect to the notices, it was Respondent's implementation of the reorganization, while an impasse was pending before the FSIP, as to which the FSIP asserted jurisdiction, that impelled the FSIP to consider the substantive aspects of the impact and implementation of the reorganization, as to which there had been no negotiations, in light of Respondent's imposed time sequence. That is, but for Respondent's change of the status quo while an impassed matter was pending before the FSIP, the substantive issues of impact and implementation would not have been before the FSIP, the FSIP would perforce have had jurisdiction only as to the issues at impasse,[6] essentially in the nature of ground rules. By issuing the notices when, and as it did, Respondent interferred with the processes of the FSIP and interfered with and restrained the Union in the exercise of its statutory rights. The relief requested, an appropriate notice, will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute by protecting the integrity of the FSIP's processes.

[5] Where the FSIP asserts jurisdiction, here on August 4, 1983, the date of communication of the request to Respondent, here on, or about, July 6, 1983, was the beginning date that the matter was pending before the FSIP. This is consistent with U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, A/SLMR No. 676, 6 A/SLMR 339 (1976) and effectuates the purpose and intent of §§ 19(b)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

[6] The record is clear that on July 6, 1983, when the Union requested the assistance of the FSIP, the parties were in disagreement over per diem, travel expenses, and time for preparation for negotiations and for negotiations. As I stated at the hearing, I will not go behind the FSIP's assertion of jurisdiction where, as here, it clearly appears that the parties have reached a deadlock in negotiations, albeit on essentially "ground rules", without reaching substantive negotiations on impact and implementation (the single exception had been the Union's proposal on arbitration to which Respondent agreed, provided only that the Union agree that that provision govern rather than the procedure under the parties' expired agreement). The Statute gives the FSIP wide discretion to decide, where the parties have negotiated and remain at loggerheads, whether to decline jurisdiction because it determined that voluntary efforts to reach settlement had not been exhausted, National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Washington, D.C., Case No. 80 FSIP 24 (1980); Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., Case No. 80 FSIP 72 (1980); to assert jurisdiction and order negotiations, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Headquarters Office, Washington, D.C., Case No. 83 FSIP 63 (1983); or to resolve the impasse, Department of the Navy, Naval Air Propulsion Center, Trenton, New Jersey, Case No. 83 FSIP 93 (1983). Although orders of the FSIP are not subject to direct review, Council of Prison Locals v. Ronald Brewer, 735 F.2d 1497 (D.C. Cir. 1984), this does not mean that its actions are immune from review. To the contrary, orders of the FSIP are subject to review in unfair labor practice proceedings. By way of example, the FSIP's Regulations define "impasse" as follows:

> "(e) The term "impasse" means that point in the negotiation of conditions of employment at which the parties are unable to reach agreement, notwithstanding their efforts to do so by direct negotiations and by the use of mediation or other voluntary arrangements for settlement." (5 C.F.R. § 2470.2(e))

Quite obviously, the parties never negotiated over any substantive proposal concerning the impact and implementation of the reorganization, except the Union's proposal on arbitration as to which there was no apparent disagreement, and, never having negotiated, certainly had never reached a point at which they were unable to reach agreement. By the definition of "impasse" in its Regulations there was not "impasse" except as to the essentially ground rules disagreement, Social Security Administration, Mid-America Service Center, Kansas City, Missouri, 9 FLRA No. 33, 9 FLRA 229, 241 (1982), and it is highly questionable that Chairman Howlett had jurisdiction to consider any other issue. If he had

In U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, A/SLMR No. 673, 6 A/SLMR 339 (1976), the Assistant Secretary stated, in part, as follows:

> ". . . should one of the parties involved in an impasse . . . request the services of the Panel, I believe that it will effectuate the purposes of the Order to require that the parties must, in the absence of an overriding exigency, maintain the status quo and permit the processes of the Panel to run its course before a unilateral change in conditions of employment can be effectuated." (6 A/SLMR at 341).

jurisdiction over matters as to which there had been no negotiations and no impasse, on some theory of ancillary or pendent jurisdiction, it was only because of Respondent's issuance of the notices of transfer of function and specific notices of RIF. While Chairman Howlett may or may not have had jurisdiction over the substantive issues, as to which there had been no negotiations, he recognized that Respondent's implementation of the reorganization by issuance of the notices of transfer of function and RIF cried for action. That he might have ordered the notices withdrawn and the parties to negotiate, rather than proceeding as he did, is beside the point as no party has challenged the procedure he followed (Respondent's challenge to jurisdiction was without basis as, clearly, the FSIP had jurisdiction as to the matters on which the parties had bargained and were at loggerheads.) To the contrary, the Union submitted proposals, Chairman Howlett conducted "shuttle negotiations", Chairman Howlett resolved the dispute by his Arbitrator's decision, and Respondent fully complied with that decision. Nor, indeed, is the propriety of that decision questioned or in issue.

Suffice it to say, in a proper case jurisdiction of the FSIP is subject to review in an unfair labor practice proceeding and, while the FSIP has wide discretion, it can not with impunity disregard its own Regulations and the Statute.

In Internal Revenue Service, Ogden Service Center, et al., 6 FLRC 310 (1978) the Counsel stated, in part, that in denying review of U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District, supra, 5 FLRC 177 (1977), it,

> ". . . did not pass upon the Assistant Secretary's statement concerning the obligation of the parties involved in an impasse to maintain the status quo (absent an overriding exigency) once the services of the Panel have been requested and to avoid effectuating any unilateral changes in terms and conditions of employment until the Panel's processes have run their course." (6 FLRC at 314, n. 3).

In Ogden Service Center, supra, the Council held, in part, that,

> ". . . once the Panel's processes are invoked . . . the parties must adhere to established personnel policies and practices . . . to the maximum extent possible - - i.e., to the extent consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency." (6 FLRC at 322; see, also, 6 FLRC at 320 and n. 18).

While in substantial agreement with the Assistant Secretary (6 FLRA at 320), the Council adopted, "to the maximum extent possible - - i.e., to the extent consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency" rather than the Assistant Secretary's, "absent an overriding exigency", qualification. The Authority has not, so far as I am aware, specifically addressed this question. There is no doubt that the Council quite deliberately adopted language different than that employed by the Assistant Secretary from which I infer an even more stringent qualification, i.e., as the Council stated, "to the maximum extent possible - - i.e., to the extent consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency", rather than "overriding exigency" as stated by the Assistant Secretary. Although Respondent showed substantial daily cost for salaries, Respondent showed no justification whatever for its failure to give the Union reasonable notice and opportunity to negotiate on impact and implementation prior to issuing the notices of transfer of function and the specific RIF notices to employees. Nor, having issued the notices unilaterally, does cost alone establish either that Respondent could not have maintained the status quo "to the extent consistent with the necessary functioning of the agency" or that cost alone was "an overriding exigency" such as would have justified Respondent not maintaining the status quo while a matter at impasse was pending before the FSIP.

I have considered Respondent's other arguments and find them without merit. The Complaints allege no refusal to bargain in good faith, either by the Union or by Respondent, and whether either the Union, or Respondent, or both, bargained in bad faith is neither material nor relevant to this proceeding. The absence of good faith bargaining is no bar to invocation of the services of the FSIP. § 19(b) of the Statute provides, in part, only that,

> "(b) If voluntary arrangements, including the services of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service . . . fail to resolve a negotiation impasse -
> "(1) either party may request the Federal Service Impasses Panel to consider the matter. . . ." (5 U.S.C. § 7119(b)(1)).

The Regulations of the FSIP, as noted in n. 6 above, define "impasse" as ". . . that point in the negotiations of conditions of employment at which the parties are unable to reach agreement, notwithstanding their efforts to do so by direct negotiations and by the use of mediation. . . ." (5 C.F.R. § 2470.2(e)), and, as noted above, the FSIP has broad discretion as how to resolve any particular negotiating impasse, the only limitation on its jurisdiction being that "the parties are unable to reach agreement . . .by direct negotiations and by the use of mediation. . . ." Moreover, FSIP does not decide questions of good faith bargaining, such jurisdiction being the exclusive province of the Authority pursuant to § 18 of the Statute. Consequently, in this proceeding, which concerns violation of § 16(a)(6) of the Statute by failure to cooperate in impasse procedures, whether any party bargained in bad faith prior to the FSIP's assertion of jurisdiction is immaterial.

Having found that Respondent violated §§ 16(a)(6) and (1) of the Statute by its issuance of notices of transfer of function and notices of RIF while the dispute was pending before the FSIP, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to § 18 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7118, and § 2423.29 of the Regulations, 5 C.F.R. § 2423.29, it is hereby ordered that the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

   a. Failing and refusing to cooperate in impasse procedures by issuing notices of transfer of function and/or specific notices of RIF while a negotiating impasse concerning the impact and implementation of the reorganization is pending before the Federal Service Impasses Panel.

b. In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purpose and policies of the Statute:

a. Post at its facilities wherever bargaining unit employees are located,[7] copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Secretary, Department of Housing and Urban Development, or his designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

b. Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator James M. Harkless filed by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reasons stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions must be dismissed as untimely filed.

The Arbitrator's award is dated June 5, 1986, and appears to have been served on the parties by mail on July 3, 1986.

Under section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended, [1] and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended, [2] which amendments are applicable to exceptions pending or filed with the Authority on or after March 2, 1984, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award in this case had to be filed with the Authority no later than the close of business on August 6, 1986. However the exceptions were not filed until August 7, 1986. Therefore, the exceptions were untimely filed.

Accordingly, as the Union's exceptions were untimely filed, they are hereby dismissed.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Michael D. Rappaport filed by Mr. William D. Cooney, the grievant in the above-entitled case. For the reasons stated below, the exceptions must be dismissed.

Section 2425.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides:

> Either party [emphasis added] to arbitration under the provisions of chapter 71 of title 5 of the United States Code may file an exception to an arbitrator's award rendered pursuant to the arbitration.

Section 2421.11 of the Rules and Regulations provides in pertinent part:

> "Party" means (a) any person[*/] . . . (4) who participated as a party . . . (ii) in a matter where the award of an arbitrator was issued . . . .

---

*/ Section 7103(a)(1) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute provides:

> (a) For the purpose of this chapter [chapter 71 of title 5 of the United States Code]--
> (1) "person" means an individual, labor organization, or agency; . . . .

It is clear that the Union and the Activity participated as "parties" in the subject proceeding. However, it appears that Mr. Cooney's status in the proceeding before the arbitrator was limited to that of grievant and that he did not participate as a "party" in the proceeding. Consequently, since Mr. Cooney was not a party to the proceeding, he is without standing under the Authority's Rules and Regulations to file exceptions to the arbitrator's award under section 2425.1(a) of the Authority's rules of procedure.

Accordingly, and apart from other considerations, the grievant's exceptions are hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

ORDER DISMISSING PETITION FOR REVIEW

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations on a petition for review of negotiability issues filed by the Union. For the reasons indicated below, it has been determined that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and must be dismissed on that basis.

Under section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute and section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the time limit for filing a petition for review of negotiability issues is 15 days after service on the Union of the Agency's allegation that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter proposed to be bargained. Further, under section 2429.23(d) of the Authority's rules of procedure, the time limit established in section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute may not extended or waived by the Authority.

The documents the Union submitted with its petition for review indicate the Agency's allegation that certain Union proposals are nonnegotiable is dated August 14, 1986. The allegation apparently was served on the Union by mail on the same date. Therefore, under section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations as well as sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 which also are applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, the petition for review had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority, not later than the close of business on September 3, 1986. However, the petition was not filed with the Authority at its national office in Washington, D.C., until September 4, 1986.

As indicated by the Union's date stamp on the Agency's allegation of nonnegotiability, the Union received the allegation on August 20, 1986. However, as the period for filing the instant petition for review began on the date the Agency's allegation was served on the Union, that is, deposited in the mail (see section 2429.27(d) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations), and not on the date the allegation was received, the Union's appeal was untimely filed.

Accordingly, as the Union's petition for review was untimely filed, and apart from other considerations, it is hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This consolidated case is before the Authority as a result of our order granting the applications for review of the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Petitions for Clarification of Unit filed by the United States Department of Labor (DOL) and the National Union of Compliance Officers, Independent (NUCO), and NUCO's request for a stay in the above-named cases. In his Decision, the Regional Director dismissed the petitions in Case Nos. 3-CU-40017 and 3-CU-40019 on the basis that the DOL 1984 reorganization which occurred had no effect on the employees involved, but granted the petition in Case No. 3-CU-40018 so as to exclude certain employees from the established unit pursuant to section 7112(b)(4) of the Statute[1] because they are engaged in administering provisions contained in section 7120 of the Statute concerning the standards of conduct for labor organizations. DOL and NUCO contended that their applications for review should be granted on the grounds that the Regional Director either departed from Authority precedent or in the absence of Authority precedent made erroneous factual determinations on substantial issues which prejudicially affected their rights.

The Authority granted these applications for review on the basis that it appeared that a compelling reason existed pursuant to the provisions of section 2422.17(c)(1) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.2/ Supplementary briefs were filed by DOL, NUCO and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 12, AFL-CIO (AFGE). The three Clarification of Unit (CU) petitions under consideration arise out of DOL's 1984 reorganization in which the Labor Management Services Administration (LMSA) was abolished and concern the effects of that reorganization on the bargaining unit of LMSA employees represented by NUCO. The Authority finds, contrary to the Regional Director, that the Office of Pension and Welfare Benefit Programs (OPWBP) employees were severed from and no longer share a community of interest with the other employees in the NUCO unit and should be excluded therefrom. The Authority further finds contrary to the Regional Director that pursuant to section 7135(a)(1) of the Statute, the previous unit represented by NUCO which now includes only Office of Labor-Management Standards (OLMS) employees continues to exist.

[1] Section 7112(b)(4) of the Statute provides:

> § 7112. Determination of appropriate units for labor organization representation
> . . . .
> (b) A unit shall not be determined to be appropriate under this section solely on the basis of the extent to which employees in the proposed unit have organized, nor shall a unit be determined to be appropriate if it includes--
> . . . .
> (4) an employee engaged in administering the provisions of this chapter[.]

II. Background

A. Previous Recognitions

In 1962, AFGE was recognized as the exclusive representative of the DOL employees in the Washington, D.C. Metropolitan area; and in 1965, the National Council of Field Labor Locals, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (NCFLL) was recognized as the exclusive representative of all eligible field employees of the DOL outside the Washington, D.C. Metropolitan area. NUCO came into existence in the early 1970's to represent employees of LMSA who otherwise could not have been represented because

---

2/ Section 2422.17(c)(1) provides:

> § 2422.17. Application for review of a Decision and Order of the Regional Director.
> (c) The Authority may grant an application for review only where it appears that compelling reasons exist therefor. Accordingly, an application for review may be granted only upon one or more of the following grounds:
> (1) That a substantial question of law or policy is raised because of (i) the absence of, or (ii) a departure from, Authority precedent[.]

of the restrictions contained in section 3(d) of Executive Order 11491.[3] NUCO was certified on October 18, 1972 as the exclusive representative of the field employees of LMSA.

B. Reorganization and Change

Prior to the January 1984 DOL reorganization, LMSA administered the OPWBP and Office of Labor Management Standards Enforcement (OLMSE) programs, designated as the PW and LM tracks, respectively, through a field organization of Regional, District and Resident offices. LMSA investigators were assigned to either the PW or LM tracks. On January 20, 1984, the Secretary of Labor issued an Order separating the OPWBP or Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) program from LMSA, making OPWBP an independent activity (under the same name) which reports directly to the Secretary. Thereafter, to complete the reorganization, the Secretary on May 3, 1984, issued an Order which formally abolished LMSA, and established the OLMS with its own Assistant Secretary to replace OLMSE. As a result of the reorganization, the PW field employees were incorporated into the OPWBP field organization and the remaining LM field employees were incorporated into the OLMS field organization. While all employees of OPWBP and OLMS at both the headquarters and the field levels continued to be located in the same place, the record indicates the work processes of the two components were not integrated and that their employees did not interchange. The effects of the reorganization were: to remove OPWBP from LMSA and make it a separate independent activity; to abolish LMSA; and to incorporate the remaining residual LM employees of LMSA into OLMS.

As a result of the reorganization, the pension program and PW investigators were transferred intact to the new independent activity. The primary job function of PW investigators, which was unchanged by the reorganization, is to investigate allegations of fiduciary breaches of title I of ERISA and certain sections of title 18 of the United States Code. Thirty percent of the fiduciaries they investigate are union officials, including some from federal sector unions, thirty percent of their cases involve Taft-Hartley or joint plans, and five to seven percent involve union plans.

[3] Section 3(d) of Executive Order 11491 provided that:

> Employees engaged in administering a labor management relations law or this Order shall not be represented by a labor organization which also represents other groups of employees under the law or this Order, or which is affiliated directly or indirectly with an organization which represents such a group of employees.

Following the reorganization, the LM investigators of the OLMS continue to be responsible, as before, for the investigation of several types of cases arising under the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (LMRDA), including election cases, compliance audit cases and embezzlement cases. They are also responsible for investigation of all standards of conduct cases filed pursuant to section 7120 of the Statute.

III. Regional Director's Determination

The Regional Director in his Decision and Order on Petitions for Clarification of Unit found in Case Nos. 3-CU-40017 and 3-CU-40019 that despite the reorganization which abolished LMSA and split employees within the PW and LM tracks into two separate independent activities, the field and headquarters employees of the OPWBP currently represented by NUCO did not accrete into the units represented by NCFLL and AFGE, but rather continued to be included in the pre-reorganization unit represented by NUCO. He based his findings on the following factors: (1) the record evidence revealed that the reorganization had little or no effect on employees' day-to-day work, their overall working conditions or their immediate supervision; (2) there was no evidence provided by the Activity to demonstrate that these employees' accretion into either the NCFLL or AFGE bargaining units would necessarily promote effective dealings and efficiency of agency operations; and (3) there is a long history of effective collective bargaining between LMSA and NUCO, and DOL has not changed its handling of personnel or labor relations matters for OPWBP investigators.[4]

---

[4] Additionally, the Regional Director found in Case No. 3-CU-40019 that several employees in the Office of the Solicitor, Labor-Management Laws Division, the Elections and Trusteeships and Technical Assistance and Education Branches

In Case No. 3-CU-40018 the Regional Director found that the OLMS investigators currently represented by NUCO should be excluded from that unit pursuant to section 7112(b)(4) of the Statute because the OLMS investigators are engaged in administering section 7120 of the Statute (standards of conduct for labor organizations) which, according to section 7112(b)(4) of the Statute, requires their exclusion from the NUCO unit or any other appropriate unit of employees under the Statute. The Regional Director rejected NUCO's argument that section 7135(a)(1) of the Statute5/ allowed the continuation of the unit of OLMS investigators. He found that section 7135(a)(1) permitted continuation only until the issue was raised, at which point the preexisting unit would be evaluated to ascertain whether continued recognition was consistent with the Statute. As he found that section 7112(b)(4) of the Statute precluded OLMS investigators from being included in a unit because they administer provisions of the Statute, he ordered them excluded from the NUCO unit.

---

of the Technical Assistance and Disclosure Section of OLMS were not engaged in administering the Statute within the meaning of section 7112(b)(4). On this basis, he concluded that they should remain in the unit represented by AFGE and dismissed that part of the petition. No application for review was filed with respect to the Regional Director's finding that these employees should remain in the unit represented by AFGE. The action has become final and is not at issue.

5/ Section 7135(a)(1) of the Statute provides:

> § 7135. Continuation of existing laws, recognitions, agreements, and procedures
> (a) Nothing contained in this chapter shall preclude--
> (1) the renewal or continuation of an exclusive recognition, certification of an exclusive representative, or a lawful agreement between an agency and an exclusive representative of its employees, which is entered into before the effective date of this chapter[.]

IV. Parties' Positions

DOL contends with regard to Case Nos. 3-CU-40017 and 3-CU-40019 that the employees in OPWBP do not administer any provision of law relating to labor-management relations within the meaning of section 7112(c) of the Statute,[6] and therefore should be included in the DOL's bargaining units represented by NCFLL and AFGE. NUCO argues that as no real change was brought about by the reorganization and the employees of OPWBP are precluded from inclusion in units with other employees pursuant to section 7112(c) of the Statute, the employees of OPWBP should continue as a viable unit represented by NUCO. AFGE objects to the consideration of any unit accretion issue raised by the DOL on the basis that, at the time of the hearing, personnel aspects of the reorganization creating the new OPWBP activity had not as yet been implemented.

In Case No. 3-CU-40018, DOL agrees with the Regional Director that the OLMS investigators should be excluded from the NUCO unit pursuant to section 7112(b)(4) of the Statute as they administer provisions of the Statute. NUCO contends that the Regional Director erred in ignoring the express provisions of the "grandfather clause" in section 7135(a)(1) of the Statute. While NUCO concedes that the OLMS investigators administer section 7120 of the Statute, it argues that section 7135(a)(1) was intended to protect representational relationships established before the 6/ Section 7112(c) of the Statute provides:

> § 7112. Determination of appropriate units for labor organization representation

> (c) Any employee who is engaged in administering any provision of law relating to labor-management relations may not be represented by a labor organization-- effective date of the Statute, and that if section 7112(b)(4) is allowed to vitiate established units which predate the Statute, the intent of section 7135(a)(1) to protect such units would not be effectuated. AFGE agrees with NUCO concerning section 7135(a)(1) of the Statute.

V. Analysis

The Regional Director's Decision with respect to the employees of the OPWBP assumes that the DOL reorganization had only a minimal effect on the OPWBP employees and NUCO's bargaining relationship. Based on established precedent and the particular circumstances of the case, the Authority disagrees with this assumption. We find that the employees of OPWBP no longer share a community of interest with the other employees in the existing unit represented by NUCO. We note particularly that the OPWBP employees are now part of a new separate activity; are under separate supervision and authority; and have little or no contact, interchange or transfer with the other employees represented by NUCO. We find that as a result of their removal from LMSA, the OPWBP employees constitute a functionally distinct group of employees who no longer share a community of interest with the employees of the existing NUCO unit. Accordingly, the Authority will order that NUCO's certification be clarified to exclude the OPWBP employees. See United States Department of the Navy, Naval Avionics Center, Indianapolis, Indiana, 11 FLRA 591 (1983); Department of Defense, Department of the Army, Lexington-Blue Grass Depot Activity, Lexington, Kentucky, 8 FLRA 699 (1982); and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Mint, 7 FLRA 136 (1981).

As to DOL's contention in Case Nos. 3-CU-40017 and 3-CU-40019 that the OPWBP field and headquarters employees who had been represented by NUCO in the pre-reorganization LMSA unit accreted into units represented by NCFLL and AFGE, the Authority concludes that the OPWBP investigators administer statutes relating to labor-management relations within the meaning of section 7112(c) of the Statute and therefore cannot be represented by NCFLL or AFGE. The OPWBP investigators investigate allegations of fiduciary breaches of title I of ERISA, and a considerable portion of their work involves review of joint labor-management administered plans established pursuant to the Labor-Management Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 186(c). Approximately thirty percent of OPWBP investigations concern union officials, including some from federal sector unions. For these reasons, we find that the OPWBP investigators administer statutes relating to labor-management relations within the meaning of section 7112(c) of the Statute and thus cannot be included in units represented by NCFLL or AFGE.

In Case No. 4-CU-40018 the Regional Director found that section 7112(b)(4) of the Statute precluded the OLMS investigators from remaining in the established unit. He interpreted section 7135(a)(1) to permit the continuation of an existing unit only until an issue was raised as to its continuance. Based on the legislative history of section 7135(a)(1) and precedent, the Authority disagrees. The legislative history of the Statute indicates the intent of section 7135(a)(1) as follows:

> This subsection reflects the intention that successful on-going labor-management relationships shall not be disputed by enactment of title VII. Since the purpose of this title is principally to encourage the development of successful labor-management programs, it would have been inappropriate for this new legislation, designed to encourage collective bargaining, to operate in such a way as to thwart successful collective bargaining programs already in existence. . . .[7]

To this end, consistent with section 7135(a)(1), we have required an activity to continue to recognize units that were appropriate under Executive Order 11491, as amended, where we found that a reorganization did not substantially change the character and scope of the existing units. Federal Aviation Administration, Aviation Standards National Field Office, 15 FLRA 60 at 64 (1984).

In our view, the exclusion of OPWBP employees as a result of the reorganization did not substantially change the scope and character of the unit historically represented by NUCO, which now consists of all OLMS employees. Thus, with the removal of the OPWBP function and personnel and the subsequent abolishment of LMSA, the remaining former LMSA employees were transferred intact into the OLMS which was established to handle the function previously handled by OLMSE under LMSA. OLMS, with minor changes in the field structure, continues to function as did OLMSE prior to the reorganization of LMSA, and the Assistant Secretary of Labor for OLMS occupies the position vacated by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for LMSA.[8] [7] 124 Cong. Rec. 29,188 (1978).

In sum, we find in Case No. 3-CU-40018, pursuant to section 7135(a)(1), that NUCO continues to represent a viable unit of former LMSA employees certified in 1972 which currently includes only OLMS employees. Accordingly, the DOL must continue to recognize and bargain with NUCO as the exclusive representative of the remaining unit now entitled OLMS.

VI. Conclusion

Based upon the findings above, we will order that the Clarification of Unit (CU) petitions filed by DOL in Case Nos. 3-CU-40017 and 3-CU-40019 seeking to accrete the OPWBP field and headquarters employees who had been represented by NUCO in the pre-reorganization LMSA unit into units represented by NCFLL and AFGE be dismissed. Further, we will order that NUCO's certification be clarified to exclude the OPWBP employees. We will also order that the petition filed by DOL in Case No. 3-CU-40018 be dismissed, as we have found that the remaining unit of OLMS employees represented by NUCO continues to be a viable unit.[9]

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the unit of employees at the United States Department of Labor sought to be clarified, for which the National Union of Compliance Officers,

---

[8] While we recognize that section 7112(b)(4) of the Statute now requires the exclusion of employees who administer "the provisions of this chapter" from any unit determined to be appropriate under the Statute, in this case we are merely determining that a unit previously determined to be appropriate under Executive Order 11491, as amended, has not been rendered inappropriate by virtue of the reorganization and therefore remains viable by operation of section 7135(a)(1) of the Statute. In our view, this conclusion is materially different from a determination that such a unit would be appropriate under the Statute if a petition to represent a new unit of OLMS employees had been filed. The latter question is not before us in this case.

[9] In view of our decision, the Authority finds it unnecessary to pass upon the Motions for Clarification of Stay Order filed by the Regional Director and NUCO.

Independent, was certified as exclusive representative on October 18, 1972, be, and it hereby is, clarified by excluding from said unit the employees in the Office of Pension and Welfare Benefit Programs.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the petitions in Case Nos. 3-CU-40017, and 3-CU-40019 in all other aspects, and the petition in Case No. 3-CU-40018 be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority at this time on a request filed by the Agency seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of August 18, 1986, denying the Agency's exceptions.

In his award, the Arbitrator noted that consistent with the decisions of the Authority, the parties agreed that the requirement that civilian technicians wear the military uniform is a permissive subject of bargaining under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and that on expiration of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, the Agency at that time could require the wearing of the military uniform. In agreement with the Union, however, he determined that the agreement had not expired on the date specified by the Agency and that the Agency had violated the agreement by requiring the wearing of the military uniform beginning on that date. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance and ordered the Agency to comply with the terms of the collective bargaining agreement until the agreement expired.

In its exceptions the Agency contended that the award was contrary to section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute because wearing the military uniform by civilian technicians while performing technician duties was necessary to carry out the mission of the Agency and for purposes of internal security. The Authority rejected the Agency's arguments and specifically held that the Agency had failed to demonstrate that the award prevents the Agency from protecting its property from loss, destruction, or disclosure or interferes with management's right to determine the mission of the Agency. In its request for reconsideration the Agency essentially argues that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to law, ignores or misconstrues Authority precedent and that the Authority erred in failing to establish a specific date for the expiration of the parties' agreement.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations permits a party that can establish "extraordinary circumstances" to move for reconsideration of a decision of the Authority. Here, however, the Agency has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17. Rather, the arguments presented by the Agency in support of its request essentially constitute nothing more than disagreement with the merits of the Authority's decision and an attempt to relitigate the matter.

Accordingly, the Agency's request for reconsideration is denied.*/

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority at this time on a request filed by the Agency seeking reconsideration of the Authority's Order of July 17, 1986, dismissing the Union's exceptions.

The Union's exceptions to the Arbitrator's award, filed with the Authority on April 3, 1985, were dismissed on the basis that they were untimely. The award in this case, which resulted from a mediation-arbitration conducted by a Member of the Federal Service Impasses Panel, was dated January 17, 1985, and was apparently served on the parties by mail the same day. Subsequently, both parties requested clarification of the award and the Arbitrator responded on March 1, 1985, essentially reiterating his earlier award. In dismissing the exceptions as untimely, the Authority noted that while a response to a request for clarification which gives rise to the deficiencies alleged in the exceptions can operate to extend the time limits for filing with the Authority, the Arbitrator did not modify his award. In its motion for reconsideration the Agency argues that the Union's exceptions should be dismissed on a jurisdictional basis rather than on a procedural basis because the award was a final action of the Federal Service Impasses Panel reviewable under section 7117 or section 7118 of the Statute rather than an arbitrator's award reviewable under section 7122 of the Statute.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations permits a party that can establish "extraordinary circumstances" to move for reconsideration of a decision of the Authority. Here, however, the Agency has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17. Rather, the arguments presented by the Agency in support of its request essentially constitute nothing more than disagreement with the Authority's decision and an attempt to relitigate the matter.

Accordingly, the Agency's request for reconsideration is denied.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Joe H. Henderson filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Felix A. Nigro filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.
